THE JOY OF SACRIFICE.

BY A. L. WARING.

Sweet be thy words of sternest truth,
My risen Lord, to me!
Hid in the secret of my heart
Their deepest treasure be—
That I may comprehend the joy
Of sacrifice for thee.

And softly let the light of life
Before thy servant shine,
That through the gloom, with steadfast will,
My soul may follow thine—
Calm in the depth of one desire
And strong in one design.

The willing sacrifice of thine
My meditation make,
Till to the true delight of life
My soul with songs awake—
And all that spoils me of myself
Be treasure for thy sake.

Now through a strait and painful way
My weary feet must press;
But what shall hurt the struggling soul
Which thou hast died to bless,
Or prompt a spirit to complain
That knows its blessedness?

Korea or Cuba Which?

After Bishop Hendrix's return from his second Eastern tour, he gave us, as a final summing up of all his observations and matured deliberations, a closing letter in the Nashville Christian Advocate. The writer does not remember any single document coming from an official in our church which, for signal ability, acute analysis of facts gathered and comprehensive generalization, surpasses this letter of the Bishop. As things seemed at that time, the inauguration of the Korean mission possessed many points of wisdom. We are now more than a year in advance of the facts as they existed—may it not be well to turn on the new light?

For years the Board of Missions felt the necessity for establishing a mission at some point to which missionaries might retreat from the plague prevalent in the whole region which we now occupy in China. Sad facts have demanded a health resort which would not remove our missionaries entirely from a field of useful-ness for which they had prepared themselves with great labor when their health should give way. To accomplish this purpose was one of the reasons inclining Bishop Hendrix to open up a mission in Korea. Of the difficulties, however, in carrying this out, the Board of Missions will remember is that to acquire the dialect learned by our missionaries in China, ever so fluently does not enable them to be understood in Korea. To a certain degree this would be true of the more northern and more healthful regions in China, but to much less degree. A missionary broken in health has much to forbid his undertaking the severe task of mastering the differences between the Kiang-su provincial dialect and the remote Cantonese speech. This, however, the Bishop knew at the time the selection was made; but there are other facts which have since occurred which present difficulties of even a graver aspect.

At the time when the Bishop made his observation there was a possibility that Korea might be allowed to work out her own destiny. This probability has been once met by the almost certainty that Korea will fall under the control of Russia. We have just seen Russia stand by, for reasons of state, and not only allow the butchery of thousands of Armenians, but actually stand in the way of any European power stretching to them a helping hand. It is now plain to every eye that behind the Turkish "massacre" has stood the Russian bear during all these months of terror and of blood. Besides this, Russia refuses toleration to all religions but her own. A mission, therefore, in territory subject to Russian influence will be found in a short time to be sorely handicapped. The Russian papers, says one of our best-informed authorities in this country, "are frankly declaring that Russia has now exclusive control of Constantinople, and one of the semi-official journals of St. Petersburg states the Russian attitude almost brutally when it says: The policy of Russia is not to support the action of the other powers, but to enforce her own will; no matter what massacres of Armenians and other Christians may occur, the isolated action of Russia is a practical reality."

The most powerful argument, however, operating upon the Bishop's mind was the extraordinary providence which had given Yun to our church—a wise, influential and devout Korean occupying a high position in the government—who was inviting and urging us to take this step. May not Yun's sense of gratitude and love for us have prevented him from seeing clearly the best interests of his own people? He evidently did not appreciate the fact that our missionary treasury was burdened with a debt so heavy that it was not possible for us to inaugurate this new mission with any large degree of strength. He could not know that what we most needed at this juncture was some movement in the mission fields which would bring the inspiration of a special enthusiasm to our people. In urging us, therefore, to enter the field, he binds himself to co-operation with a feeble and imperfect agency, when if he was unencumbered by our presence and his sense of obligation to us, the whole force of his co-operation would be thrown with missionary operations far stronger than anything we can hope to project, and which would enable him to exert an influence ten or twenty times greater than he could do by any connection with us.

"In Korea the Protestant missionaries number eighty-two. Of these thirty-five are Presbyterians (thirty-one from the United States and four from Australia); twenty-six are Methodists from the United States (twenty four of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and two of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South); twelve are of the Church of England from England; five are Baptists from the United States; four are independent."—Central Methodist.

Are not the probabilities very strong, therefore, that unless we could enter the field with a large force, that a very powerful reason why we should not enter is that we thereby diminish Yun's power for good among his own people?

Allow a word in reference to the kindling of missionary enthusiasm in the church. Is it not wise to learn a lesson from the experience of the past? China was our first mission field. For more than twenty years we had sought to carry forward the China Mission with almost no interest upon the part of the church. The most eloquent speakers in vain struggled to kindle fires of foreign missionary liberality. When Mexico was opened the tide began to turn, and as the missions to Brazil and Japan have been added, it has swollen to such a height that all other benevolences of the church find themselves floated forward upon its triumphant current. For a few years there has been almost an ebb in this tide, not that the interest in foreign missions is less, but the great political movements of our times have more and more pointed to Asia and Africa as the fields of European dominion, and, as a result, the pre-eminent, if not exclusive, duty of European Christians to effect their occupation as mission fields.

The recent action of Mr. Cleveland, heartily endorsed by the great American people, asserting the policy of the United States to be the cultivation of friendly relations with all the peoples of the American continent, and to extend to them a strong protecting hand as against all European encroachments, has gone a long way toward convincing our people that America is the true field for our missionary operations. Within a few days Mr. Cleveland's message to Congress has clearly pointed (1) out the fact that we are bound to refuse to any European power the acquisition of Cuba; (2) that the day is near at hand when Spain must shew her ability to govern, else allow autonomy to the Cubans. With equal plainness he points out (3) the fact that if Spain continues to hold Cuba, she must first right the wrongs she has done her. Let any one of these three alternatives, therefore, occur, and Cuba is open at once to active missionary operations upon our part. More than this: the attitude in which we are thus placed so wins Cuban gratitude that the hearts of her whole people will be wide open to receive our missionaries, while with a single bound her peoples would throw off the embraces of Roman Catholicism, which has been so long linked with Spanish misrule. With her geographical nearness, every success of ours in that field would arouse a responsive thrill throughout the limits of the whole church. The tale of Cuban suffering and of Cuban heroism right at our very door has caught the American ear and heart, and, rightly wielded, can be so used as to arouse missionary giving as no call heretofore has ever done.

Is it not true that to attempt both these missions in the present debt-bearing period will discourage our best business men who watch with interest the management of our church finances? Is it not true that to enter Cuba feebly defeats the rise of the missionary enthusiasm so earnestly desiderated? Is it not true that to enter feebly gives Cuba over to others, geographically no nearer than are we, who have already a good beginning? Is it not true that Korea is already occupied by Mission Boards much more able to carry forward the work with vigor than are we? There is much more to be said, but it is feared that you can not give the space.

Finally, the Koreans have shown no power or disposition to help themselves. Compared with the Chinese, they are far more ignorant and indolent, and with a deeper dislike for innovations. The Cubans have, within the last twenty years, proven that they are worthy of the liberty for which they are struggling—a people made ready by the hand of Providence for our help. Their eyes are turned to America; shall they look in vain?

If we look to past history, we may well conclude that the same amount of effort that would result in the conversion of a hundred Koreans would bring to Christ a thousand Cubans. Looking to the same source, do we err when we believe that one Cuban so saved will do more to propagate the gospel than ten Koreans?

"Some Things" Some One Else "Don't Like."

Given two churches in the same town, having preachers of equal ability. Yes, we will even suppose that Bro. A is generally considered a better preacher than Bro. B; but in Bro. A's church we find matters thusly: Bro. A himself, or some other brother, leads the singing. He doesn't know one note from another, and considers that of no consequence. Well, he gets the tune up, and a few of the brethren, and the Aunt Betsies (who are in their element), and a few others scattered over the congregation, join in somewhere or anywhere between the first word and the end of the first line. All goes fairly well until they come to a high place in the tune. Just before getting to that place the brother who "histed" the tune generally discovers that he histed it a few tones too much, and that he will have to make an extra effort to reach that note. The other brethren feel just like he does about it; so they all clear their throats, take a long breath, decide that somebody is going to split his whistle if this thing goes much further, and with one accord conclude to let the sisters have it. After a compulsory solo, duet or trio by one, two or three female voices, the brethren join in again, and all goes well to the end of the verse. Occasionally the brother leading will pitch his tune a little lower before beginning the second verse; but generally the above-mentioned performance is repeated two, three or four times, according to the number of verses in the hymn. Everyone taking part in this song does so from a sense of duty; is heartily glad when the song is ended, and as heartily sorry when another is begun. Or suppose Bro. A has an indifferent choir—one consisting of people who feel no special interest in the matter, and who do not realize that membership in a choir imposes certain obligations; people who attend the rehearsals if they feel like doing so, and who are sometimes in their places at regular services, but are more often somewhere else. In either case the music at this brother's church will not be of a character calculated to help fill the pews. But Bro. B, who is not so good a preacher as Bro. A, has a thorough going choir, well organized, and under the management of a competent leader. Every member of the organization is deeply interested in its success. The young lady members are so much concerned in the choir work that the young gentlemen who escort them to church Sunday evening must sit with them in the choir, or sit by themselves in the congregation, or —. The young men who belong to the choir manifest a like interest. They will deny themselves the pleasure of going to church with their "best girls" on Sunday night, if this be necessary, in order that they may be in their places in the choir. In other words, each and everyone realizes that upon him or her rests a certain amount of responsibility, and that to shirk that responsibility is to shirk a Christian duty; consequently, Friday evening and Sunday afternoon there is a full attendance at choir practice. They are well supplied with the latest and best collections of sacred music, including The Hymn and Tune Book and a good Anthem Book. Sunday morning and Sunday evening everyone is in his or her place at least five minutes before time for services to begin; everything is done quietly and in order; the selections are well rendered, and after the benediction the choir will hear their efforts loudly applauded on all sides, and scores of appreciative people will go home talking about the splendid music.

Now, if you wished to make sure of having a bench all to yourself, would you go to Bro. A's church or to Bro. B's? Not long since a gentleman was heard to remark down on the street one Sunday morning: "I used to love to go to the blank church, because I heard some pretty new songs every time I went; but now they sing the same old songs over and over every Sunday, and I don't care to go any more."

Some one is going to say there are no such extreme cases at the present time as described in connection with Bro. A's congregation. Maybe not; but if some of us had our way, there wouldn't be any other sort.

It is a fact that the majority of the church-going people of the present time do not care to take part in the singing. They prefer listening to good songs, well sung by a good choir, to having the music conducted on the old plan and joining in themselves. But the few who do wish to take part in the singing are always at liberty to do so; and if they do not, they have no one to blame but themselves, and no room to kick. "But," says "Aunt Betsy," "how are we to take part in the singing when the choir leads off on some song we never heard before?" You can't well do that as a matter of course; but whose fault is it you never heard it before? Certainly you are not going to blame the choir for that? Very likely they never heard it, either, before last Friday night, and they wouldn't have heard it then if they hadn't gone to choir practice, and you knew the choir was going to practice at that time; and if you love to join in the song service as well as your article would lead us to believe, why didn't you supply yourself with a copy of the book used by the choir, and go to choir practice and learn the songs? And just here it occurs to me that this is the most satisfactory solution of the music question. Let those members of the congregation who enjoy singing, and who wish to take part in the song service, attend every choir rehearsal and learn the songs as the choir learns them, and thus be prepared to sing intelligently, and with pleasure and profit to themselves and all who may be within range of their voices. I can think of no possible objection that could be urged against a co-operative plan of this kind. But some people seem possessed of the idea that making war on the choir is a legitimate and laudable occupation. They seem to feel that the choir is an intruder in the house of God; an arrangement gotten up just to keep people out in the congregation from singing, and to enable a few of the young folks to sit where they can see and be seen, and have a good time generally. (Indeed, you occasionally find a member of the choir who, if their actions are a true index to their opinions, think the choir platform a place for the display of new hats, cloaks, dresses, and other articles of wearing apparel. And they are a nuisance wherever you find them. They invariably come late, and attract as much attention as possible.) You can find this class of people represented in almost every congregation; but fortunately no one congregation with which I am familiar has enough of them to exercise a controlling influence. This attitude toward the choir was conceived in prejudice, in prejudice was it brought forth, and prejudice is the sine qua non of its existence. And in making use of the word "prejudice" in this connection, I have taken special care to assure myself that it is the word needed. I find it defined as "a previous inclination of mind, formed without regard to evidence," and it couldn't better describe the case in hand if it had been made to order. If anyone doubts the correctness of this statement, let him know that the Bible is my authority. And that he may thoroughly satisfy his mind on the subject, I refer him to I. Sam. vi, 5; I. Chron. xv, 28; Ps. xxxiii, 2, 3; lxxxi, 1–4; li. And while we could find other Scripture authorizing the existence of choirs, this is enough to convince anyone susceptible to conviction.

Not to be in sympathy with your choir and their labors is to lay yourself liable to the charge of ingratitude, to say the least of it. Most choirs, and all well-conducted ones put themselves to no little trouble in their efforts to make that part of the service with which they have to do a success; and then to have some one accuse them of being an obstacle in the way of the salvation of sinners, and the means of driving the Holy Spirit away from the sanctuary, is both uncharitable and unfair, to say nothing of unreasonable, and not calculated to encourage them in the labor in which they are engaged. And parties who would prefer such charges need to be reminded that the Holy Spirit may possibly be in the congregation, and yet not reveal his presence to them.

Help to Self-Help.

Sociology has developed a new and very important—indeed, a revolutionary—principle in the administration of charity. It is the principle of self-help—the encouragement of the poor, the unfortunate, the despondent, to renewed and successful endeavor for themselves. The trade schools, the societies for improving the condition of the poor, the sick-pension and old age pension brotherhoods, the Salvation Army, the Church Army, and even the wayfarers' lodging-houses, are all founded upon this vital and wholesome principle. Effective appeal is made to that ingrained respect which survives in all but the most degraded human souls. The needy man or woman, who shrinks from the acceptance of outright and unrequited charity, will gladly and gratefully avail himself of the opportunity to do for himself that from which he has been hitherto, apparently, shut out. The average destitute person is not the shiftless and lazy-shirk which a too censorious public opinion often accuses him of being. He is what he is simply because he does not have a fair living and fighting chance. This has been proved again and again by those benevolent agencies whose object is to give the destitute classes a reasonable chance to obtain the necessaries, the comforts, and the refinements of life. Make life a little less desperately uphill for the average poor man, and he is no longer, even potentially, a pauper. Give him some of the grease of human sympathy and human help to put on the axles of his set wheels, and his cart no longer blocks the road.

It is well that the managers and dispensers of church charities are coming more and more to recognize and apply this principle of encouraging self-help. For too long a time the disposition of church charity funds has simply served to encourage beggary and indolence. Nearly every church has had its altogether helpless wards, who have been a dead-weight upon its benevolence. In many cases these wards have been men and women, apparently able in body, who might have worked to some purpose in the world, but who have been perpetually discouraged from work by the stated charities of the church to which they have been so fortunate, or unfortunate, as to belong. It seems hardly too much to say that some churches have actually created beggars and paupers in the community where they have been established, by the indiscriminate and injudicious use of their charity funds.

But this deplorable, and almost ridiculous, state of affairs, as we have said, is coming to be a thing of the past. The great economic principle that true help comes, not from appropriated resources, but from increased resource, is being universally recognized and applied by all benevolent associations, including those of the church. To help the hard pushed man to help himself, to put him in the way of employment, of restoration of working energy, of renewal of cheer and hope and confidence—this is at once the truly Christian, scientific, and humanitarian method of benevolence; and we would gladly see every church of our denomination in America up to date in this respect.—Zion's Herald.

How many earthly desires and worldly feelings are shaken from the soul by the tempest of a great sorrow, even as the faded leaves of Autumn. But when all the leaves are stripped from the tree, and it stands bare and desolate under the lashings of Winter winds, there still remain carefully sealed up on every branch and twig buds of celestial hope, which are to unfold in leaf and flower in the Summer of God's kingdom.—H. B. Stowe.

CROSSES.

There are so many Lord, I cry;
To lift them all I try in vain
'Tis not my strength enough for three"
The Savior says: "Look unto me."

On my weak shoulders hard they rest,
To lift them all I more distress;
Pain would I turn still and flee;
Then comes thy mandate, "Follow me."

So many hearts no burdens share,
So many have no cross to bear.
A voice replies: What's that to thee?
Take up thy cross and follow me."

Trembling I try to do thy will;
But oh the flesh is so weak still!
"Have I not suffered all for thee?"
The answer comes, "Then follow me."

Another cross—alas! alas!
Dear Lord, oh, let but this one pass!
Then come the words, "Lo, I am here;
Take up this cross and do not fear."

Some welcome day will come, the last,
Then I can say life's woes are past;
Some day to rest I'll lay me down,
Resign the cross to take the crown.

An Autobiography.

I wish to say to Bro. "Rex" that he has my sympathy. I will give him the advice a young gentleman once gave me when I had failed in some great (?) undertaking, namely: "Remember the golden rule, If at first you don't succeed, try, try again." This rule, if not golden, is at least gilt edged, and you will succeed after awhile. I've been in the waste-basket myself, and know how it feels. Indeed, it is "with fear and trembling" that I now venture to invade the "editor's sanctum." Our presiding elder, for whom we have great love and respect, says, "You ought to write." If we can write an article that he would enjoy reading, we shall be willing to go to the "basket" several times in the attempt; so now, Mr. Editor, bear with us while we "try again," and if we must help to watch your "big feet," so be it. We will not hold you responsible if you are unable to find merit in our literary effusions. It is your fault, not ours, for we are confident it is there.

Our lamented editor, Bishop Parker, gave me my first introduction to the "waste-basket." "My story runneth thus": Mother, a literary woman herself, gave me the name of a literary relative, and I very naturally got the idea early in life that I was one of the "poets" who "are born;" therefore, would not have to be "made." One day mother, having written an article for the ADVOCATE, went out to spend the day. She enclosed a letter and the article, and left it for me to hand a gentleman who was going to the postoffice. It happened that in her haste she forgot to seal it. Having always a fondness for surprising people, I thought, "I'll write a poem and send it along as a surprise." I could not find a piece of paper, so I tore the blank leaves left for the family record out of a small Bible, and sent the poem. I never knew, of course, what the Bishop thought, for he never told me; but he must have thought mother was "a little off," or had put it in by mistake. After I was too old to be whipped, I surprised her with the history of that poem. Nothing daunted, I thought I'd try a new editor, who, perhaps, would show better judgment; so I wrote a poem entitled "Farewell." I watched the columns of his paper weekly for quite awhile, but no poem of mine was there. At last a paragraph appeared like this, "We received a poem not long since entitled 'Farewell.' It is a good thing. The gifted authoress bade it farewell before it left her, for she will never see it again." The wrath and indignation I felt can better be imagined than described, but I have forgiven him if I have not been able to forget. He taught me to believe that writing poetry is not my mission in life, which has been worth something to me all these years, and saved me many a disappointment as well as some paper and ink; and I do not believe the reading public has suffered for lack of poetry, either. After all this, mother still says, "You ought to write," and the Bible says, "Children, obey your parents." So what am I to do but write? Solomon says, "The rod and reproof give wisdom." These things all "work together for our good." Some very good things have gone "out of style," the "rod" being among the number. Few parents "these days" realize the amount of wisdom to be gained therefrom, and bring their children up by a new receipe. A mother not long since remarked: "My daughter (a mere child) is going to marry. I do not want her to do it, but she will." "Of course, she will. It would be surprising indeed if she did not," thought I. "She has been allowed to have her way from infancy, and do you suppose she is going to let you have a say in this, the most important event of her life?" I really believe that if one of my children was going to do something against my wishes, I'd try to keep people from finding out that I was opposed to it, thereby showing what an unwise parent I had been. While I had good, sensible parents, they did not have in me a good child; and if any of you who may read these lines have a harder task imposed upon you than had my mother and father when I was given to them, you, like Bro. "Rex," have my sincere sympathy. While I never remember to have been indeed to obey my parents through fear of the rod, they sometimes used it regardless of style.

I well remember an incident which occurred when I was in my fourth year. Mother took the older children to a Christmas tree, and left me with father, who believed strongly in "early to bed and early to rise." I wanted to sit up till mother and the children should return. Father said, "Go to bed." I said, "No, sir." He resorted to the rod, but soon found it was not having the desired effect. He then shut me out in the dark (which method I do not yet approve). Failure in this, he did not give it up, like many do, as a bad job, but undressed me, put me in the bed, and held me there until I went to sleep. Do you say I was not conquered? Perhaps not, but I at least learned that he was the stronger of the two, and must be obeyed. True, they did not make a "model" of me, but I might, and no doubt would, have been worse if they had not used the rod.

Oh, that parents would in some way enforce obedience! They seem to forget that, "Children, obey your parents," is the first command with promise. I believe it is about as impossible for a child who is continually allowed to disobey to make a good man or woman as it is for a "camel to go through the eye of a needle." It is doomed to go through life unloved and unwelcomed by any save those who are to blame for its misfortune—its own mother and father. "The half has not been told;" and if this does not find its way to the waste basket, I may write again.

By the way, Mr. Editor, if I were in your place, I'd invent some other receptacle for the more respectable articles. Perhaps some editor of a second-class newspaper would buy you out at reduced rates. "Woman's curiosity" would prompt me to make such a purchase if I might thereby obtain that unfortunate article referred to; but who would wish to purchase a horrid waste-basket? I thought one of my recent articles had gone there, and to show mother that I was trying to obey her, I sent her a copy of it. She wrote in haste: "Recall that article, by all means. It will do more harm than good." It appeared, however, in the very next issue, and, I suppose, was like "Mr. Finney's turnip"—did neither good nor harm. In mother's next letter she said, "Your article looked better in print." So it may have been only the penmanship that she objected to, after all.

Statistics of the Louisiana Conference.

Thinking that some statistics of the Louisiana Conference will be of interest to the readers of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, I hand you the following, fresh from the reports of the preachers to the last Conference:

We report for the year just closed 56 Epworth Leagues, with 1,661 members. (This includes several junior Leagues) This shows a gratifying increase of 24 Leagues and 617 members, and an increase in reported expenditures by Leagues from $367.35 to $1,117.08. The New Orleans district reported one League less this year than last. The Baton Rouge district has gained 6; Opelousas, 9; Alexandria, 2; Shreveport, 4; Arcadia, 4; Delhi remains the same as last year.

There are reported 291 Sunday-schools this year, 1,701 officers and teachers, and 13,412 scholars. This shows a gain of 17 schools, and 38 officers and teachers, but a decrease of 112 Sunday-school scholars. There has been raised for Sunday-school expenses, $3,806.01; for missions, $584 46, against $752.11 last year. The Children's Day collection amounted to $270.56, against $346.21 last year. There was raised for other objects $721.53, making a grand total of $5,389.56 raised by Sunday-schools—an increase of $251.06 over last year. This shows a per-capita contribution of about 35 cents for the whole Conference, while the per-capita contribution of the schools of the New Orleans district amounted to a little more than 71 cents, and of the Alexandria district to a little less than 17 cents. The largest per-capita contribution of an individual school was $1.40, and was raised by Patterson, while the smallest reported was by Plaquemine Brulee, and was a little more than 4 cents.

Our Conference roll shows 134 itinerant preachers for 1897. Of this number, 13 are superannuates (including P. H. Dieffenwierth, news of whose death has just been received), 2 are supernumerary, leaving 119 effective men, against 125 last year. We have added this year 1 by transfer and 4 by admission on trial, and we have lost 5 by transfer, 2 by location. One has been discontinued, 1 has withdrawn, and 1 has been placed on the superannuated list, and 1 made supernumerary. There were reported 75 local preachers (a decrease of 6), 29,199 white members (a gain of 1,187), and 5 colored members (a decrease of 10). There were 2,790 additions on profession of faith, and 1,143 additions by certificate and otherwise, and 1,512 removals by death, certificate, and otherwise. One charge reported 300 additions on profession of faith, and another 147. There were 1,144 infants and 1,116 adults baptized. There are reported in the 113 pastoral charges of the Conference 387 church organizations, owning 308 church buildings valued at $520,100, and 88 parsonages valued at $84,882; also 4 district parsonages valued at $7,100. This shows an increase of 9 churches and 11 parsonages for the year. We have spent the past year $31,162.83 in building and repairing churches and parsonages. We also own other property valued at $144,406. This includes Centenary and Mansfield Colleges. Our seven presiding elders were paid $7,501.28, and the pastors $52,143.19; Bishops, $826.46. We collected on assessment for Conference claimants, $2,919.65; foreign missions, $4,120.73; domestic missions, $1,731.17; church extension, $1,076.63; education, $639.31; expenses of delegates to the General Conference, $267.10; printing of Conference Minutes, $187.78. The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was reported to have raised $860.75, and the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society $1,135.18; and $319.35 was collected for the American Bible Society. There were special missionary collections amounting to $489, which, added to those reported above, brings the total for foreign missions up to $5,103.19, and for domestic missions, $1,822.17. The grand total of moneys collected from all sources in the Conference during the year is $122,666.90, or a little over $4 per capita. Lake Providence, Floyd and Patterson overpaid their pastors, and either paid in full or overpaid all assessments made upon them; and three other charges overpaid their preachers, but failed to pay the collections ordered by the Conference in full. Carondelot Street, Algiers, Baton Rouge station, Wilson and Shreveport paid all their assessments in full, and ten other places paid their pastors in full, but failed to raise the whole of the Conference assessments. There was one charge in the Conference that failed to pay the preacher and presiding elder, but overpaid its assessments on the Conference collections.

Business Suggestions.

All places having regular appointments for preaching should adopt some system for ministerial collections. Without some plan arranged in good time, the pastor's salary is liable to show up "short." Simply passing the basket (or hat) is not sufficient.

Let a list be circulated, asking members and others who will probably contribute—to indicate, if need be, the amount desired and expected. The stewards are presumed to know amount to be secured, and can closely approximate what each should sign for, payable at the regular services, or monthly or quarterly, as most convenient. An account should be kept with the "basket" and with all signed contributors.

This plan has worked well with us. Very nearly all in a community will pay something to minister's support. It is not right to let only a few provide for the many.

To the Ministers of the Louisiana Conference.

The following was read before the Louisiana Conference at its recent session, and published by request of the Conference:

BRETHREN: I do not presume to be able to enlighten you on the subject of missions. It is possible, however, that I have informed myself better than some of you on woman's department of this work; and having had my sympathies deeply aroused for the suffering women of heathendom, it is natural that I am intensely interested in enlisting the best efforts of my sisters at home in this good work, especially as even their own welfare is promoted by cultivating the missionary spirit. I shall not tax you with an array of statistics on woman's work, which might show how much has been accomplished by a few; nor shall I recount the woes of heathen women as an incentive to zeal. Our hearts are burdened with a conception of the gross idolatry of our heathen sisters; but do we realize the thraldom of the refined idolatry of our dear women at home? Do we groan for the condition of these who have set self for the center around which all their hopes and affections circulate?

To day my heart is burdened with sorrow for the lukewarm workers at home—the large percentage of church women who are content to save their own souls, if possible, without a thought or care for those others whose salvation is jeopardized by delay. It is for these—our own flesh and blood, who say they are rich and do not know their poverty—that I bespeak your help. I would not insult an enlightened body of Christian ministers by an effort to prove woman's influence for either good or evil. Every man's estimate of woman is in exact proportion to his own grade in Christian civilization. It were utterly useless to descant on the tints of a glowing sunset to the blind. It is likewise unnecessary to remind a man who reflects God's image that his Creator said—wisely, of course—"It is not good for man to be alone; I will make a helpmeet for him." A good man, be he never so good, is still better for the help of a good woman; and it is to the possibilities of a good woman's influence, acting on others and reacting on herself, that I call your attention. Doubtless every minister has known at least one woman in his congregation whose far-reaching usefulness has been to him a tower of strength. In the "saints' column" of our church papers the highest posthumous praise of a departed mother in Israel is found in the simple words, "She ever responded to duty, 'Here am I;' and her house was the home of God's ministers." Mary's faith and Martha's service combined would smooth most of the rough places in the minister's pathway. This perfect consecration can never be attained until we realize the value of a soul—yea, the priceless worth of every soul for whom the Savior shed his precious blood. The conversion of the world is the ultimate object of the gospel, and a wise Law-giver has ordained that the very effort to save others shall react in double power on those who send forth the projectile force. If we realize this immutable law, and acknowledge the power for good in woman, we can not expect great results for others, nor a high standard of grace in themselves, for the army of church women who feel no obligation outside their own salvation.

As a great means toward arousing womanhood from this fatal slumber, the church has authorized the establishment of woman societies. According to the Discipline, these societies for home and foreign missions are meant to include every woman in the church, and thus far no other devised plan has effected so much individual responsibility and growth in grace for the few who have become interested. And because of the very few—scarcely one-tenth of the women whose names are on the church roll—it becomes the manifest duty of the ministers to urge the women to join these societies. The material result of this small, systematic seed-sowing will bring a full harvest to the church, not only in gifts for the treasury, but a grand Te Deum of praise from overflowing hearts. If the women are of any use in the evangelization of the world, and if their own safety is worth considering, then from your vantage-ground we beg you to urge them all to lives of far-reaching usefulness and missionary activity.

Remember, brethren, that Peter and John were in Joseph's garden on that memorable Easter morn. They gazed into the empty sepulcher and departed to their homes without a sight of their Lord; while over against the tomb, he chose to reveal his risen Presence to a woman and gave her the first message of life to even his disciples. The Savior honored her instrumentality in carrying the glad tidings to the world; and shall any mere man gainsay her worth in this great message of redemption! If, therefore, God has appointed her a factor in the cause, it is a solemn thought that the majority of our women are expending the wealth of their souls in selfish pursuits—"wasting, throwing away the tenderest, sweetest, holiest power of woman life." Who but the representatives of the divine Master should warn them in no uncertain voice of their high and holy duty; not only warn them, but urge them to every means of grace and usefulness.

We need you at this point sorely. We confess our weakness, and we want your strong guidance, eloquence and inspiration to uplift us from the slothful ease which is destroying the vitality of our immortal souls.

Home Missions: There is magic in the word "home." You will find no difficulty in awakening our hearts to a response at this call. Already the good work has enlisted the energies of many of our best women. The church has need to honor the grand spirit of our president, Mrs. Wiley, whose eloquence has sounded in clarion tones from gulf to ocean in behalf of the dear wives and children of our household of faith. Her consecrated spirit is of more worth than a coronet, and I can not forbear mention of Miss Lucinda Helm, Mrs. Hargrove, and in Louisiana our Mrs. King, Miss Werlein, and a host of others.

I once heard the lamented Bishop Haygood, on a Conference occasion in Monroe, when he eulogized the wife of an itinerant minister: he pictured the cares, trials, crosses, privations of this faithful helpmeet, until I felt that her genuine martyrdom might well be shunned by every lover of ease; but when he held over her head the glittering crown, resplendent in the light of a loving Father's smile, I wondered that all the flower of young maidenhood did not covet her post of honor. These precious wives of God's ministers are hallowed in every true woman's heart, and their needs should be generously met even before they are felt. As we hope to hear the joyful welcome, "Enter in," we must be faithful "home and parsonage" workers; but, ah! if we want a crown, we must also yearn toward those other needy women who know nothing of the sanctity of wifehood and have never heard the word "home."

The Savior provided for his own when he told the beloved disciple, "Behold thy mother!" and then when he stood on the mount betwixt earth and heaven his far-off gaze pierced unto the "uttermost," and he opened his mouth and said (not one word of anything which pertained to home or self), "Go to the ends of the earth!"

If you go, and go you must at least in spirit, then the women who help you at home must keep peace with you. Your work, the highest ever entrusted to man, is to bring all the kingdoms of the world into the kingdom of the King of kings; to hasten this glad time you must labor to impress both halves of your congregations with the selfless missionary spirit.

We know that the great Head of the church could convert the nations in a day by the Word of his power; and we believe that cohorts of angels are ready to carry the glad tidings to the end of the earth; but he has chosen to save the race not by the Word of his power, but by the power of his Word, and has made not angels, but man the messenger of life. This thought was impressively presented to the W. F. M. S. at the last meeting by the State corresponding secretary—the four living creatures of Ezekiel's vision—the fire-clad seraphim, symbolical of God's omnipotence, omnipresence and omniscience, riding to and fro on the wings of the whirlwind at his behest, had under their lightning-eyed wings the hands of a man. "What an overwhelming thought! that these hands—yours and mine—must lift the wings which are to bear afar the story of the Cross."

It is this stupendous realization that emboldens me to stand before you and plead for your utmost endeavor to uplift the languid, idle hands of the women of the church, for they, too, have part in the wonderful majesty and glory of this great obligation to uphold the messenger of God's Holy Spirit. The Parsonage and Home Mission Society and W. F. M. S. are twin sisters, which, under your fostering care and blessing, will help immeasurably to bring the world to Christ.

"O, Chariot of Mercy! roll gloriously on,
And fly over mountain and sea,
Till the last gloomy shadow of darkness is gone,
And the last fettered Pagan is free."

MRS. T. P. FULLILOVE,
Pres. La. W. F. M. S.

Responsibility for Our Best Gifts.

Best gifts are most likely to be abused, or at least over-used. The severely logical mind, or mind best capable of the clearest and most accurate processes of reason, is the mind most likely to place undue dependence upon the importance of logic; the artist whose greatest strength is in seeing breadth of effect is in danger of unduly depreciating the beauty of form and texture in the more minute components of natural scene; the sensitive organization, the emotional, sympathetic nature, is in danger of being over-influenced by these resources—great, rich, and important as they are. In material as well as in spiritual and mental realms the refined, the elegant, the delicate, are the most easily abraded and defaced, the most susceptible to hurt and harm. These best gifts we must cherish most earnestly. But this means neither to box them up and put them out of sight, nor to abuse them by overestimating them or underestimating others. For each human power there is a human need. Rightly directed and controlled, each will make its possessor a man of might.—Selected.

Worry is out of place when we have decided what is our duty as the next step. Yet most of our worry is over the possible consequences of steps we may have to take after the next one. We see that it would not be right for us to turn back from our present position, and we shrink from going forward in view of probabilities in that direction; yet we can not stand still. What shall we do? If we must not turn back, and we can not stand still, we have a clear duty to move forward a single step, leaving the consequences with God. That which we fear as an issue of progress in the forward direction, may never have to be met. If it is met God will help us to meet it. The duty of taking one step being clear, all the rest is out of our sphere for now.—S. S. Times.

A man crossed the Mississippi on the ice; and, fearing it was too thin, began to crawl over on his hands and knees in great terror; but before he gained the opposite shore, all went out, another man drove past him gaily, sitting upon a sled loaded with pig iron. And that is just the way most Christians go up to the heavenly Canaan, trembling at every step lest the promises should break under our feet, when really they are secure enough for us to hold up our heads and sing with confidence as we march to the better land.—Advocate and Guardian.

A careful searching of the Scriptures is one of the most effectual prayers we can make for God to reveal himself to us.

What is a man profited if he should keep the whole world straight, and go wrong himself?

Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of cores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,

Reminiscences.

The ADVOCATE, of Dec. 24, 1896, brought these recollections up of far-bygone days sad-yet there was some pleasure the sadness.

Rev. Philip H. Dieffenwierth, D. H. J. Harris and Mrs. R. Barrington!

In my memory of Bro. Dieffenth I go back to the days of boyhood, when in my tenth I joined the church. His nts resided in the city of n Rouge, and there the worthy her grew up to manhood, re my oldest brother in his ol-boy days had some knowl- of him. I first knew him 1839. He was then junior cher on Sandy Creek circuit, raced in three parishes—per-, touched the fourth parish. ro. Talley was in charge. I not remember, I do not now llect that I then knew he had traveled a circuit before. conviction is that that was first circuit. There was a kness and cordiality in his ciation with the young peo—I might say, especially with ng boys—which made them as if he was one of them, gh they never failed to rct him as a man and love and rence him as a preacher. I k in all the years since he d not have much excelled self in his successful work ng the young people. Many especially were religious in r life during that year. It med that I ought to join the rch because he wanted me that I ought to be religious bese he was anxious that I ld be. I well remember go- to church on his day to ch, fully determined to join church; but as he was the or preacher, he waived ough courtesy the opening of door to his senior brother, ley. Three weeks after that I joined, giving my hand to . Talley. I do not suppose . "Philip," as he was then ed, will ever know the good did and set in motion that r until in that great day when books are opened.

I met him once afterwards. I then not grown. He evitly did not recognize me, ugh he heard my name called. e embarrassment incident to hoyhood prevented me, unthe circumstances, making self known to him I may just here that Sandy Creek uit was partly in East Baton uge parish. The city of ton Rouge was supplied that r by these country preachers ough the experiences of that r, now more than half a cenago, are yet strong on my d, seeing the death of P. H. ffenwierth announced brings memories of that period back ong and vivid.

I suppose I had passed from the mind of Sister H. J. Harris; hut the kind hospitality I received at her hands at her own house, after some days of wearisome travel, lives strong in my memory. Her motherly interest in the boyish looking preacher on his way to Conference; her solicitude about what I should eat, and my comfort in bed at night, appeared as though she thought I needed a mother. I have never heard her name called; but I thonght of her kindness on that occasion. Elijah traveled forty days in the strength of certain food he eat. I have traveled in the strength of that kindness more than forty years.

Sister R. M. Barrington I knew well years ago. I also knew her husband, of precious memory, well, and had some pleasant associations with him. I visited at their home, enjoyed her hospitality ministered in such a kind and sisterly manner. Her religious spirit was more entertaining to me than the hospitality of her table. Whenever the name Barrington has been mentioned, whether in conversation or in print, pleasant memories of this dear woman come up in connection with the Christian home over which she presided.

I do not remember ever to have seen announced in a paper of one date three persons whose memories were so dear to me.

J. D. NEWSOM.

The North Mississippi Annual Conference of the C. M. E. Church in America,

This Conference convened in Cooper's Chapel, Olive Branch, Miss., Dec. 16, 1896, at 9:30 A. M., Bishop Isaac Lane presiding, and Rev. L. C. Woods, secretary.

The sessions of the Conference were held daily from 9:30 A. M. to 2:30 P. M. The duties of the chair were discharged in Bishop Lane's happy business-like manner. He gave some fine talks before the Conference, and preached two edifying sermons to the white people.

The impression made by this Conference upon the white people here is, that our colored brethren are advancing in intelligence and piety.

The following statistics will appear in the Minutes of this year:

Preachers in the Conference, 130; local preachers, 266; members, 11,670; infants baptized, 103; adults 891; Sunday-schools, 168, with 722 teachers and 5,690 pupils. Paid for students in Lane College, $362 42; raised on Children's Day, $206 53. Raised for all purposes on general assessments, over $4,000.

The Bishop and the Conference required two duties of the preachers: to go to and serve the work assigned, and bring up a "round report" on the assessments. A failure to do the first meant a place in local ranks or private life; a failure in the second meant to go before a committee under charge of "deficiency."

Four preachers were sent to Lane College and eight received on trial; several received deacon's orders, as also a number were ordained elders. We wish for them all possible future success, and the long preservation of the life of their worthy leader and great benefactor, Bishop Isaac Lane. BEN P. JACO.

Olive Branch, Miss.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. E. E. Langford, P. C., Anguilla charge, Dec. 23 1896: "We reached this place Friday afternoon, and went to the home of Bro. H. L. Dinkins, where we remained till Monday, when we went to the parsonage. Monday night, about 7 o'clock, the good people began to gather in and continued to come until a late hour, bringing bundles and boxes of good things until we wondered what we would do with all of it. There was at least a two-horse wagon-load of first class groceries. The people here must believe strongly in the old saying, 'The way to reach a man's heart is through his appetite.' Besides this, we found fuel stored away sufficient to last us half the Winter. I preached Sunday at 11 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. Bro. Cecil left the charge in good working condition, and the prospects are bright for a glorious year on Anguilla circuit. Pray for us."

Rev. W. W. Williams, Charleston, Miss., Dec. 22, 1896: "The good people gave us a hearty welcoming, a respectable pounding, and plenty of work to do. So we like them much. Blessings on the good people!"

Rev. H. S. Johns: "I am moving from the Plaquemine and Donaldsonville charge after a pleasant stay of three years to Chicot and White Chapel. While we have made no great noise in that part of the Lord's heritage, yet some good things have been accomplished by the help of God. There have been in this time about thirty accessions, which for the territory speaks volumes. Our churches are in good condition, and the people will welcome Bro. J. E. Densen with a 'glad heart and willing mind.' In Donaldsonville the church has been repaired and a vestibule built which gives it not only a nice appearance, but a fine entrance. The parsonage has been kept in repair at this writer's expense largely, and fruit trees and shrubs set which in time will be of use. Last and most important of all, one of the appointments grew into a station, and has maintained itself with dignity and grace. I refer to White Castle. So, upon the whole, our Methodism is making progress in that hard field. I wish Bro. Densen a great year, and ask your prayers."

A Reader, Rosedale, La., Dec. 26, 1896: "Our beloved pastor has gone. He bid us farewell on Dec. 21. As our pastor and spiritual adviser he could not be excelled. When he said good-by, 'Sister; God be with you,' I could not speak, my heart was too full for utterance; I could not say, 'God speed you on your way.' Oh, how many, many preachers there are changing places this year. Dear readers, receive them kindly. May God bless them and use them to his glory wherever they go. Calls are coming from every direction, 'Come, and break the Bread of Life.' Oh, may God send forth more filled with the love and meekness of Jesus to rescue perishing souls and stir up all the dear children to do their duty in the great work. Eternity is looming in sight, and dear souls are calling for help in all directions. We are waiting every day for our new preacher, Rev. S. H. Whatley. We are so sure we will like him. We ought to be thankful if God sends some one of his children to reprove us, if they see anything about that is not pleasing to God. May God help people who have had light upon his word and enjoyed in their souls the experience of the same. I ask the prayers of all those who are interested in the cause of Christ. Success to the dear old ADVOCATE."

In our great grandmother's day women did not have to submit to the examinations and local treatment so uniformly insisted upon by present-day physicians. Perhaps they were naturally healthier—anyway, doctors did not insist on such things so much. That sort of treatment was not a "fad" as it is to-day. Many a woman goes on suffering tortures in silence because her natural modesty prevents her taking the step she knows will follow when she calls on a doctor. There is relief for these women and others. It is in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This is an absolutely certain remedy for all the weaknesses and diseases of woman's peculiar organs. It is the preparation of an eminent and successful specialist—a regularly graduated, experienced and skilled physician, who has for over thirty years made a specialty of diseases of women. This is the only medicine for women that emanates from such a source. It is sold by all good druggists, and its sales amount to more than the combined sales of all other preparations designed for the same purposes.

HEAD HEAVY? Do you feel sleepy and sluggish and half-dead all day? Is your sleep restless? Do you have bad dreams? Does a little exertion tire you out? Are you short-winded? Do you have palpitation of the heart? If you do, you probably need Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. All of these symptoms come from constipation more frequently than they do from any other cause. Ninety-nine times in a hundred Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets will cure them by curing constipation. The "Pellets" are the only absolutely permanent cure for this prevalent disorder. They are tiny, sugar-coated granules, and a little vial holds forty of them. One "Pellet" is a gentle laxative and two a mild cathartic.

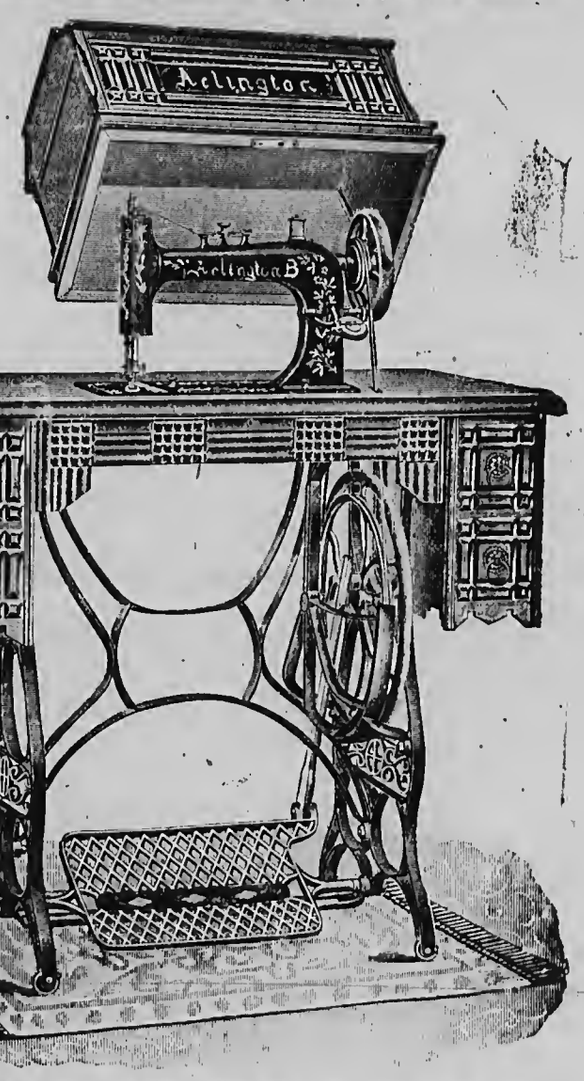
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.



A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as an omatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the look stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $20.50, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '98, and send us $18.50 additional, and we will send you the machine.

"By ignorance is pride increased; Those most assume who know the least."

Sometimes there is a good deal of religion in a hand-shake.

Preach your beliefs. Your doubts would have no place in the pulpit.

Whenever you try to be good as hard as you try to make money, you will succeed.

Do you inquire in making pastoral calls whether the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE is a regular visiter to the home?

The infidel talks against the Bible, but he always quotes it when he thinks it favors his side of any question.

Beware how you trust him who has shown that he has no regard for the monitions of conscience in even very small matters.

Opportunities for performing what the world calls great deeds do not come very frequently, but opportunities for good deeds come every day.

If you can not scatter sunshine about you, try at least to keep from casting dark and gloomy shadows athwart the pathway of those about you.

Unkindness to the friends about us will bring bitter memories by and by when death lays his icy fingers upon them and bears them from our presence.

The sermon was effective; it was composed under the influence of the Holy Spirit and was written with tear-dimmed eyes and on tear-soiled paper.

The best way to criticise the achievements of others is to surpass them. If this rule were universally observed, criticisms would be like angels' visits—few and far between.

If constant self-improvement is our aim, it is wise to give more heed to the criticisms of our foes than to the adulations of our friends. We occupy a vantage-ground when we are able to see ourselves as others see us.

Will it be easier to discharge a debt in the distant future when it has been more than doubled by accumulated interest than it is now? That man must think so who supposes that it will be easier for him to be a Christian after awhile than now.

There is no use guarding a cornfield with a gun when you can rig up a scare-crow for nothing that will do the work just as well. When the devil is too busy to look after a church, he gets a vinegar-faced saint to occupy the highest seat in the synagogue.—Selected.

A Noble Example.

It being a time-honored custom in this city for appropriations to be made out of the city treasury for the maintenance of sectarian institutions, the Board of Managers of St. Anna's Asylum, a Protestant home for orphans and aged women, made application not long since for aid for that institution. The City Council notified the Board of Managers that the appropriation was without warrant of law, but that in consideration of the worthy character of the institution an appropriation of $500 had been made. Thereupon Mrs. Ida A. Richardson, president of the Board of Managers, addressed the following note to His Honor, the Mayor:

When the Board of Managers of the St. Anna's Asylum knew that the income for its support was gone, and appealed to the Charity Committee to place that institution on the list in the budget for the coming year, we were ignorant of it being against the law for the Council to appropriate money to asylums of any religious denomination. Therefore, while thanking the gentlemen who desire to assist such worthy institutions as the St. Anna's Asylum by voting it $500, we most respectfully decline receiving it.

The appeal made to our citizens has been so promptly and kindly responded to that we are already assured of being able to support its inmates for the next six months, and we are willing to trust to God and our citizens to sustain us in the future without assisting in breaking a good and wise law.

That communication has the right ring. Christian people everywhere ought to be law abiding. No countenance ought to be given to lawlessness of any kind. We would like very much to know how many Catholic institutions in this city have refused appropriations on such ground. If some one who is posted will give us the information, we will let the world know what amount of money wrung from the people of this city by taxation goes into the coffers of the Romish Church for the support of its numerous institutions.

International Arbitration.

It is announced through the press that President Cleveland and the British ministry have agreed upon the terms of a general arbitration treaty which is to be submitted in the near future to the United States Senate. The treaty provides for a permanent arbitration commission composed of six members, three representing each country, to be chosen from the ranks of the judiciary. In case of a tie vote, a seventh member of the commission is to be chosen by the six. All disputes concerning territorial jurisdiction and all problems of a commercial character are to be referred to this commission, whose decision is to be final. The treaty is to be binding for five years.

If the information above given is correct, which we have no reason to doubt, we feel sure that the Senate will confirm the arrangement. When two of the leading nations of the world agree to settle their disputes by arbitration instead of by bloodshed, what a triumph for the "Prince of Peace!" When this treaty is confirmed it will be in order to sing a "Te Deum" in every place that owes allegiance to the stars and stripes or to Her Majesty's government.

A Far-Reaching Legal Decision.

The world moves. That a man can not be compelled to give testimony that criminates himself is no longer a principle of American jurisprudence, the United States Supreme Court having recently rendered a decision to that effect in a case involving the constitutionality of an Act of Congress passed in 1893. This Act of Congress, designed to secure a better enforcement of the Interstate Commerce Law, provides that in cases growing out of alleged violations of this law no person shall be excused from testifying on the ground that his testimony may criminate himself, though it also provides that no person so testifying shall be prosecuted on account of any act concerning which he may give evidence. The Supreme Court sustains the constitutionality of the law.

It is a great deal better to live a holy life than to talk about it. We are told to let our light shine, and if it does, we won't need to tell anybody it does. The light will be its own witness. Light-houses don't ring bells and fire cannon to call attention to their shining—they just shine.—D. L. Moody.

Broad Theology.

We had been flattering ourselves that "broad theology" would find no congenial soil in the late seceded States; but it would seem we have been "reckoning without our host." A subscriber and reader sends us from Georgia a clipping from an Atlanta paper, on which he wishes a comment. One Dr. Robbins, in charge of a Methodist Church in Atlanta, has been lately hauled up by the North Georgia Conference for alleged heresy, contained in a book published by him, entitled "The Family in Necessity of Civilization." His heresy and the white-washing by his brethren is best told in the account of this extraordinary ecclesiastical action.

The following resolutions were passed, with only about half a dozen dissenting voices:

Whereas, The Rev. J. B. Robbins, D. D., a member of this Conference, has published a book entitled "The Family in Necessity of Civilization," in which he stated that the doctrine of total depravity, which has been understood to be the teaching of our seventh article, is unworthy of belief, and has further said that children are born pure and needed no new nature, save that which comes to a sinless being, and that Jesus Christ needed regenerution as any other child needed it, and that he was regenerated, saying that there was but one way for him to get into the kingdom of God, and that was to be born into it; and,

Whereas, Dr. Robbins has declared in the public prints that in neither of these utterances did he design to attack any of our articles; therefore, as his character for truthfulness and sincerity is unimpeached; therefore, be it

Resolved, By this Conference, that it heartily reaffirms its belief in the seventh article of our religion and repudiates all teaching of childhood purity in conflict with it; that it does not believe in any sense that our Lord Jesus Christ needed regeneration; that it believes he was conceived by the Holy Ghost, was born immaculate and lived without sin to his ascension.

"Behold, the conquering hero comes," as thus told by the Evening Journal (Singular, is it not, how general the sympathy of the secular press is with heretics on trial?):

A meeting of the Park Street Methodist Church was held at the church for the purpose of making a visit to the home of Dr. Robbins, their pastor. The weather was disagreeable, but a large majority of the congregation were present. When they called at Dr. Robbins' home they surprised him by presenting him with many appropriate presents. Dr. Robbins has been pastor of Park Street Church for one year, and the recent Annual Conference returned him for another year. During the meeting at the home of Dr. Robbins resolutions offered by Mr. J. M. Smith, expressing the love and respect of the congregation for their pastor, were passed. The resolutions also endorsed the book written by Dr. Robbins that has created so much comment, and recommended it to all persons as a good book to read.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

Attention, Preachers.

The beginning of the year is the very best time to work for the ADVOCATE. Quite a number of brethren are working for it diligently. Why should not all do so?

The Northwestern Advocate in a recent issue says:

"How can anyone expect to be intelligent concerning the world's needs unless he is a student of our times? How can he possess the right enthusiasm for missions unless he knows what is taking place in the mission fields of the church?

"How we rejoice when we hear the good news of revivals in all parts of the land, and how often such news brings to us a great longing to see a revival in our own churches!

"What an inspiration comes to struggling churches when they know that other struggling churches are winning men and building temples and paying debts!

"What a blessing to the home there is in keeping in touch with the world's best progress, and in giving the children the right outlook on this good world!

"But how can these things be without the church paper in the home? Let the religious paper be enthroned above the daily and the story paper."

Think of this and begin at once to work for your Conference organ. It will greatly facilitate the work of securing subscriptions to call attention to our premium offers, especially our Bible offer. Let it be remembered that the Bible we handle is no cheap affair. It is substantially bound. The Bible we sell to our subscribers at the low price of $2.35 costs those who are not subscribers $5—the regular catalogue price. Let the brethren also remember that we will offer after a short time several premiums to agents.

Every new cash subscription sent in after this date will count in the contest. Therefore, the brethren need not wait for our offer. Let them push the canvass at once. Those who compete for premiums must send in the full subscription price. We can not give the premiums and commissions too. But all unsuccessful competitors will have their commissions refunded.

To Subscribers.

We dislike to lose a single subscriber, but we can not continue delinquents indefinitely. Quite a number of names will be cut off soon if arrearages are not paid up. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

In the Living Present.

Jesus reigns. Though churches for actual divine service are exempt from taxation in Boston, the assessors declined to include in the list of exempts the imposing structure known as the Spiritualists' Temple. Taxes are required of an assessed value of $240,000. Even Universalists are free; but the Spiritualists must pay.

A lady acquaintance, suffering from nervous prostration, consulted a physician. Diagnosing her case fully, he prescribed: "Less worry, less party, less discontent, less indigestible food; and more household-work, more exercise in the open air, more sleep and more prayer."

The foreign mission cause is dear to our people. The Christians of our country paid during last year for said cause the enormous sum of forty million dollars. How much of that amount did you give? The amount stated paid the salaries of 3,770 male and female missionaries and 1,250 native preachers in heathen lands.

Previous to the recent presidential election Henry Villard, a well-known railroad celebrity, visiting at the time his native town in Germany, promised that he would found an asylum for the aged and infirm in that town if McKinley would be elected President. A few weeks ago a pastor of that town, Dr. Scherer, received a check from Mr. Villard to the amount of $150,000 for erection of that asylum.

A clerk in a registration office in Baltimore, who was noted for his great efficiency, neglected to register himself. On election day he discovered that on account of that neglect he could not vote. Wonder if not some Christians, and, perhaps, even preachers, are endeavoring to save others and, yet, lose their own souls.

The first of January as the beginning of a new year was fixed by Julius Cæsar forty-six years before the birth of Christ. Six different dates have had that honor at different times. When the bloody revolutionists in France, 1793, enthroned a woman as the goddess of reason, they also ordered issuance of a new almanac fixing as the beginning of the new year September 22. This order was subsequently revoked by Napoleon Bonaparte. Until 1452 the twenty-fifth of March was new year in Great Britain.

The rabbis of New York and vicinity recently held a convention in the Lexington Avenue Temple of that city for the purpose of discussing the problem of how to retain their progeny for Judaism. Existing difficulties were exposed; appropriate remedies suggested. It was stated that fully one-half of young Israelites drifted into atheism. Materialism dominated. Wonder if it is much better among Christians?

ICH DIEN.

George Muller, known to the whole Christian world as the profound believer in the power of prayer, is now ninety-two years old. He still makes use of the gracious instrument which he has wielded for so many years. The direct answers which have come to him in response to his petitions, he says, now amount to more than $7,000,000. They came in different ways, but were so connected with his special prayers that he believes they were tied together in the gracious counsels of God. It is a wonderful story.—Presbyterian.

According to Dorchester's Problem of Religious Progress the number of Christians in the world in the year 1500 was 100,000,000. In 1800 there were 200,000,000. In 1880 there were 410,000,000. Thus the increase during the eighty years between 1800 and 1880 was greater than during the first fifteen hundred years of the Christian Era.

It is said that a Texas preacher, in making his report to the Annual Conference, stated that his church had been blown down by a storm, but that, notwithstanding the fact that his people were strained to rebuild, his collections were all up in full. "How is that?" asked the Bishop. "I took them before the storm came," was the reply. See the point?

At different times, almost every country in Europe has been obliged to expel the Jesuits. Just recently Ecuador has done the same. A Guayaquil dispatch states that the government has ordered the Jesuit fathers settled in the eastern part of the republic to leave the country, because they have been fomenting revolutionary movements.—Exchange.

I wish I had the power to reach every Methodist on the earth. I would say, Cease living on the heroism of your fathers, quit glorying in numbers, sacrificing to statistics and burning incense to the General Minutes; down on your knees and seek and find for yourselves the secret of the power of the fathers, a clean heart and the endowment of power from on high; then arise and unfurl the banner of salvation, free and full, and a common-sense theology, the beauty of which Joseph Cook says "is that it can be preached." Then in double-quick time charge upon the hosts of sin and conquer the world for Christ.—Daniel Steel.

Some recent utterances in the pulpit with regard to the Cuban question remind us of a remark which a wise student of public affairs made the other day: "The longer I live the more deeply impressed I am with the importance of the principle that it is easier for a man to make an ass of himself in the bosom of his family or alone in the depths of some primeval forest, rather than in the pulpit or in a newspaper."—Exchange.

Prof. Wilmot H. Goodale, of the University of Louisiana, at Baton Rouge, died at his home in that city on the second from the effects of a fall from a bicycle. He was a man highly respected for his mental and moral worth. He was the husband of Mrs. Mary Reed Goodale, widely known throughout the South, and in various sections of the North as well for her effective work as a temperance speaker. Prof. Goodale was a staunch Methodist, and has sometimes represented the Louisiana Conference as a lay delegate to the General Conference.

The causes of insanity are predisposing and exciting. Probably the predisposition was strong in all these cases; but as no one can tell without a trial how much excitement he can endure, and the trial may ruin him if he goes beyond a safe margin, in exciting times everyone should seek more than usual and never lose self-control for an instant. Even in religion the man who neglects his menls and sings or shouts or talks past midnight, is in a bad way. The mighty revivals of Wesley were managed with due caution. He went to bed and compelled his ministers and helpers to go to bed at the usual hour, and he was known to rebuke most strenuously those who in this particular would not obey him.—New York Advocate.

Mr. Isaiah Hardy, general freight and passenger agent of the Queen and Crescent railroad, died at his home in this city on Dec. 31. From a modest beginning he worked his way up to this high position by faithful and efficient service. He was a man of the strictest integrity, faithful to every trust. He was a genial, warm hearted man, whose friends were legion wherever he was known. In the relations of husband, brother, husband and father, he was a model worthy of imitation. His remains were carried to Vicksburg for interment. A brief funeral service was held at his residence conducted by Rev. R. Q. Mallard, editor of the Southwestern Presbyterian, and the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. He was buried with Masonic honors.

It is proposed, and indeed urged, that the children of Christian families and Sabbath-school scholars shall be instructed in the results of the higher criticism, and that books be prepared for the use of parents and teachers to enable them to give this instruction. We move that the proposition be laid on the table for ten years. No injury has come during the last three hundred years from receiving the Bible with simple faith, while unbelief has wrought incalculable disaster. To continue to believe the Bible for ten years longer will harm no one. In that time a great deal of the higher criticism will be overthrown as a great deal of it has been in the past ten years. The effect of the higher criticism in Germany upon evangelical belief does not commend it to other nations professedly Christian.—Christian Intelligencer.

Here is a case of Christian conduct which for sheer novelity is well nigh startling. Rev. C. R. Baker, rector of the Church of the Messiah, Brooklyn, lately said to his congregation that somewhat recently a man and his wife, members of that church had gone to North Carolina to live. They found themselves in the midst of a community of 250 persons who were absolutely without church privileges of any kind. They learned that the people were Baptists in preference, and that they had a school building which could be used for services. The man wrote to the rector and asked for his advice, whether he should try to organize an Episcopal Church or to resuscitate the Baptist and get it in running order. Mr. Baker at once advised him to reorganize and set going the Baptist Church by all means, and a collection was taken up to buy hymn books.—Missionary Review of the World.

MR. EDITOR: Please give me space in your paper to say to all pastors that I am ready for revival work with any of them who may need outside help. I have a nice young man with me to lead the music. I have the consent of my pastor, Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, to go to any place to which a pastor may call me to assist him in his work. This being the case, I feel free to say that I am on the line with our church. I preach a plain, simple gospel, and the Lord has crowned my efforts in the past with wonderful success. Give me a trial, brethren, some of you, if you need help.

I have several engagements in the Memphis Conference, beginning at Pocahontas, Tenn., the second Sunday in January, next. Should any of you desire to write me, you will please address me at Corinth, Miss.

I hope that I may hear from several of you, and pray that this Conference year may be by far the most successful of our ministry.

Death of Sister Ramsey.

The Rev. J. W. Ramsey, pastor of our church at Waterford, North Mississippi Conference, is sorely bereaved. His estimable wife died Dec. 31. Her remains were carried to Blue Springs this morning for burial. Rev. Dr. Cameron, presiding elder of the district, accompanied Bro. Ramsey on the sad mission.

J. S. OAKLEY.

Jan. 1, 1897.

Since the above was received the following note from Bro. Cameron came to hand:

Sister Ramsey, wife of Rev. J. W. Ramsey, preacher in charge of Waterford circuit, Holly Springs district, was buried near Blue Springs yesterday. She took her bed on the day after her arrival at Waterford, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus at 5 P. M., Dec. 31, 1896. She leaves a loving husband and two precious children to mourn her loss.

From Bro. Holloman.

A cordial reception at this parsonage, with everything in order; a most hearty welcome in the pulpit, and many words of cheer from the people, characterized the beginning of this pastor's new work. We hope to prove worthy of the reception given. We have naught but thanks to Bishop, presiding elder and all concerned.

The mail and express have brought me some very valuable additions to my library from my brethren. What noble fellows the Methodist preachers are! May God bless them all!

Early Collections Always Win.

To the Preachers in Jackson District, Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: Every preacher who commenced early and pressed vigorously the claims for Conference collections, last year, succeeded well.

Won't you try it, everyone of you, in stations as well as circuits? I wish to urge you to begin at once. I wish to serve notice that special attention will be given to these questions at each Quarterly Conference. Let us preach on missions, church extension, education, etc., and distribute suitable literature and give the people, all the people, an opportunity to give—I should have said, pay.

Yours for full and hearty co-operation,

R. D. NORSWORTHY, P. E.

Bro. Newsom's View.

MR. EDITOR: I think you should have published my criticism I sent you on the session of the North Mississippi Conference. The complimentary resolutions and flattering communications which appeared in the papers made you think I was captious. I wish to say there was another standpoint from which a view was taken. While most of the preachers were well entertained, there were some who paid a hotel bill.

The Christmas Ladies' Home Journal far surpasses in general excellence and attractiveness any previous issue of that magazine. The sentiment and spirit of the holiday season are reflected in its pages. An appropriate opening is a characterization of "Scrooge," from Dickens' "Christmas Carol," the first of Charles Dana Gibson's series of sketches of the great novelist's best-known characters. Not less interesting, and revealing the humor and pathos of the Christmas of the children of the very poor, is a page of M. F. Woolf's waifs. The current Journal is exceptionally rich in illustrations. By the Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia; one dollar per year, ten cents per copy.

The Life and Epistles of Saint Paul.

BY THE REV. J. W. CONYBEARE, M. A., Late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; and the Rev. J. S. Howson, D. D., Principal of the Collegiate Institute, Liverpool.

Contains 1071 large octavo pages, many fine illustrations, maps, charts, etc., is printed on the same quality of paper and is the same in size as Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, and bound in uniform style.

It eloquently portrays the early life, education, conversion, teachings, labors, travels, sufferings, perils, persecutions, and missionary career of St. Paul, thus constituting a Living Picture of the great Apostle himself and of the circumstances by which he was surrounded.

The work also embodies the results of a profound and appreciative study of the true inner life of St. Paul exhibited in his letters which delineate the motives which impelled, and the faith which sustained him in all the troubles and sorrows of his twenty years' conflict, and from which we learn what is told of Paul by Paul himself, and which will continue to live upon the lips and in the hearts of all the faithful until the final consummation of all things.

It is not an abridgement, but an exact reprint of the greatly improved "People's Edition," prepared with much care and labor, in pursuance of an original plan of both writers, "for a wider circle of readers," and differs from all other editions by the substitution of English for the Greek, Latin, and German quotations.

Dr. Howson in his preface to this edition says: "Those readers have, throughout, been kept in view who, though well educated, would not find it easy to refer to Greek or German books." "The text (he also says) is unaltered, with the exception of a slight verbal change suggested in the course of a thorough re perusal."

The above work will be sent postpaid to any address on receipt of $1.50. Preachers who prefer to do so can easily make payment in commissions on subscriptions to ADVOCATE. Address Rev. W. C. Black, 512 Camp street, New Orleans, La.

I always keep a vial of the Tabules upon my dressing table, and use them with confidence whenever occasion arises. MY SERVICE.

I asked the Lord to let me do
Some mighty work for him;
To fight amidst his battle hosts,
Then sing the victor's hymn.
I longed my ardent love to show,
[illegible]

He placed me in the quiet home,
Whose life was calm and still,
And gave me little things to do,
My daily round to fill;
I could not think it good to be
Just put aside so silently.

Small duties gathered round my way,
They seemed of earth alone;
I, who had longed for conquests bright
To lay before his throne,
Had common things to do and bear,
To watch and strive with daily care.

So then I thought my prayer unheard,
And asked the Lord once more
That he would give me work for him
And open wide the door;
Forgetting that my Master knew
Just what was best for me to do.

Then quietly the answer came,
"My child, I hear thy cry;
Think not that mighty deeds alone
Will bring the victory.
The battle has been planned by Me,
Let daily life thy conquests see."

—The Quiet Hour.

Mr. Lowell and the Queen.

The respect—it is in truth something more than respect—in which the Queen is held in America makes her Majesty's opinions of things concerning Americans of interest to her admirers in this country. It is perhaps known already that she liked Mr. Lowell, and that he was a favorite and favored guest at Windsor Castle. We are apt to think that our author's literary renown won him the general regard of England. That is so, but it hardly explains the Queen's interest in him. The Queen of England is not among those who think that the authors of that country are its chief glories. Literature has seldom or never, in her time, been a passport to royal favor. It is not a literary family—not a family which reads much, except despatches and state papers and the curt summaries of parlimentary proceedings which the Prime Minister, or the minister who leads the House of Commons, writes on his lap toward the close of each sitting for her Majesty's information. Not many marks of distinction have been conferred during the present reign on eminent English writers. Still less, then, was it likely that an American writer should be singled out for notice because he was an American writer. It is probable the Queen knew that Mr. Lowell had published books; less probable that she had read them; least probable of all that they were the foundation of the regard she had for him. The regard was due to his personal qualities, and to the fact that he was known to her as the advocate of a good understanding between the kingdom over which she rules and the great commonwealth beyond the seas which her grandfather flung away. For the Queen has ever been the advocate of friendly relations with the United States. She knew how much this American minister had done to promote them, and valued him accordingly. Upon acquaintance with Mr. Lowell she came to value him for his own sake, and not least, I have been told, for his somewhat unconventional independence of speech and thought. The imagination can not conceive of Lowell as a courtier. He had—which is a totally different matter—an admirable courtesy, whether to the Queen or to the flower-girl in the street of whom he bought roses for his button-hole and his friends. But to the Queen, as to everybody else, he would speak his mind. The freedom he used sometimes left courtiers aghast, but gave no offense to the Queen. It may have amazed her because of its originality; it certainly increased her respect and liking for the loyal gentleman who thought the ties of humanity universal. There was no fault of good breeding in it; there was, no doubt, a certain indifference to court customs. A breath of fresh air swept through the presence-room when Mr. Lowell entered it. He was not afraid to be himself; to be simple, entertaining, literary even, or to pour out his stores of wit and learning where such gifts are unusual. There are one or two other cases which might be mentioned of men—Englishmen these—who venture upon plain speaking to the Queen, and with similar results—"Mr. Lowell in England," by George W. Smalley, in Harper's Magazine.

The love that does not speak until it does it on a gravestone, keeps still too long.

The Best Husband.

He is a good husband who makes himself his children's playmate. He is a better husband who makes his wife his confidante, every time—tells her the truth, the whole truth, always. He is the best husband when he has a wife who works with him shoulder to shoulder—when, hand locked in hand, husband and wife travel down life's path toward one destination. He is the ideal husband who looks upon marriage as a duet, the merging of two individualities into perfect harmony.

But I am in no sense an authority on this subject. I am an unmarried man, and yet that very fact, I'm told, is why I am singled out to answer this question. Be it remembered, then, that I speak about husbands simply as an onlooker.

I have said that a good husband makes himself his children's playmate. I specify this qualification because so few men are "good" in this respect. Of course, the mother is naturally the children's playmate; for, except in the case of fashionable society women—who, by the way, are often misrepresented—the mothers are with their children constantly. But in the case of the father, especially if he is a business man, it is different. Anxious to rush to his office early in the morning, he leaves the house before the children come down for breakfast. Rushing home after the day's work, absorbed in his multitudinous affairs, he is either too wearied or too worried to play with the children, or he rushes off to the theatre to enjoy, at a rush, an hour or two of amusement. Home again, of course the children are in bed. So the little ones, and for that matter the big ones, too, whom he really dotes upon, he sees only on Sundays. The children on their part, when papa enters the room, immediately smother their happy laugh and prattle in a whisper!

But behold the home where the children are accustomed to welcome papa as a great big fellow-playmate. They spring to him joyously, climb upon his knee, ramble round his shoulders and over his head, go to bed in rollicking glee, while papa has drowned dull care in the romp.

The best husband makes the wife his confidante. Even though one withhold or misrepresent matters to his wife, so she won't worry, it is generally a mistake. It leads to jealousy, suspicion and cruel disappointment for her, and to error and trouble, and often to crime for him. Men are most prone to do this in time of financial straits. The wife, quite unaware, spends money as freely as usual, making things all the worse in the end. If a man be not rich, his wife must find it out in time; why not tell her at once? To deceive one's wife is the first step to unhappiness. To accept her counsel, place a value upon her intuition, are sure steps toward happiness.—Exchange.

Mind Culture for Children.

A habit of forgetfulness is one of the greatest hindrances in all business and social relations; but our modern style of life and education is certainly conducive to this habit and injurious to the memory. The old methods of learning by rote have fallen into disfavor, and there was much to say against them as hindrance to originality, but there is a time in every child's life when learning by rote is a useful thing, and it is at a very early age, for, the minds of young children not being occupied with so many things as those of their elders, they are in a receptive condition, and their memory is more retentive than later on.

It is possible to begin to cultivate the memory as soon as the child can talk, when it should be made to describe everything it has seen during its morning walk, or to repeat some little story that has been told to it, or a short lesson which has been learned. Every teacher before beginning a new lesson should make sure that the lesson of the day before has been retained and understood, for the more we overcrowd the little brain in the attempt to force knowledge upon it the less we impress upon it for future use.

In a well-ordered mind the facts remain and points are, as it were, pigeon-holed in such a way that they can be brought immediately when required. There are untidy brains, in which the objects of knowledge are confused and not ready to hand, so that they may turn up at unexpected moments but not just when wanted, in the same manner as there are untidy drawers, wardrobes, and rooms; and to cultivate a habit of mental order as well as one of physical order should be the earnest desire of every mother and teacher.—Exchange.

It is especially important for one to guard every word he writes, lest his language should be too severe in speaking against folks. It is not best to speak against people at all except in very grave emergencies, where a weighty duty makes it necessary. To speak from mere impulse or hasty temper is especially to be condemned and avoided. When it is necessary, as a matter of duty, to speak or write a word against anyone, be careful to have your temper well under control before you attempt the dangerous task. Don't allow yourself to write when you are conscious of a feeling of unkindness toward one against whom you are constrained by a sense of duty to write. There is some excuse for a hasty temper and an ungovernable tongue in an outburst of strong language under severe provocation in oral conversation; but no such excuse can be made for severity in a written document. It may help to keep you on the right line in this respect to philosophize a little about the matter. Think, then, on this phase of the subject. The one against whom you may feel disposed to write as an enemy to-day may be your friend in the days yet to come. If you should come to be friends, his power or ability to help you as a friend would depend largely upon the influence that he could wield among men. Now, if it so happens that something you wrote against him when you were enemies should come out to his disadvantage after you were friends, his ability to help you as a friend would be weakened, if not destroyed, by your own hand. This would be stabbing yourself with the dagger you aimed at him.—Exchange.

Man's Greatest Enemy.

Drunkenness! It is the greatest enemy of the State. It fills prisons with criminals, almshouses with paupers, hospitals with disease, accidents and death, and follows these to the graveyard at the public expense. It haunts the streets, defiles dwellings and sends insane victims to asylums. It fills liquor dens with broils, riots, ruffians and gamblers and consumes the time of courts, and draws from county treasuries the hard earnings of toil, and this statement does not half fill the recital of its wrongs. — Ex-Chief Justice Daniel Agnew, of Pennsylvania.

Wanted.

In one hundred thousand households in America, a willing, sunshiny daughter, who will not fret when asked to wipe the dishes, or sigh when requested to take care of the baby; a daughter whose chief delight is to smooth away mother's wrinkles, and who is quite as willing to lighten her father's cares as his pockets; a girl who thinks her own brother as nice as some other girl's brother. Constant love, high esteem and a most honored place in the home guaranteed.—New York Christian Advocate.

There is a laziness of the mind as well as of the body. People loaf mentally as well as physically. One is to be despised quite as much as the other. The mind should be held quite as rigidly to discipline as the body; for an aimless, wandering, unapplicable mind will destroy one's usefulness quite as much as a slothful, flabby, unskilled body.

Caring for One's Health.

The care of our health is such a well-worn subject that it begins to pall, and yet it is a most important duty, and one which we owe to other people, to those among whom our life is cast, and to all future generations. Emerson says that "health is first wealth," a truth which we all ought more thoroughly to understand. The number of working women is daily increasing, while the necessity for the spheres of work entered upon is becoming more widely appreciated, but, alas! how few of us give any consideration to the training of our body, though we must know that without its co-operation all work will be ineffectual.

Men whose livelihood depends upon their health do their best to take care of it, and thus show their superiority of mind over the women who walk out in pouring rain without a waterproof, and remain in wet boots and damp skirts for the simple reason that they will not take the trouble to change them.

One of the great hindrances to health is improper and insufficient food. A very large proportion of working women of the middle class take their midday meal in a confectioner's shop, where instead of the male lunch of a chop or basin of soup, they prefer tea and buns. In the evening they return home to more tea, and while their nerves are stimulated and eventually destroyed, their whole constitution suffers from want of a sufficient quantity of animal food. Frequently some noxious skin disease is the result, or they become anæmic, strength and power of sleep leave them, and they often, alas! turn to narcotics, and so fall into a habit which is the ruin of body and mind.

The Effect of Alcohol on Strength.

A moderate dose of beer or wine would, in most cases, at once diminish the maximum weight which a healthy person could lift.—Dr. William Brunton, F. R. S.

In my opinion, the best physical performances can only be secured through absolute abstinence from alcohol and tobacco. This is my rule, and I find after three years of constant work at the oar, during which time I have rowed many notable match races, that I am better able to contend in a great race than when I commenced. In fact, I believe that the use of liquor and tobacco has a very injurious effect upon the system of an athlete.—Hanlan, the famous English oarsman.

Alcohol does not give strength, does not maintain strength, and its use can not be truthfully defended on the ground that the body is not strong enough to do without it. When anyone feels that he requires alcohol to maintain strength, the evidence favors the suspicion that that person is in danger of collapse from the action of the very agent on which reliance is falsely placed. —Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, F. R. S.

At one place in England, where a large amount of brick-making is carried on, and where the amount of each man's work, the number of days lost by sickness or otherwise, and the deaths, were made matters of record, the rules of the service allowed to every man a mug of beer at each meal. But there were among the workmen quite a number who wholly abstained from the use of the beer and every other intoxicating drink. An examination of the record showed that the average amount of work done per annum by the beer drinkers was a large percentage less than that done by those who wholly abstained, while the number of days lost by sickness was greater.—British and Foreign Medico-Chirurgical Review.

It was a colored preacher who said to his flock: "We have a collection to make this morning, and, for the glory of heaben, whichever of you stole Mr. Jones' turkeys, don't put anything on the plate." One who was there says: "Every blessed niggah in de church came down wid de rocks."—Central Methodist.

BISHOP WILSON. REV. J. E. RANKIN.

Bishop Edward Wilson, D. D., LL. D., of Metuchen, N. J., says: "I have taken Warner's Safe Kidney Cure with great advantage and derived much benefit from its use, and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

Rev. J. E. Rankin, D. D., LL. D. President of Howard University of Washington, in a most outspoken manner, says: ... "I have known of several persons who regarded themselves as greatly benefited, and some of them as permanently cured of diseases of the kidney and urinary organs by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. I have known, too, of its being used in similar cases by physicians of the highest character and standing. I do not doubt that it has great virtue. This treatment, I want in the interests of humanity, to recommend."

Among the hundreds of other testimonials as to the efficacy of Warner's Safe Cure from Ministers of the Gospel, are found those of Rev. S. K. Frazier, Youngstown, Ohio; Rev. D. Richardson, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Rev. Wm. B. Edson, Clifton Springs, N. Y.; Rev. H. C. Westwood, D. D., Providence, R. I.; Rev. B. F. Humphrey, Amboy, Ills.; Rev. S. P. Smith, Marblehead, Mass.; Rev. C. W. Cushing, D. D., Bradford, Pa., and J. F. Spence, S. T. D., Prest. East Tenn., Wesleyan University.

Mrs. R. M. Barrington.

Mrs. R. M. Barrington, widow of the late Rev. A. M. Barrington, of the Mississippi Conference, was born in Montgomery county, Tenn., May 19, 1824, and departed this life in Crystal Springs, Miss., Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, Nov. 8, 1896, after an illness of about ten days.

In early life Sister Barrington was denied the privilege of Christian influences, her parents not being religious, but her natural disposition seemed to tend towards a pious life. This, added to the friendship of two very devout persons, whose godly walk and conversation had a very positive influence on her life, it is not surprising that at the early age of sixteen she was happily converted at a camp meeting in Arkansas, and immediately connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

During her life she was twice married—first to a Mr. Lyon; afterward to the Rev. A. M. Barrington, who then belonged to the Arkansas Conference. Although she had a strong love for a settled home, still she bore cheerfully the trials of the life of an itinerant's wife, and no man was more fortunate in having a valuable helper and true helpmeet than Bro. Barrington.

In 1857 they moved to Mississippi, laboring in the northern part of the State until the division of the State into two Conferences, when, by such division, they were members of the North Mississippi Conference, in the bounds of which they labored till December, 1875, when they transferred to the Mississippi Conference.

Sister Barrington was left a widow in 1883, her husband departing this life in Florida, where he had gone seeking restoration of health. She returned to Mississippi and made her home in Crystal Springs. Methodism in this place was greatly blessed by the purity of her life. She was a true mother in Israel to every preacher. As a counselor, she was wise; as a friend, she was true. She took no stock in new theology, but she over-gave her time and study to the old Book, which was her counselor and guide. She was not only a reader, but a studious reader of the Bible. She made it her business to read the Bible through once a year, to mark and study each passage as she read it. She was a firm believer in the efficacy of prayer, and for many years had been accustomed to retiring to her private room at twilight, for the purpose of holding communion with her heavenly Father. During the last years of her life she was prevented, on account of health, from attending regularly the services of the sanctuary; but when her health permitted, she was in her place, a sympathetic and interested listener. During the last session of the Hennington Camp Meeting, her tent being only a few rods from the door of the tabernacle, she attended nearly, if not all the services, even the sunrise prayer meetings. She occupied her place in the church the Sunday following camp meeting, and gave the right hand of fellowship to those who were received into the membership of the church. This was her last opportunity of enjoying public services. It was a pleasure, even a blessing to anyone, to talk with her about the affairs of the church or of the spiritual life. Her mind was well stored with the knowledge of God and his dealings with his people, and her heart was filled with his love. A short while before her departure she quoted Bishop McKendree's words, ending with the exclamation, "All is well!" She would often remark the only dread she had was the struggle in dying; but the Lord, in his mercy, heard her prayer, and granted unto her a painless death, a sweet sleep.

She leaves, besides a host of friends, three daughters and two sons. They miss her counsel, comfort and love more than it is possible to express in words; but we commend them unto Him who has promised to be a comfortor to those who mourn. May they follow the footsteps of their mother, and in so doing follow the Lord Christ! M. L. Burton.

THOMPSON—Mrs. Kate Thompson, daughter of Rev. A. J. and C. E. Wooten (deceased), was born in Copiah county, March, 1864; married to David Thompson, November, 1890, and died and was buried at Wesmao, Lincoln county, Miss., Nov. 16, 1896. Rev. B. W. Lewis preached her funeral to a large audience of friends.

Sister Kate joined the church and was converted in childhood. She was a true Christian, an obedient daughter, a devoted wife, and loving mother, though she had no children of her own on earth. Her little babe, one hour old, preceded her about one month to a better world. Besides, she has two more infants in heaven. It is hard to give her up, but God knows best. All who knew her loved her. She had been in bed heath for over four years; in bed most of her time. At last she was confined 115 days, while she bore without complaint. She knew she was going to die. She had her friends to sing her a song, and while they were singing she shouted; then she called her husband and stepchildren to her bedside and told them good-bys, and made them promise to meet her in heaven, where she said she was going to meet her dear father and mother; also sent word to her two brothers and sister that she would ever be at the beautiful gate waiting and watching for them.

Dear husband, brother and sister, grieve not for your dear Kate, but live to meet her in heaven.

Done with the world's vexations,
Done with its toil and toil;
Tired of all earth's mythings,
Heart-sick and ready to sleep;
Ready to bid our friends farewell,
Wondering why they weep;
Passing on, on the shadow
Into eternal day
Why do we call it dying,
This sweet going away?

One who loved her, M—

CARRUTH—Jesse F. Carruth was born May 5, 1811, and departed this life March 23, 1896. He was happily married to Miss Elizabeth Allen, who preceded him to the bright world above. Their union was blessed with ten children, all of whom lived to be grown. Seven still live to mourn their loss. He joined the Methodist Church September, 1835, at a camp meeting near Grensburg, La. He acted steward of Center Creek seven years before he became a member of the church, and continued in that responsible position for many years afterwards, but he became too feeble to do the work. He loved his church, his pastor, and his Lord. His house was the preacher's home, and any weary itinerant preacher has spent refreshing hours under his roof while enjoying his Christian hospitality; but now he is gone. His pastor always found him a true and faithful friend.

He died suddenly, though he had been suffering for a number of years from heart affection. He realized this true condition, and knew that he was able to go at any time. He always expressed himself as being prepared for the change.

He seemed to be his usual health until a few moments before his death. He had just returned home from a visit to his son, and sweetly and calmly passed away to a higher and grander sphere of existence. He was prepared to enter his father's home above.

We pray God's consolation on the children of our dear old friend, and may each one be ready to leave a full assurance of salvation when the Master calls as did the dear ones who have already gone on before.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

If you want knowledge, you must toil for it; if food, you must toil for it, and if pleasure, you must toil for it. Toil is the law. Pleasure comes through toil, and not by self-indulgence and indolence. When one gets to love work, his life's a happy one.—John Ruskin.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good delightful knowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes so unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. C. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures the afflictions as long and severely as I have, is a "verdant greenness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Vitae Sanoni, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

Draughon's Practical Business Colleges, Nashville, Tenn. AND Texarkana, Tex.

Bookkeeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Typewriting, Telegraphy, etc. The most thorough, practical and progressive schools of the kind in the world, and the best patronized ones in the South. Indorsed by bankers, merchants, ministers, and others. Four weeks in bookkeeping with us are equal to twelve weeks by the old plan. Their President is author of "Draughon's New System of Bookkeeping," which cannot be taught in any other school.

$600.00 given to any college if we cannot show more written applications for bookkeepers and stenographers, received in the past twelve months, than any other five Business Colleges in the South, all "combined," can show to have received in the past five years. We expend more money in the interest of our Employment Department than any other Bus. College in Tenn. takes in as tuition. $500.00—Amount we have deposited in bank as a guarantee that we have in the past fulfilled, and will in the future fulfill, our guarantee contracts. HOME STUDY.—We have prepared, especially for home study, books on Bookkeeping, Shorthand and Penmanship. Write for price list.

Prof. Draughon—I now have a position as bookkeeper and stenographer for the Southern Grocery Company, of this place; salary, $75.00 per month. I owe it all to your books on bookkeeping and shorthand prepared for home study.—Irl Armstrong, Pine Bluff, Ark.

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Bible

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

Contains the Following Helps to the Study of the Bible.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

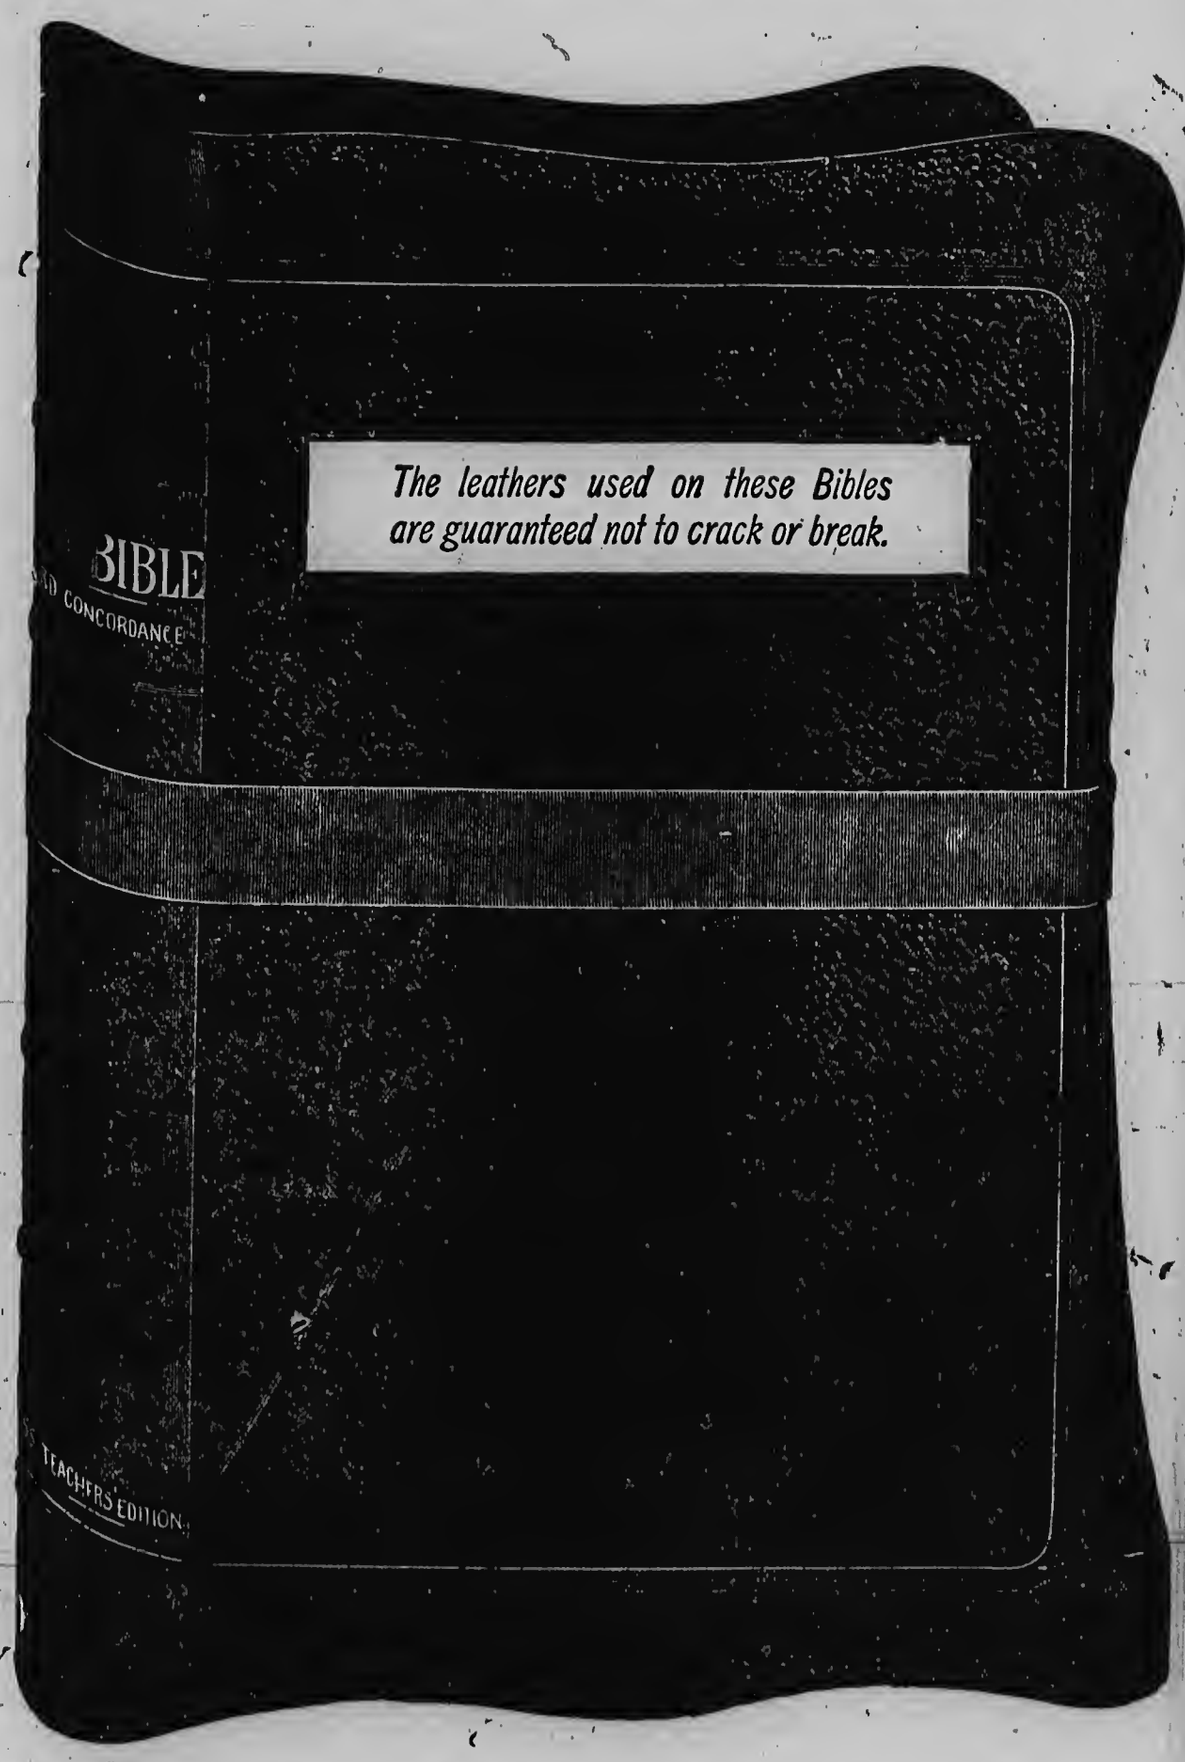
Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"



The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2 35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3 15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1 15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to January, '98 (A little later it will be February, '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

PERUVIANA

Absolutely essential in the successful treatment of Kidney, Liver, Bladder and Urinary Ailments, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Gravel, Gout, Female Irregularities and all diseases caused by neglected Kidney, Bladder and Urinary Ailments.

WHAT IT IS.—Its ingredients are Peruvian herbs, (herbal remedies are Nature's remedies) whose virtues first became known to that distinguished explorer and traveler, Prof. E. D. Mansfield, on a tour of investigation in the mountains of Peru, heuce its name, PERUVIANA.

It has cured case after case of ten to thirty years standing, that had been given up by doctors as hopeless. This wonderful SPECIFIC is founded on nature and supported by common sense.

Dr. Dio Lewis, an acknowledged authority said: "Nineteen diseases out of twenty originate from diseased kidneys." And those who have made pathology a study will agree with the eminent physician in the opinion that where the kidneys are inactive and sluggish, or fail to perform their functions, the whole system becomes enervated and the body diseased.

PERUVIANA has proven itself to be a true specific for all diseases the origin of which can be traced either directly or indirectly to deranged action of the Kidneys and Urinary organs.

The Hon. Walter Cleary, of Kentucky, writes: "It gives me unbounded pleasure, unsolicited, to say to you that your great PERUVIANA is undoubtedly the best Kidney medicine the present century has ever seen. I can truthfully say that after months of suffering three bottles of your wonderful medicine entirely cured me.

Sidney Higgins, of Liberty, Wisconsin, a prominent justice of the Peace, described his sufferings as though knives were being thrust in his Kidneys. PERUVIANA cured him, and he asks for pamphlets that he may scatter the news.

Mrs. Marcia Morse, Columbus, Ohio, writes: "May God bless you! I feel very grateful to you for the good the medicine has done me."

Mr. J. W. King, a prominent farmer at Danville, Ill., writes that it cured him of Bright's Disease which two doctors pronounced incurable. Mrs. Serene Standley, of Shelburn, Ind., writes that she had tried many doctors and remedies and was about to give up in despair when induced to try PERUVIANA, which promptly cured her. Mrs. S. W. Butler, Belle, Tenn.; Miss Alice Ramsey, Glenlock, Tenn., and many other ladies join in testifying to the wonderful restorative and curative effects in all forms of Kidney and kindred ailments and all other serious troubles peculiar to women. Write to us for this Free Gift. IT COSTS YOU NOTHING TO TRY IT.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Georgia Senate has rejected a bill forbidding members of the Legislature accepting railroad passes.

The two recent snow storms in New York City cost the municipality $200 000, and even then the snow was only partly removed.

General G. W. C. Lee has resigned the presidency of the Washington and Lee University on account of ill-health, and has been appointed emeritus president for life.

A bill is to be introduced at the next session of the New York Legislature which provides for the granting of marriage contracts and the prohibition of the so-called common law marriages.

New York doctors have decided that leprosy is not contagions in that climate. The Academy of Medicine adopted a resolution that leprosy, while possibly infectious, is not contagions.

The cadets at West Point have been ordered to attend the presidential inauguration ceremonies. The cadets have not participated in inaugural ceremonies since President Grant's second inauguration.

The railway mileage laid in the United States in the calendar year 1896 was 1892. This was a very small showing, but it was all that could have been expected in so unfavorable a year, and it was less than was laid in any previous year for a long time.

The town of Dudley, Kas., which is said to be the only election precinct in the United States which gave a majority for Palmer and Buckner in the recent election, enjoyed a Christmas dinner at the expense of General Buckner. The town has ten voters.

A tornado struck Mooringsport, La., at 3:30 P. M., on Jan. 2, and blew down nearly every house in the town and killed several people. The residence of J. S. Noel and the Methodist Church have been converted into temporary hospitals. The path of the storm was narrow and short, but terrific in destructiveness.

A new constitutional provision went into operation in New York State with the beginning of this year, requiring that no convicts in the State limits shall be permitted to perform any labor which can come in competition with any other worker. There are in the State's prisons over 3,000 persons under sentence to confinement at hard labor.

Prof. Victor C. Vaughn, of the Michigan University, made a vigorous attack on college athletics at the meeting of the State Teachers' Association of Michigan. He declared that the life of the average college athlete is very short, death ensuing before middle life, the athlete falling a victim to either heart or kidney disease. Football was condemned as brutal, and its prohibition urged.

FOREIGN.

It is said that General Weyler is to be recalled from Cuba, and will be succeeded by Captain-General Primo De Rivera, once Secretary of War of Spain.

The non-union laborers who have taken the places of the Hamburg strikers are themselves threatening to strike unless they are paid 7 marks a day for day work and 14 marks for night work.

The demand for American hard woods in Europe is growing, and oak leads the foreign shipments, although tulip, poplar, ash, gum and black walnut, whenever a good quality can be secured, are in some demand.

Senor Quesada, the representative of the Cuban government at Washington, has said: "The talk of Spanish concessions to Cuba is a fraud. It is gotten up for the purpose of affecting public sentiment in this country and to prevent action by Congress on the Cameron resolutions. There is no intention on the part of Spain to grant autonomy to Cuba. Insurmountable difficulties are in the way of such a settlement of the Cuban question, and there is no intention on the part of Spain to offer autonomy. Cuba will accept nothing but independence."

I have used Mul-en-ol, and find it good for many things, but especially for cutaneous diseases, cuts, burns, and corns. In every case it has been eminently successful and satisfactory. I do not want to be without it in my family. Please send it right away, and oblige, Yours truly,

News has been received from a reliable source in Mexico City that the Mexican government has authorized Minister Romero at Washington to enter into a treaty with the United States for the construction of an international dam and reservoir across the Rio Grande just above El Paso. Mexico, it is understood, has waived all claims to damages. This dam will irrigate more than 200,000 acres of land in the valley on both sides of the river below El Paso, and will give to El Paso and Juarez 50,000 horse-power water power each.

A Thing Worth Knowing.

No need of cutting off a woman's breast or a man's chin or nose in a vain attempt to cure cancer. No use of applying burning plasters to the flesh and torturing those already weak from suffering. Soothing, balmy, aromatic oils are safe, speedy and certain cure. The most horrible forms of cancer of the face, breast, womb, mouth, stomach, large tumors, ugly ulcers, fistula, catarrh; terrible skin diseases, etc., are all successfully treated by the application of various forms of simple oil. Send for a book mailed free, giving particulars and prices of oils. Address DR. D. M. BYE, Indianapolis, Ind. [Cut this out and send to some suffering one.]

I have used the "Mul-en-ol" for several years and can testify to its efficacy in "Colds," "Sore Throat," and especially in applying it externally for Rheumatism. Several friends have found it almost immediate relief in Rheumatism. I have personal experience as to its healing properties in "Colds" and the throat diseases.

RETROSPECT OF THE YEAR.

BY JOHN NEWTON.

While, with ceaseless course, the sun
Hasted through the circling year,
Many souls their race have run,
Nevermore to meet us here;
Fix'd in an eternal state,
They have done with all below;
We a little longer wait,
But how little—none can know.

As the winged arrow flies
Speedily the mark to find;
As the lightning from the skies
Darts, and leaves no trace behind;
Swiftly thus our fleeting days
Bear us down life's rapid stream;
Upward, Lord, our spirit raise;
All below is but a dream.

Thanks for mercies past receive;
Pardon of our sins renew;
Teach us henceforth how to live
With eternity in view;
Bless thy word to young and old,
Fill us with a Savior's love;
And when life's short tale is told,
May we dwell with him above.

IN MEMORIAM.

William Edgar Enochs.

BY BISHOP CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

William Edgar Enochs was born Sept. 19, 1865, and died in Jackson, Miss., Oct. 14, 1896. His birthplace was Copiah county, Miss., and he was among the youngest of a large and interesting family group. Under a Christian roof was he born, and in a thoroughly Christian home was he tenderly reared. His parents were Methodists of a pronounced and hardy type. From a child was he acquainted with the Scriptures, and learned to love those principles of rugged honesty and staintess integrity that made his short life at once example and an evangel.

What a school of character is a Christian farm! Aloof from the vanishments and insincerity of city life, it affords the best conditions for the nurture and culture of those virtues that give beauty and greatness to character. In such a wholesome atmosphere and amid such helpful conditions was Edgar Enochs fitted and furnished for the high responsibilities of life. His nature was as transparent as the light that shone about him; his heart was as open as the soft skies that bent in benediction over his country home, and his temper as sweet and cheery as the rapid stream that made music in its way through the neighboring fields and forests. He was a stranger to deceit, and knew not how to be indirect or diplomatic.

He was a dutiful son. Reverence for his parents and ready obedience to their wishes became a habit and a law; and when at length the claims of business and the evident leadings of Providence necessitated his removal to another community, no sons were so happy as those spent in the old home and in loving ministries to his aged parents. Such reverence for fatherhood is one of the chief elements in a true manhood. The venerable father who wept at the early grave of his noble boy had many precious memories of his unchanged and unfailing filial devotion. He was a model brother. I have often been at a loss which most to admire—his dutifulness as a son, or his tender attachments as a brother. In that circle of brothers jealousy seems never to have entered, and the interest of one is the pleasure of all. In honor they prefer one another. When the hand of affliction fell heavily upon Edgar his comfort and welfare became the tenderest solicitude of them all, and to such unselfish love no heart ever made more generous response.

He was happily married to Miss Loda McClellan, an accomplished young woman in every way worthy of so noble a husband. But their married life embraced only three short years, and much of that time he was an invalid. For two years and more she kept ceaseless vigils by his bed, and freely did all that human love could do or suffer in order to stay the sad hour of parting. He went to St. Louis and other cities for the best medical counsel, and to San Antonio, El Paso, Colorado Springs and Denver for healing climate. But the insidious disease made steady progress. One brother and his faithful young wife accompanied him everywhere. And for this tender ministry he was most lovingly grateful. I had the pleasure of visiting him in Colorado Springs about two months before his death, and to note his beautiful ripening for the grave. He spoke so gratefully of the attentions received, and then his large black eyes would fill with tears that spoke more eloquently than any words that ever fell from human lips.

I was especially impressed with his perfect resignation. Not a murmur ever escaped his lips. He saw his young life slowly fading out—his sun going down before it was yet noon—but never complained of the mysterious Providence. He said: "I have committed it all into the hands of God. What he wills is best." And thus, in certain hope of a part in the first resurrection, he peacefully spent his last days, and triumphantly entered into life. The chaplain of the sanitarium in Denver wrote a beautiful tribute to his Christian faith and character, and a physician in El Paso who attended him thus closed a letter to one of his brothers: "When I'm called home, if I can go as has gone your beloved brother, I shall not think it has been in vain to have lived."

I count it a privilege to have known and shared the friendship of this noble young man. He had virtues that attracted me, a splendid character that commanded my admiration, and a religious experience that really became an inspiration. To him and his blessed memory I acknowledge indebtedness for a new and more radiant view of the Christian life.

Jackson, Miss.

"Some Things" Some One Else "Don't Like."

Choir members, as a rule, are well behaved. Occasionally we find one whose deportment is not as it should be, but they are rara avis. Their conduct should be particularly exemplary, because of the conspicuousness of their positions. Constant whispering, turning the leaves of the music books, or any conduct calculated to attract attention, is, as a matter of course, to be condemned and promptly suppressed; and it devolves upon the pastor to see that such things are not allowed to continue. Why, if we had some one in our choir who made a practice of misbehaving during services, it would never occur to me to tell the brethren all over the country about the matter through the columns of my Conference organ, with a view to abating the evil; but I would make complaint to my pastor, or, under suitable circumstances, appeal directly to the offender. The fact that there are persons in the choir who misbehave can not, under any circumstances, be considered an argument in favor of abolishing the choir, as some appear to think (judging from their prorupticns); nor is it a reason why it should be moved from its prominent position to seats on the front benches. As well say turn the church-buildings into places of business, and let all the preachers go to selling goods, or practicing law or medicine, or following some other mercantile pursuit or secular profession, because some church member swears, or plays cards, or otherwise does violence to the sacred vows which he assumed when he joined the church. There is just as much reason in the one as in the other, which is equivalent to saying there is no reason at all in either. But people whose prejudices dominate their better judgment so far as to control their utterances are not at all likely to be found occupying a position in which they are supported and sustained by logical and philosophical argument.

It is unquestionably true of those persons who are opposed to choirs, and to the use of the various instruments which are being introduced into so many of our churches as vocal auxiliaries—those who "don't believe in praising God by machinery"—that they are likewise opposed to progressive changes of any kind whatever in our forms of worship. They think there are no times like "old times;" no methods like those sanctioned by the practice and approval of gone and forgotten generations; and they promptly and vigorously object to any departure therefrom, and condemn any effort at improvement thereon as a sacrilege and a reflection on themselves and their ancestors. And in every instance of this character the individual claims to be acting with an eye single to the glory of God and the best interests of his cause among men, while the truth of the matter is, they are glad to see our Lord's interests prosper, glad to see the church revived, glad to see sinners brought to Christ, if they can see these things accomplished by methods and instrumentalities that coincide with their notions of the way in which such things ought to be done. We have not many of this class among us, but one in a congregation may appropriately be compared to an offensive blossom hidden away in the midst of a bouquet of fragrant roses. But no one comparison can be made sufficiently comprehensive to do the subject justice. I have known a little handful of such people to divide a church. In one instance which comes to mind one old brother and one old sister, who were tottering on the brink of eternity—and a blissful eternity I have every reason to believe, for their lives were rich in good works—lifted up their voices in opposition to instrumental music at a camp meeting. The arrangements for making music for the services had been about perfected when these two old people began to talk. Before they had talked long their children and children's children, and the children of a good many of their family connections, notwithstanding they were in sympathy with the existing arrangements, and felt that to carry them out would be best for the meeting, fell victims to the idea that the wishes of this old couple ought to be respected regardless of all else. By the time for the first service there were two factions on the camp grounds, heated arguments were indulged in, a good many unkind things were said, and much bitter feeling resulted. The singing throughout was the poorest ever heard on any camp ground; the preachers seemed wanting in earnestness and their sermons in power; the prayers apparently fell back into the straw (in some instances being arguments addressed to the Lord "for" or "against" music), and the meeting was a miserable failure. Now, tell me who drove the Spirit away in this instance?

Correspondence.

South Carolina Letter.

BY WATSON B. DUNCAN.

The South Carolina Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held its one hundred and eleventh session in the Methodist Church at Abbeville, S. C., Dec. 9–14, 1896. Bishop John C. Granbery, of Ashland, Va., presided with his usual suavity and acceptability. The Conference was opened with the celebration of the Lord's Supper. The Bishop was assisted in the celebration thereof by Rev. Messrs. S. A. Weber, W. C. Power, J. B. Campbell, and John M. Carlisle.

Rev. E. O. Watson, who has been our efficient secretary ever since the transfer of Dr. H. F. Chreitzberg to the Western North Carolina Conference, was re-elected, with Rev W. L. Waite as assistant. Dr. S. Lander, who had been our statistical secretary for many years, and who had so faithfully served us in that capacity, had to resign on account of other pressing duties, and Rev. S. H. Zimmerman was elected in his stead, with Revs. T. C. Ligon, A. J. Cauthen, Jr., and M. B. Kelly assistants. These are all young men, with the exception of one brother who has some "silver threads among the gold." He, however, is not hurt with age.

Abbeville, as your readers know, is quite a historic spot. In this town still stands the old house in which the Confederacy was born and from which the funeral services thereof were conducted. "Requiescat in pace." One of the citizens said to your correspondent that Hon. Jefferson Davis was the only thing in the shape of a President that he had ever seen. If Doctor Hoss were to visit Abbeville, he might get some material for the (un) interesting discussion he now has with some of the brethren "beyond the line" in regard to Mr. Davis and that mother-hubbard.

The Conference was a pleasant occasion from beginning to end. The weather was fine and the hospitality of the people was unstinted. A fine spirit pervaded the entire body and left its influence upon the whole community.

A large class of promising young men were received into full connection, and another good class was admitted on trial. There seems to be no dearth of preaching material in the "Old Palmetto State." We had unusual privileges in the way of visits from the connectional officers and visiting brethren. Dr. S. A. Steel, Secretary of the Epworth League, was on hand and delighted the Conference by his addresses and sermon. He gave us his famous lecture on "The Pioneers of Methodism," which for fiery eloquence and superb diction would be hard to surpass. His sermon at the Presbyterian Church, on Sunday morning, was a masterpiece of sublime eloquence, which, notwithstanding it was in a Presbyterian Church, closed with an old time Methodist shout. It was rather amusing to see our brethren of the Calvinistic faith surrounded by a shouting Methodist crowd. One brother said he had just as soon have a freight train run over him, while another said that had the Methodists kept it up much longer, he would have been shouting, too. Doctor J. L. Girardeau, the most eminent Presbyterian minister in the State, was preaching upon one occasion and became so filled with divine joy that he stopped in the midst of the sermon and exclaimed: "Oh, for some good old Methodist to say, Amen." It is needless to say that we were pleased with Doctor Steel. It is a great pity that as smart a man as he is should become "cranky" on some questions.

Dr. J. J. Tigert also preached and talked to the edification of the brethren. His sermon on Sunday night was a fine specimen of his logical productions. If he did not carry away many subscriptions to the Methodist Review, it was not his fault.

Doctor Atkins also convinced us that we have a worthy successor to our much-lamented Kirkland.

In the absence of Doctor Bigham, Secretary General Board of Education, Dr. A. Coke Smith, "Our Coke," represented that interest. I need not say that his speech pleased us—he always pleases. We are glad that "Old Virginy" is taking good care of our loan. We expect to demand his return, with interest, in the near future.

Another pleasant feature of the Conference was the visit and speech of Dr. E. R. Young, of Toronto. He charmed the Conference with some of his thrilling experiences among the Indians of Northwest Canada. The Doctor extended a cordial invitation to the body to attend the Epworth League to be held in Toronto next July.

There were quite a number of changes among our preachers—about one hundred. Of course, where so many changes had to be made, some ones had to suffer. Some of the brethren were badly hurt.

The reports from our Conference institutions showed healthy progress. Wofford College was never in better condition. Columbia Female College is doing most excellent work. Dr. J. A. Rice, the president, deserves great credit for putting the institution where it is. Our other schools are in fine condition. The Epworth Orphanage, the enterprise opened up at our last session, is in good condition, and plans are being made to enlarge the capacity and more fully equip the institution for efficient work.

At the memorial service, memoirs of the following brethren were read: S. Leard, J. A. Mood, C. H. Pritchard, W. D. Kirkland, and T. Rayser. Lack of space and time forbids my telling your readers of the heroes of the cross who died in the triumph of the faith which they had so faithfully preached and courageously defended.

"Servants of God, well done."

Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to you, Mr. Editor, and to all your readers!

"Christmas Revivals."

I send the first note of victory from the district, and perhaps from the Conference, since our late session at Greenville. On Christmas Day we began a meeting in Wood Street, and continued until the following Wednesday night. We then moved to Main Street, and continued until Sunday night, third instant. The meeting was a real good one—not a dull service from start to finish. Twenty or more were converted at the altar, and as many, and perhaps more, will join the two churches. These "Christmas revivals" are of great value to the church, not only in restraining from questionable amusements, but in preparing the membership for the work of the year. Bro. McIntosh was with us most of the time and did good service. Prospects for a good year all over the district, fine.

A Great Man's Motto.

It is said of the great Swedish botanist and scientist, Linnæus, that he had placed over his door the motto, "Live innocently, God is present." Linnæus was a busy man, and during his life classified and named all the known plants and animals of the earth, besides writing a great many books on plants, natural history and science; but he knew where to look for success, and believed that the only useful life was a Christian life. Beginning in poverty, he was lifted above want by his marked success in his profession, and he often told his friends that he was grateful to God only for the great success he had attained, counting his own work nothing compared with the assistance God had given him.—W. M. Smith.

There is one style of preaching that is vastly more effective than any other, and that is the irresistible eloquence of a pure, manly, noble, and unselfish life. "My pastor's discourses are not very brilliant," said an intelligent lady, "but his daily life is a sermon all the week." The "living epistle" of Paul was as sublime and convincing as any words that fell from his lips on the hill of Mars; for Jesus Christ lived in him.—Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

"ON WINGS OF FAITH."

BY JOSEPH STRAUSIAN.

On wings of faith mount up, my soul, and rise!
View thine inheritance beyond the skies;
Nor heart can think, nor mortal tongue can tell,
What endless pleasures in those mansions dwell:
There our Redeemer lives, all bright and glorious;
O'er sin, and death and hell, he reigns victorious.

One distant glimpse my eager passion fires!
Jesus, to thee my longing soul aspires!
When shall I at my heavenly home arrive?
When leave this earth, and when begin to live?
For there my Savior lives, all bright and glorious;
O'er sin, and death and hell, he reigns victorious.

Self-Denial.

Self-denial is the opposite of selfishness. Selfishness looks with perverted eyes on wealth and its supposed benefits as more to be desired and possessed than the favor of God. The young man who came to Christ to inquire what he should do to inherit eternal life selfishly regarded the financial power, the social importance and the luxurious indulgences of wealth as the chief good, and better than eternal life; so he went away "sad and grieved" when he heard of the self-denial that was demanded of him. Riches stood between him and God, and had to be got out of his way before he could obey the first and great command, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart."

Selfishness is one of the most universal and odious outcroppings of depraved human nature. St. Paul tells us that in the "last days perilous times shall come," characterized by various flagrant developments of human depravity. The first which he mentions is, that "Men shall be lovers of their own selves." Self-love, while restrained within legitimate and temperate limits, is a proper and useful affection. It is indeed made the measure of our love to our neighbor "as ourselves"—that is, to do as we would be done by, or simply even justice; but perverted self love, or such extreme selfishness as leads men to wish to be gods, and have themselves adored; selfishness that seeks its own, and its own only, and often seeks it at the ruinous cost of others. Now, it is this evil tendency of perverted self-love in depraved human nature that makes self-denial essential to salvation. Let us note some of the more obvious evils that flow from a refusal to practice self-denial. The miserable drunkard, who, rather than deny himself the indulgence of his criminal and destructive appetite, will see his devoted wife broken-hearted, his children ignorant and in rags, and perishing for bread. So the utterly selfish saloonist, so he may live easy and obtain money without labor, will sell by retail in his poisonous stimulants what he knows to be in effect disease, poverty, broken hearts, blasted hopes, crime, shame, death, and hell, for "no drunkard hath eternal life." He sees all this as the outcome of his most hurtful business, yet selfishly sells on to his fast-ruined victims. So the remorseless capitalist selfishly takes advantage of men's necessities, and grinds the faces of the helpless poor, that he may add to his hoarded store. So the selfish, ambitious conqueror drives his remorseless war chariot axle deep through blood and crushing bones to place and power.

In the plan of salvation self-denial is made imperative in order to pardon and heaven. "Let the wicked man forsake his way," whatever his special form of sinning may be, "and the unrighteous man his thoughts," whatever his wrong theories and policies that have antagonized God's plan. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." No matter what the selfish, godless indulgence may be: no matter how common, how respectable, or how profitable, if it stands between you and God, you must give it up at once and forever, or give up the hope of heaven. But, further, the man who would follow Christ must give up and deny himself some things that have only the appearance of evil, and, still further, he must deny himself and give up some things which he knows to be innocent and harmless to him, if it is found such things are cause of stumbling, and may cause a soul to be lost. For proof, read this: The great apostle, under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, says that "an idol is nothing in the world," nothing real; yet, if eating meat offered to one of these imaginary gods causes some "weak brother to perish, he would eat no more (such) meat forever." Such was his conception of the duty and importance of self-denial. His standard was not too high. We should follow him as he followed Christ, "who pleased not himself, but came to seek and save the lost."

All this may be a cross to us, but we must take it up, and follow Christ, if we would be saved. Do not think this too much, for "what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and its sinful pleasures, if he lose his soul?" Whatever, then, our "ways" or "thoughts" may be, if they antagonize God and stand between him and us, they must be denied, or we must fail of heaven. Alas! how many will not refrain from their "ways" and "thoughts!" Too frivolous to be serious enough to pray; too fond of costly displays and expensive amusements to have anything to give to God or worthy charities; too fond of ease and self-indulgence to work for God; too fond of the world's smiles and favor to honor and acknowledge Christ "before men." Such shall be "sad and grieved" when they shall hear the soul-crushing words, "Depart, I know you not." The doors are shut; it will be vain to knock again.

All such as refuse to deny themselves in order that they may be blest, and a blessing to others, shall remember, when too late, they had their "good things," and kept them; but those that have denied themselves of ease and luxuries to help to alleviate want, ignorance, and suffering, shall hear the blessed words, "Well done; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Of Friendship.

MR. EDITOR: The reading of your editorial on "Deceased Friendships" gave pain. The following observations of an old author, with which you are no doubt familiar, are more consoling. I send them not in the spirit of criticism, but as a suggestion. The version is that adopted by Miss Mulock in "A Life for a Life."

People do not sufficiently remember that in every relation of life, as in the closest one of all, they ought to take one another "for better, for worse." That, granting the ties of friendship, gratitude or esteem be strong enough to have existed at all, it ought, either actively or passively, to exist forever. And seeing we can, at best, know our neighbor, companion or friend as little as, alas! we often find he knoweth of us, it behooveth us to treat him with the most patient fidelity, the tenderest forbearance; granting to all his words and actions that we do not understand the utmost limit of faith which common sense and Christian justice will allow. Nay, these failing, is there not still left Christian charity?

The true theory of friendship is this—once a friend, always a friend. But, answerest thou, doth not every day's practice give the lie to that doctrine? Many, if not most friendships, be like a glove, that, however well fitting at first, doth by constant use wax loose and ungainly, if it doth not quite wear out. And others, not put off and on, but close to a man as his own skin and flesh, are yet liable to become diseased; he may have to lose them, and live on without them, as after the lopping off of a limb, or the blinding of an eye. And, likewise, there be friendships which a man groweth out of, naturally and blamelessly, even as out of his childclothes; the which, though no longer suitable for his needs, he keepeth religiously, unforgotten and undestroyed, and often visiteth with a kindly tenderness, though he knoweth they can cover and warm him no more. All these instances do clearly prove that a friend is not always a friend.

Yea, quoth Fidelis, he is. Not in himself, maybe, but unto thee. The future and the present are thine and his; the past is beyond ye both—an unalienable possession, a bond never disannulled. Ye may let it slip, of natural disuse; throw it aside as worn-out and foul; cut it off, cover it up, and bury it; but it hath been, and, therefore, in one sense forever must be. Transmutation is the law of all mortal things; but, so far as we know, there is not, and will not be—until the great day of the second death—in the whole universe any such thing as annihilation.

And so take heed. Deceive not thyself, saying that because a thing is not, it never was. Respect thyself—thine old self as well as thy new. Be faithful to thyself, and to all that ever was thine. Thy friend is always thy friend. Not to have or to hold, to love or rejoice in, but to remember.

And if it befall thee, as befalleth most, that in course of time nothing will remain for thee, except to remember, be not afraid! Hold fast that which was thine—it is thine forever. Deny it not—despise it not; respect its secrets—be silent over its wrongs. And, so kept, it shall never lie like a dead thing in thy heart, corrupting and breeding corruption there, as dead things do. Bury it, and go thy way. It may chance that, one day, long hence, then shalt come suddenly upon the grave of it—and behold! it is dewy-green!

Macon, Miss.

Rev. Pinkney Moore.

MR. EDITOR: I see an obituary in your paper, of Sept. 10, of Rev. Pinkney Moore, in which his conversion in a meeting that we held at Muttona Springs, Miss., is mentioned. We remember this meeting quite vividly, of eleven days' duration, in which Pinkney, with many others, were awakened and converted. His heart-breaking, loose experience from the world was by no means painless. Days and nights of deep anguish were passed before he reached the point of complete surrender to God in a saving faith. We were in bed with him by previous arrangement the night that he was reconciled to God, that we might render such assistance as human instruments may do in saving a soul. About midnight spiritual life in its new-birth form had a beginning in Pinkney's soul. His translation from spiritual death to life was complete and satisfying. And to hear, as we have by the kindness of a friend, that his subsequent life and triumphant death have furnished the final and all-important test of the genuineness of his spiritual change, strengthened us with strength in our soul. This news transported us through our ministerial life, especially in Mississippi, in awakened memories of similar events of souls converted and saved, that stirred our heart in its profoundest depths. The greatest strain upon a minister's faith and life, as disclosed in our experience, lies in the fact that much of his work is of necessity concealed from him. The effects of the Word is often carried through years before conversion is reached as an ostensible redemptive fact. This the minister may not know, for the subject of its operation is often ignorant of its source. To sow, sow, without adequate, ostensible results, imposes no ordinary strain upon human faith; yet the minister of God's Word must continue to sow, and that, too, for immediate fruit, or his sowing will not be as "bread cast upon the waters, that may be gathered many days hence." Much of this sowing has entered into our experience and observation since the day that we left the Conference at Crystal Springs, Miss., whither we had gone together with the now-sainted Rev. C. F. Gillespie, with delegated authority to effect a union of the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church with the Mississippi Conference of the M. E. Church, South, lay representation having been admitted into that church, which was the chief thing that caused the irritation and final separation in 1828, and which Bishop Whiteman said, in a talk before our Conference at Helena, Montana, "was shaking the tree before the fruit was ripe." This was true, and it may be assumed as true also that this early shaking of the tree caused the fruit to ripen sooner than it otherwise would have done. When we reached Montana in '71 it was soon apparent that there were several facts in its life that time, with its gospel-directing agencies, must remove before the field would be "white unto harvest." We had occasion to call the attention of Bishop Marvin to this fact in '72, to disabuse his mind of the impression that Montana was a field ready for sheaf-gathering, that was produced there by rose colored letters from over sanguine parties in Montana. In this fact we have the reason why many ministers of ours and other churches left Montana and went back to the States where reaping, with its inspiring sheaves, came closer to seed-time than facts in Western life would permit. They had evidently mistaken the nature of the service that the Master's cause demanded in Montana; but the seed has been sown, and the reaping has commenced, and the promise that both he that soweth and they that reapeth shall rejoice together is the common heritage of the laborers. No grander work has man been intrusted with than that of pioneer church work, in shaping the destiny of coming commonwealths, though it is one that requires no ordinary faith and moral courage to perform. This service the missionary has performed for all peoples where he has faithfully sown the gospel seed. It is far more glorious to be at the source of life, to aid, under God, in directing its outgoings, than that of gathering such of its fruits as may be obtained from its organized and developed resources. If we were young again, we would prefer to spend our life upon the mission field in preaching where others have not preached. Since God's Word grows, let our work be that of sowing it in virgin soil, where its roots strike deep down into the life of a people.

There are facts, Mr. Editor, in the life of a people, a community often, that time, with its agents, under the hallowing influence of the gospel, must remove, before large ingatherings into the church may be expected.

A MESSAGE.

BY REV. B. F. WHITE.

Dedicated to the members of the Louisiana Annual Conference, of the M. E. Church, South.

Go! go! ye messengers of peace,
Shout the news of earth's release:
From the thraldom of its shame,
Through a risen Savior's name.

Fly! fly! ye messengers of love,
Be to man hope's precious dove;
Silver-pinioned! speed with truth,
For the aged and the youth.

Haste! haste! ye messengers of life,
'Mid the battle and the strife!
Tell! O tell! of conquered death,
Conquered grave, with quickened breath.

Quick! quick! ye good angels, fly,
And tell to all beneath the sky,
That there is a life above,
A grander life, of truth and love.

Shout! shout! to all upon the earth
The wondrous fact, of Jesus' birth;
Tell them, too, that Jesus died,
That he for man was crucified.

Tell them that he rose again,
That he rose to always reign;
That each and all may find in him
Salvation from all shame and sin.

Woman's Missionary Advocate, November—Mrs. Trueheart's report: 6 auxiliaries organized during quarter. New adult: Hillsboro, 17 members; Bahala Church, Tyrus postoffice, 34 members. Juvenile: Little Capitol Workers, Jackson, 17 members. The leaflet, "Cripple Tom," published in this number, may also be had in tract form at two cents each by sending to Mrs. S. C. Trueheart, Nashville, Tenn. Adamantine the heart that can not be touched and nerved to duty by reading carefully this pathetic story.

From a letter, Mrs. R. R. Parker, First Church Auxiliary, Jackson: We are going to observe the Week of Prayer and wind up with a thanksgiving service Sunday night in our missionary work. We have organized a new Auxiliary at Millsaps College with 20 members.

Miss Addie Marshall: The Brookhaven auxiliary has held one public meeting since June, and we will hold another next Sunday night (Nov. 15). The interest seems to be increasing.

"Missionary Entertainment—Dedicated to the young people of the M. E. Church, South, by Mrs. R. R. Parker." Miss Marshall desires attention called to this javenile programme, presented to the Conference by Mrs. R. R. Parker. Some time ago in our column we commended in high terms these productions of our sister. Mrs. Trueheart is so much pleased with this programme that she says she will use it all over her territory. Some of our members are familiar with her poem, "Rosebud of Richmond," many remember "The Alabaster Box;" these form a part. It is very fine. Those who know her will fully appreciate this gift. It is doubly dear to us who know her, for to know her is to love her. This consecrated, warm-hearted, earnest, true worker in many portions of the Master's vineyard, doing with her might what her hands find to do, will cause many to arise and call her blessed when the "great day, for which all other days were made," comes.

Our pastors would do well to encourage the use of this programme in public meetings. It is wholesome entertainment for all. No gaudy costumes, no entrance fee, no pay suppers provided for. The good Methodistic collection method can be used. Send at once to Mrs. R. R. Parker, Jackson, Miss., for a copy.

Earnest, faithful work should be done during this last quarter among the young people and juveniles. Much of a worldly nature will tempt them now. After protracted meetings are over Satan works diligently to destroy the good accomplished. Those gathered into the fold and those awakened from their lethargy, especially the young people, expect to be put to work.

We know a member of our society who was indifferent to the cause, but was selected as delegate to an annual meeting of the W. F. M. Society. Upon returning home she expressed great delight, was very enthusiastic, worked as she had never done, wishing that she could work as some she saw there. Missionary zeal is contagious. Can we not, as individuals, work as enthusiastically at home as at the annual meetings?

A quotation in Review of Missions from Dr. Maclaren: "Many truths may be taught coolly, and some must be; but in religious matters arguments wrought in frost are powerless, and earnestness approaching to passion is the all-conquering force. A teacher who is afraid to show his feelings, or who has no feelings to show, will never gather many disciples." Under the same caption, "The Missionary Himself," after enumerating qualifications, mentions: "Perfect consecration to God and the work. I place the emphasis on 'consecration to God.' I have known some who were wholly consecrated to their work, but not to God; having a kind of slavish fear and popish idea about the work.... The true missionary presents his body a living sacrifice to God, and says, 'This one thing I do.' ....I doubt not there are many that look for nothing beyond consecration, and lose sight of the inward work of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Ghost is to be received as the highest qualification for the work....I do not mean by this that a man is to seek until he receives an impulse of the Spirit that continues during the night and passes away like the morning dew....I do not mean that a man gains a temporary victory over self and Satan and the world, and then has to renew the old struggle without victory. But I do mean that by a perfect consecration to God and a personal trust in Christ Jesus he receives the abiding power and indwelling grace of the Holy Ghost."

Life a Preparation for Life.

The old religious attitude toward this present earthly life was one of extreme seriousness, mingled with indifference and contempt. The feeling was a strange one. Life, in a certain aspect, was momentous and valuable beyond all compute. In another aspect it was utterly contemptible and worthless. Thus we see the old-time Christian pleading with all his soul the value of the present hour, the present moment of existence, as an opportunity for repentance; and then, when Christ was accepted and salvation sealed, putting so small an estimate upon the remainder of the earthly life as scarcely to make it worth the holding. To die was gain to the Christian under the old theology and philosophy of life.

But with new light and broader interpretation both of the Scriptures and of human life, new views of the sacredness and value of our present earthly existence have arisen. And, above all, there has come into the thought of the age a nobler conception of what this present life is for. According to the old theology and the old preaching, it was to prepare men for death. But the new spiritual interpretation says: "Nay, life is to prepare us for life. We are not to consider its mission performed when it has brought us into a right attitude concerning Christ and salvation—so that, so far as the future is concerned, we might as well die then. Life is inexpressibly sacred and significant up to its very last moment of earthly duration, because it is the continuous and progressive preparation for a larger and nobler life to come."

Life for life—not life for death—that is the grander message of the religion of to-day. It is not as well for you hereafter if you merely accept Christ and salvation in this world, and wait for heaven in which to climb your Pisgah heights of spiritual growth and blessedness. Begin the divine life now—be an angel here! That is the nobler, grander, wiser message of the preacher of to-day. Life is not given you to prepare for death any more than day is given you to prepare for night. You do not work that you may sleep; you sleep that you may work.

Think of each hour of your present existence as so much added hold upon eternal, progressive life. Think of each deed as the beginning of an endless series of deeds like it—life leading up to life, unbroken, homogeneous, one in purpose, in meaning, in power! Just accepting salvation is no more what this life was given you for, than just saying, "I will," is the keeping and consummation of the moral law. Life now, life then, life forever, is a preparation for life to come. There is no such thing as spiritual inertia in the universe. Christ says, "Come," but after that he says, "Go—go ye into the whole world;" and so by noble, helpful living prepare, not for the hour of death, but for the noon of celestial service which is to come.—Zion's Herald.

Everything in nature is "on time," the sunrise and sunset, the seasons, the coming and going of the birds, the opening and shutting of the flowers, the tides, and the planetary revolutions. Nature never wastes a moment nor leaves an opportunity unimproved. Even the small cranny of the rock has room for a bunch of soil, a drop of dew, a flower with its dash of color, and the grateful incense of its aroma, which daily sends upward to its Maker.

We should find great peace if we would imbue ourselves with the thought—that we are here solely to accomplish the will of God, that the will is accomplished from day to day, and that he who dies leaving his work unfinished is just as far advanced in the eyes of Supreme Justice as he who has leisure to accomplish it fully.—Ozanam.

Great thoughts lift us, as on angels' wings, above the trivial things of the present hour. Visited by them the toiler amid the city's din may catch some faint echoes of celestial music, and the poor man walk with the "dead and sceptered sovereigns who rule us from their graves."

To become like Christ is the only thing in the world worth caring for, the thing before which every ambition of man is folly and all low achievement vain. Those only who make this quest the supreme desire and passion of their lives can ever begin to hope to reach it.—Drummond.

Who is a true man? He who does the truth, and never holds a principle on which he is not prepared in any hour to act, and in any hour to risk the consequences of holding it.—Thomas Carlyle.

Christian men ought to be able to differ in opinion and still be brethren in sentiment and feeling. Quarreling Christians need no anxious attention from Satan—they are already in his employ.

It is only by labor that thought can be made healthy, and only by thought that labor can be made happy; and the two can not be separated with impunity.—Ruskin.

Hope never hurt anyone, nor yet interfered with duty; nay, always strengthens to the performance of duty, gives courage, and clears the judgment.—Macdonald.

The main token of a strong character is not to make known every change and phase in thought and feeling, but to give the world the finished results.

When you go home fill the house with joy, so that the light of it may stream out of the windows and doors, and illuminate even the darkness.

Overcoming a difficulty changes it into a blessing.

To Whom it May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. Black,

HEART ECHOES.

BY CLIFFORD R. JONES.

Tired, so tired, dear Jesus,
Of the world's cold scorn;
Kneeling with bleeding heart
This fair Xmas morn.

Crushed, so crushed, dear Jesus,
By cruel words and jeers;
Looking to thee for grace
Through blinding, burning tears.

Worn, so worn, dear Jesus,
By weary days of pain;
Sipping the dregs of sorrow
Dying souls to gain.

Bruised, so bruised, dear Jesus,
Still clinging to thee;
Following thy footprints
Through dark Gethsemane.

Burdened, so burdened, dear Jesus,
By the weight of the cross,
Yet loving it dearly,
Knowing all else is dross.

Glad, so glad, dear Jesus,
That thou wast born,
In a rude manger
That blessed Christmas morn.

Happy, so happy, dear Jesus,
With thy love divine;
Telling to others the secret
Of that joy of mine.

Peaceful, so peaceful, dear Jesus,
Midst the care and strife;
Resting in thy loving arms
Through this glorious life.

MR. EDITOR: You are not troubled often with perusing productions of my pen for publication. But it is the close of the year, and many of my friends have been wanting to hear from me and to know what I am doing, I thought I would just write a few lines.

Well, I will say, first, I have regained my health, which is very joyous to me. I have been constantly at work during the year, preaching, exhorting, praying, singing, shouting, studying. I have traveled over a great many miles preaching the precious Word of truth, and have always found the people ready and eager to hear the sweet old story of the cross, simply told. Doors have opened for me to work on every hand—always more work on hand than I could do. The Lord has blessed me wonderfully in my labors to advance his kingdom, beyond my highest expectations. I have witnessed through my efforts about 1,500 souls converted and saved. Have taken into our church between five and six hundred members. I have preached on an average of 2 times a day; have traveled thousands of miles; preached in high-steeple and low-steeple churches, and no-steeple school-houses, cross-roads, on the streets, in the groves, under tents and tabernacles, to the white and to the colored people.

So you see, Doctor, I have not been idle if I am not in the traveling connection. I love the church and all her institutions. I love the bishops, presiding elders and pastors. I have nothing but good to say about many of them. They are all my friends so far as I know. If they are not, I don't want to know it. I think our pastors are the grandest set of men on earth. The good Lord bless them. Somehow I have always been able to find enough to say and sing enough to fight without having to fight preachers or my church. I have been criticised, misrepresented and misunderstood a great many times. I just turn the matter over to the Lord and press on for the prize. I have no reputation to look after, and don't want any—all I want is a place to serve my Lord.

The Lord has graciously blessed and kept my soul. I have had seasons of great refreshing from God's presence. I am getting stronger and "growing in grace" each day. I am a better man to-day than I was twelve months ago. I have had many flattering offers to turn aside from the service of the Lord, but I am established. Nothing moves or tempts me. I can look back over the past seven years that I have spent in God's service with pleasure. I have been happy. The Lord has blessed me in ten thousand ways. I can only say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul." "One day in the courts of my Lord are better than a thousand." In this time the Lord has given me between four and five thousand souls as the fruits of my labor. O, praise his name.

You see, Doctor, I have written a great deal about myself—more than I have ever written in my life. I am out here in the West for the Winter campaign. The Lord bless the Advocate and its editor.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. O L Savage, Coffeeville, Miss., Jan. 5: "We have arrived at Coffeeville, and made one round for the new year. Coffeeville showed its appreciation in a very substantial way. The culinary department was well supplied with all that one could desire. On Christmas Day I dedicated our new church at Antioch. The new pews for Coffeeville and Antioch will be ordered out in a few days. We found that our predecessors had wrought well. I wish the New Orleans Christian Advocate a happy New Year."

Rev. L M. Lipscomb: "The old year with all of its failures and successes, its disappointments and cares, its joys and sorrows, is numbered with the past, and with renewed faith and courage we begin the duties of 1897. Our lot is again cast with the good people of Carrollton, who are loyal Methodists and encourage their pastor by their sympathy and prayers. Since Conference we received a fine pounding, consisting of many useful and substantial articles, such as a barrel of flour, a nice fat hog, potatoes, sugar, coffee, canned goods, a turkey and other things—all of which were highly appreciated by the preacher and his family. We are glad that the Bishop returned us to Carrollton, and pray that this year may be the best of our lives. Success to the Advocate."

AFTER THE MOVE.

If we understand by the "rolling" of a stone, constant motion—changing from one place to another—and if the words, "gathers no moss," represent worldly goods, then, if the reverse be true, some itinerant preachers will possess a vast deal of worldly goods one of these days. But for us, it seems that the old proverb must be so changed, or so interpreted, as to mean that an itinerant preacher changes from place to place so constantly that there can be no accumulations of any kind.

The latest move of this itinerant has been the cheapest one in fifteen years. The railroads and transfer people got only about $15 out of it! We are now—New Year's Day—housed at Lecompte, La., trying to operate here and at West Alexandria, sixteen miles away on the T. and P. R R.

About two or three months ago my predecessor, Rev. A. W. Turner, working (as is generally the case) through our good women, succeeded in buying a parsonage at Lecompte, and having it partly furnished. Everything is new—at least, as far as church ownership is concerned—and in an unfinished condition. On our arrival (on a belated train), we found those Christian women—Mrs. Collins and Mrs. Brewer*—waiting our coming, ready to contribute in every possible way to our comfort. There is no doubt but when the debt is lifted from the parsonage, "those women who helped together with us" will see to it that nothing is left undone which is necessary for the convenience of the preacher and his family. They have done what they could—have done well—and deserve help in their great work of housing the pastor and his family. When we came we had no water—not in the cistern even—but now there is little else in sight than water—water above, water below, and water all around us. How soon things change! So quickly may our eternal state dawn upon us. "Watch, therefore."

The future is before us. What it may bring our Father only knows. In him we are going to trust, and whatever else may, or may not happen, this is sure—"we shall never be put to confusion." One great temptation lies before me personally, but I will be careful that I "sin not." I have a fondness which overcame one greater than I. Piscatorial art and science has for me a marvelous charm; and here are conditions most favorable to the study of the one and the practice of the other. To be among trout with a good "pole" and "bob" is a veritable reminder of conditions paradisical. But since a preacher is to be a "fisher of men" rather than trout, this sub paradisical pleasure must be enjoyed stintingly and very seldom. Peter had an excuse which I never expect to have, and went "a fishing" under conditions which I hope never to see.

I have preached at West Alexandria only since coming to my new charge, on Sunday morning, to a small congregation which had no notice of my "coming;" but at the evening service the attendance was quite satisfactory. P.

*Our little sister, Genie Moore, was a conspicuous waiter on our arrival here. Thanks for her courtesies on that occasion. P.

Saving a man's life is looked upon as the greatest service that can be rendered him. If he is in danger, he feels forever grateful to the friend who saves him. If he is delivered from savages, or from wild animals, or from drowning, or from the teeth of a shark, he can hardly find words to express his gratitude. Is it surprising then that Dr. Pierce has received thousands and thousands of enthusiastic letters from those who have been saved from death and lingering disease by his wonderful "Golden Medical Discovery?" Hundreds of these people write to say that they had suffered for years; that life had become miserable; and that death would have been welcome. Some of them say that doctors had given them up to die, when the use of the "Discovery" brought them back to happy life and health. This great remedy is meant for any one who has any disease of the throat, lungs, or bronchial tubes. Its strengthening and purifying effect on the lungs is so great that it will positively cure ninety-eight per cent. of all cases of consumption. It is a cleansing, strengthening, purifying, invigorating tonic. It puts new life into the blood and nerves, into the brain and body. It cures every form of indigestion, makes the appetite good, the sleep sound, the nerves steady.

You should have Dr. Pierce's great work, "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." This handsome, illustrated, thousand-page volume has had a greater sale, at its regular price—$1.50—than any other family medical book ever published. It is now offered absolutely free, paper-covered, to all who will send 21 one-cent stamps, to pay the cost of mailing only, to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y. Those who wish to have it in handsome, substantial, French cloth binding should send 10 cents additional (31 cents in all).

Watch Repairing
Is Our Business,
and we give careful, painstaking attention to the repairing of Fine Watches—the kind of Watches that need extra careful adjustment. We try to have our work give such satisfaction as will win the confidence of all who leave their Watch repairing in our hands. We want you to feel that when you leave your Watch with us for repairs the work will be done to the best of our ability and in a competent manner. It is our ambition to add to the reputation we think we have in a fair measure already established, of doing honest, thorough Watch Repairing.
Also appointed Rail Road Watch Inspectors and Adjusters for the Leading Roads entering our City.

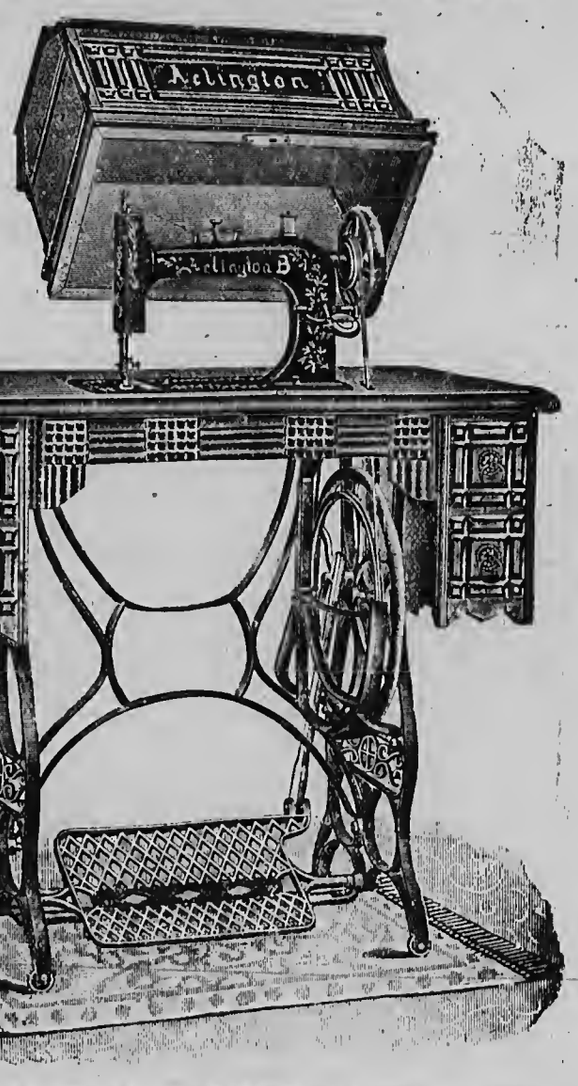
Our Machine Offer.
New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.



A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as an automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.
The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one cord ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.
THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.
NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.
IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.
SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.
THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.
SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.
LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.
PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

Some people compliment the Bible who never read it.

Whether we can explain the reason of it in our small philosophy or not, it seems to be one of the laws of our being that we are to be made perfect through suffering. Crucifixion precedes coronation. "No cross, no crown."

The world does not need any more Micawbers lounging around "waiting for something to turn up;" it is overstocked with these already. What it needs is men and women who will roll up their sleeves and turn something up.

The Hindoos have this saying: "The snail sees nothing but the inside of its own shell and thinks that the universe." We have seen some human bipeds whose estimate of themselves was about as exaggerated as that of the snail.

Learning is a most excellent thing, but common sense is vastly better. Common sense knows how to apply learning to some useful end. Learning unapplied is almost worthless; wrongly applied, it may be immeasurably pernicious.

A preacher is said to have gotten off the following: "Optimism comes from optics. An optimist is one who sees clearly. Pessimism is cognate to pester. A pessimist is a person who pesters everybody he comes in contact with." We will not vouch for the brother's etymology, but he scores a good point, nevertheless.

Were I to pray for a taste that should stand me in stead under every variety of circumstances, and be a source of happiness and cheerfulness to me during life, and a shield against its ills, however things might go amiss and the world frown upon me, it would be a taste for reading.—Sir John Herschel.

The reply of a certain eminent divine to a student who had asked him if he could not shorten the course of study into the ministry is very significant and full of meaning. The reply was: "When God wishes to make an oak, he takes many years to complete his work; if he would make a squash, a few weeks would suffice."—Selected.

It is a glorious thought that we can give our whole time to service of our Lord. We can serve him just as acceptably during the week as on the Sabbath. We can do his will as thoroughly while we are at our daily tasks, however lowly they may be, as when we are in the sanctuary. If we are thoroughly consecrated, so that everything we do is done in a spirit of loving obedience, then our most irksome toil is as pleasing to our heavenly Father as our liveliest hosannas or most fervent prayers.

Family Religion.

While we do not belong to the pessimistic tribe who have almost deafened the Christian world with the horrid din of their croaking about [illegible] believe nevertheless that there are points at which we of the present generation may vastly profit by the example of our ancestors. One of these points is family religion. We believe it to be a fact that the average Christian of the present day feels far less responsibility for the religious training of his (or her) children than did the disciples of a former generation. The almost universal tendency is to throw the responsibility upon some one else—principally upon the Sabbath-school teacher.

Now, we do not depreciate the Sabbath-school. On the contrary, we regard it as one of the most effective of all the agencies which the church employs for the evangelization of the world. Moreover, we hold it to be an incontrovertible fact that the Sabbath school is better equipped for its Heaven-appointed mission than ever before. There was never a time when it had such an affluence of resources. Its literature is incomparably superior to that of any former age. Indeed, in no department of human activity has there been in this progressive age more marvelous progress than in the matter of biblical helps adapted to all grades of mind and all stages of advancement. The Sunday-school student of the present day can get from the literature that is regularly put into his hands stores of biblical lore which his forefathers of less than a century ago could obtain only by the purchase of an immense library; or, rather we should say, could not obtain at all. Not only is this the case, but it is also true beyond all question that the teachers of the present day are far better equipped than were those of a former generation. Their biblical information is more extensive and more accurate; and they have teaching helps in the way of maps, charts, diagrams, etc., which their predecessors did not have. Moreover, many of them have what their teachers of a former age did not have, a knowledge of teaching as a science. We believe it to be true also that the Sabbath-school teachers of the present day are as consecrated as were those of any former age.

We do not aim, then, to disparage the Sunday-school. On the contrary, we glory in its achievements and its prospects; and we would have every pastor and every parent do all in his power to foster the Sabbath-school. But we hold that any parent makes an egregious mistake who relegates to the Sabbath-school or to any other ecclesiastical agency the work of training his children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Even in the realm of religion there may be an almost immeasurable distance between theory and practice. It is within the range of possibility that one may become a walking Biblical Cyclopedia and yet lack "the one thing needful," a saving knowledge of "Christ and him crucified." Now, who shall impart to the child this most important of all knowledge? Is there anyone that has such facilities for doing it as has the parent amid the intimacies of home life? Who else has such access to the heart of the child? Who can so easily touch the secret springs of action and thus mould the young, plastic life in accordance with a divine model? In God's plan from the beginning the parent has been made primarily responsible for the religious training of the child. That responsibility no parent has a right to evade. He may and should get all the aid he possibly can from others; but he has no right to turn over this divinely given work wholly to others. Day by day he ought to seek both by precept and example to impart to the young minds placed under his tutorage that wisdom that will make them "wise unto salvation."

We believe that pastors can not make a better beginning of their pulpit work for the year than by emphasizing the necessity of family religion. Let the aim be to have a family altar and a decided religious influence in every household. Then shall Zion "rejoice and blossom as the rose."

Kind words cost very little; but who can estimate their value? Blessings on the man who scatters sunshine wherever he goes!

Rome and the City Treasury.

We give below a list of the appropriations made in 1896 to sectarian institutions out of the treasury of this city. The amounts donated to Protestant institutions were as follows:

Evangelical Lutheran Orphan Asylum (Bethel)	$ 179.25
Protestant Orphans' Home	675.00
German Protestant Orphans' Home	600.00
Protestant Episcopal Children's Home	500.00
German Protestant Home for the Aged and Infirm	250.00
Total	$2,204.25

To Jewish institutions the appropriations were $6,500.00

Here is a list of what Rome gets:

St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum Wet Nurses	$ 4,000.00
St. Mary's Orphan Boys' Asylum	4,200.00
House of the Good Shepherd	7,500.00
St. Vincent's Asylum	1,688.00
New Orleans Female Orphan Asylum	1,000.00
Mt. Carmel Female Orphan Asylum	900.00
Female Orphan Asylum of the Immaculate Conception	600.00
St. Alphonsus' Asylum	377.75
St. Vincent's Half Orphan Asylum	200.00
Louisiana Asylum	400.00
St. Joseph's Boys' and Girls' Asylum	900.00
Holy Family Asylum	250.00
St. Joseph's Asylum of Little Sisters of the Poor	1,400.00
St. Mary's Asylum of Little Sisters of the Poor	700.00
Carmelite Nuns	60.00
St. Vincent de l'aul's Society Conference of St. Joseph and Immaculate Conception	200.00
Total	$24,375.75

These figures show that the Catholics get eleven times as much for the maintenance of their eleemosynary institutions as all the Protestant institutions combined. We have no doubt that some of our readers will think that this is only a fair proportion, in view of the preponderance of Catholic population. On this subject there is a vast deal of misinformation lodged in the public mind. Although New Orleans is a Romish stronghold, Rome is far less strong here relatively than is generally supposed. In support of this proposition we invite attention to the number of church edifices in the city. The number of Catholic Churches is 41. The other denominations have houses of worship as follows: Baptist, 56; Presbyterian, 14; Methodist Episcopal, 30; Methodist Episcopal, South, 9; Episcopalian, 12; Evangelical Protestant, 5; Lutheran, 2; Congregational, 5; Greek, 1; Unitarian, 1; Christian, 1; Jewish, 4. This makes a total of 140 non-Catholic Churches—largely more than three to one. If we grant, what is unquestionably true, that the average Catholic Church has a larger membership than the average non-Catholic Church, this is more than counterbalanced by the fact that New Orleans has a very large percentage of people unattached to any church.

These figures show that Rome here in this city is doing what she does everywhere when opportunity offers. She is skillfully manipulating politics and politicians in her own interests.

How to Get Rid of Our Missionary Debt.

Everybody is anxious to get rid of our missionary debt. We have yet to find a single exception. But anxiety that does not get itself coined into shekels is not worth much in bank. Realizing this, a good sister, a preacher's widow, who has only the average preacher's widow's income, and who modestly withholds her name from the public, writes, asking us to start a "Missionary Debt Fund" in the ADVOCATE, and pledging herself to pay five dollars. Thanking her for the suggestion, we do so, promising twenty dollars as our contribution, with more to follow, if the Lord prospers us during the year as we have reason to hope that he will. Who will join this good sister in her noble work? Our correspondent, "Lysias," is already on record as ready to do a most liberal part. Brother, sister, if you are willing to give for this cause, write us at once. Let it be understood that this money is not to be paid until a sufficient amount has been subscribed to cover the debt.

A converted Chinaman recently died bequeathing his entire estate of several thousand dollars to the Methodist Church of Canada, for the prosecution of its mission work in China.

"Three Stars" Interrogated.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the twenty-fourth of December, your correspondent, "," has an article relative to Morrison's suspension and defiance, which is to me at least very interesting reading. "Three Stars" assumes that Morrison violated a very plain law of the church in holding a meeting in a Texas town after having been advised by the presiding elder and pastor not to do so.

Now, inasmuch as there are quite a number of evangelists, some of whom are local preachers of the M. E. Church, South, going about over the country holding meetings—sometimes against the protest of the resident pastors, and as they think to the detriment of the people of their charges, I would be glad to have the law, in full, that gives the pastor or presiding elder power to prevent any of them from holding meetings in any building, or tent, that may be offered them at any point in the bounds of their pastoral charges.

Your brother,

THOS. J. UPTON.

In the Living Present.

Pilgrim's Progress has been staged. It is a play of four acts, and is given at the Olympic Theatre in London. It finds many admirers. It fills admirers of John Bunyan with indignation.

The penny, or basket, collection in churches at regular service on Sunday brings, as our stewards well know, but little money. Recently ten thousand people attended service at St. Paul's Cathedral in London. The basket collection brought only 3,305 coins. Hence only one-third of the attendants gave anything. And said number of coins amounted only to $280.

The Holy Synod of Petersburg is proceeding against Count Tolstoi. It is presumed that excommunication will be the result. Recently he inveighed against the State Church and even the government. We suppose that originally he meant well; but he has now embraced Socialism. If not checked, he will degenerate to Anarchism.

Women are called "the weaker sex," but wrongfully so. Proportionally, they are healthier than men. Less die at all ages than men, except at the age of 60 to 65. At that period mortality is reversed. In case of longevity women excel men everywhere.

The Free Church of Scotland, like the Moravians, excels in missionary effort. Of a membership of 350,000, it supports 150 missionaries in foreign lands. Its principal field for operation is India. That church will thrive most which does most for foreign missions.

The Rothschild family founded and supports a large free school at East End, London. The school numbers 100 teachers and 3,500 pupils. All receive breakfast and dinner gratis. Additionally, all receive as a donation annually a full suit of clothes and two pairs of shoes.

A government decree of France abolishes slavery in Madagascar. It is supposed that political reasons dictated the action. Now, Great Britain will be compelled to free the slaves in Zanzibar and Pemba. Well, the Declaration of Independence commences with: All men are born free and equal. In the meantime, the emancipated slaves in Cuba are the soul of the present revolution.

ICH DIEN.

A Newspaper Banned.

For publishing an article approving the settlement of the Manitoba School question, and denying the right of the church to dictate to the people on purely civil matters—how they should vote, for instance, on the Manitoba matter—L'Electeur, a newspaper of Quebec, has been proscribed. The Roman Catholic bishops of that province have forbidden their members to subscribe for, read, circulate, or otherwise encourage the paper named, under pain of being deprived of the benefits of the church. The interdict has caused a profound sensation. An action for damages will be brought by the publisher of the paper against the bishops who signed the mandament, and prominent citizens have expressed their willingness to subscribe towards carrying the case to the Privy Council if necessary. It is quite evident that, while the Catholics of Manitoba have accepted the terms of settlement, the Quebec hierarchy is unalterably opposed to them and determined to overthow them if possible. The issue raised by this hostility is one that the Lib- [illegible] and to settle. It is not a local question merely; it comprehends or involves "the preservation of the freedom of the press, the freedom of election, and the supremacy of the State in State affairs." The earlier this issue is squarely met, the better for all concerned.—Zion's Herald.

The Policy of Rome.

If the Roman Church in America is to settle back again upon its old lines, those who have been in dread of its encroachments in this country may dismiss their fears. Rome arraying itself in the garments of nationality and patriotism, and cultivating relations of sympathy with American ideas and aspirations, might indeed make some headway among our people, and in time become a formidable power in the land. But Rome clinging to its old foreign guise and aspect, and maintaining the character of an alien camp, dominated by a foreign despotism, among a people, with whom it disdains to come into congenial touch, can arouse no reasonable apprehension. Such a policy, if steadily pursued, can only result in failure, for not only is it incapable of conciliating the native population, but it can not maintain the hold of the church upon the descendants of its own people as they become assimilated to the environment of their adopted country.—The Living Church.

True Reform Religions.

So far as the church is concerned as an ideal and ideal, I think there is nothing wrong with that. It is the hope of the world. It holds out the only hope of social reform and permanent improvement. I am always sorry when I see persons engaged in the work of social reform after cutting loose from the church. Without what the church gives they are in danger of leaving all sense of bounds. You can never tell where such a person will land.—Prof. R. T. Ely.

The most exhaustive biography does not tell us as much about a man as one may learn from two or three snap-shots taken from him when he is in mental and moral dishabille. From which we are to learn that it is not in the dress parade, but in the bivouac that we meet face to face with our real character.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

An American professor in Peking University says of the Chinese church, of which he is pastor, that it is rapidly coming up to self-support: "If the Methodist Church in the United States would do as liberally in proportion to its ability, it would give about $15,000,000 annually for missions."

Cultivate the habit of always seeing the best in people, and, more than that, of drawing forth whatever is the best in them.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

This coming year may give us what it never gave before,
Or take from us what a thousand seasons never can restore.
—Southern Churchman.

NOTES.

Rev. R. P. Goar has been sick, but is now convalescent.

The name of Parker Chapel, in this city, has been changed to Parker Memorial Church.

Rev. R. I. Allen, who has been sick for some time with slow fever, is now on the road to recovery.

Rev. M. M. Black and his bride are in the city, making headquarters with the editor of the ADVOCATE. They will remain until Saturday.

We regret to have missed a call a few days since from Gen. Evans, of the Salvation Army, who came to the city for the purpose of establishing a camp here.

The Czar of Russia has announced that he will in the near future create a Supreme Court to relieve him of much of the onerous judicial work which now devolves upon him. His uncle, the Grand Duke Constantinovitch, will occupy the position of chief justice. So even Russia moves.

His physician having advised an immediate change of climate, Rev. T. L. Lallance, pastor of Tchoupitoulas Street Church in this city, will leave some time this week for New Mexico.

The address of Rev. J. W. McLaurin, district superintendent for Mississippi and Louisiana, is 725 Camp street, New Orleans. In sending money to him, use postoffice money order, express money order, or New Orleans exchange.

Judge E. T. Merrick died at his home in this city on the twelfth. Judge Merrick was a man of pre-eminent ability and sterling worth. He was for several years on the Supreme Bench. He was a member of Rayne Memorial Church.

We were pleased to meet in the city a few days since our genial friend, Rev. T. J. Upton, of the Louisiana Conference. He is in good health and spirits, and is delighted with his charge at Zachary. Who that knows the place would not be?

Rev. Henry Clay Morrison, D. D., our Missionary Secretary, spent last Sabbath in this city, preaching in the morning at Carondelet and at night at Dryades, to the delight and edification of the people. The Doctor is in vigorous health and as sunny-souled as ever.

We are pleased to present our readers, in this issue, a cut of the new Edward McGehee College for Girls, of Woodville, Miss., which is doing a noble work in the great cause of female education. It is a duty we owe to the church, as well as to our families, to educate our girls, and this college is doing its share in the great work.

Rev. B. Wright, of the Texas Conference, has been transferred to the Louisiana Conference, and appointed to the Vienna circuit. Although we have no authoritative information on the subject, we judge that Rev. C. R. Montgomery, who was appointed to the Vienna circuit at the last session of the Louisiana Conference, has been transferred to the far West.

Rev. M. M. Black reports having met with a most cordial reception at Gloster (Miss.), his new charge. The day of the arrival of his bride, who was delayed three weeks in reaching her new home by the serious illness of her mother and a sister, a committee of ladies was at the train to welcome her, and at the parsonage an elegant dinner was served. The parsonage has just been neatly and cosily re-furnished, and the people seem anxious to do everything in their power to make the pastor and his wife comfortable, which kindly interest we feel sure they most heartily appreciate.

Joaquin Miller, "the poet of the Sierras," is spending a few days in the city—his first visit since the exposition in '84. He announces that he has abandoned for a time his pen and his retired life in his charming home on the heights above Oakland, Cal., to go upon the rostrum. His subject will be "The Beauty of the Sierras," a theme which he thinks he can, with the aid of the stereopticon, make intensely interesting to both Americans and Englishmen. It is a little unusual for a man to make his debut as a a public speaker when his "way of life has fallen into the sere and yellow leaf," but perhaps the old adage about teaching an old horse new tricks is not of universal application.

The Salvation Army has established itself permanently in this city. The first service was held last Sabbath afternoon. An outdoor service was first held at the head of Canal street, the base drum, the tambourine, the concertina, the guitar, etc., being utilized in the service of song. The soldiers, followed by a considerable crowd, then marched to their headquarters in the old Y. M. C. A. Hall on Camp street, where a more formal service was held. We wish the Army success in its work. As its aim is to reach those who are not reached by the churches, it has "a field white unto the harvest" in this city. We think it would be hard to find in any American city a larger percentage of non-church goers than can be found in New Orleans.

American Bible Society.

AN APPEAL.

The American Bible Society asks for prompt and generous contributions to promote the circulation of the Scriptures.

Its peculiar organization shuts it off from access to thousands of pulpits and from direct appeal to thousands of congregations which are constantly urged to be loyal to their own Boards, but hear nothing of the American Bible Society as a great missionary body, or of its hearty cooperation in the work which their own societies are doing at home and abroad. Consequently a great multitude of well-to-do congregations in all parts of the land are doing nothing, directly or indirectly, to help its undertaking.

In the home field, embracing all the United States and Territories, it has been compelled for lack of funds to suspend its efficient system of Bible colportage, but it is still circulating the Scriptures through its numerous auxiliaries, superintended by twenty-one district superintendents, and through various missionary and benevolent societies.

In the amount annually expended in foreign lands it is surpassed by only seven of the missionary societies of the United States. Its foreign work last year was done under the direction of agents resident in Constantinople, Tabreez, Bangkok, Shanghai, Yokohama, Mexico, Havana, Caracas, Guatemala, Rio de Janeiro, and Buenos Ayres, with the aid of missionaries of every name, and of 43 persons expressly employed to translate the Scriptures.

The present condition of the society, owing to the falling off of receipts and especially of legacies, has made it necessary to decline urgent requests for aid recently received from the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and other organizations engaged in missionary work abroad.

Without prompt and liberal gifts the work of the society—wholly beneficent and unsectarian—must be greatly dwarfed both at home and abroad.

While it has a moderate revenue from rentals and an income of about $17,000 from trust funds, it is dependent for its great work upon the gifts of those who are in hearty accord with its spirit and aim. In addition to all that it may receive from sales, it needs at least $250,000 a year to maintain its work without serious retrenchment. Its entire receipts from collections, donations, and legacies during the first half of the present fiscal year amount to only $32,307.54.

On these grounds the society appeals to its auxiliaries to take prompt measures for collecting and transmitting funds for its treasury; and to pastors, churches, and individuals everywhere, without reference to their denominational or ecclesiastical connections, to contribute liberally for the supply of the needy with the Holy Scriptures.

Contributions for the American Bible Society may be sent through any of its auxiliary societies, or directly to Mr. William Foulke, treasurer, Bible House, New York.

Webber Falls, I. T.

Leaving Vicksburg, Miss., at noon, Nov. 23, 1896, I reached this place, where I had been ordered by Bishop Duncan, at noon, Nov. 26, Thanksgiving Day, finding the town in holiday attire and soon found a table laden with a genuine Thanksgiving-feast turkey, currant jelly, mince pies, cake, etc.—all in abundance. After dinner began to hunt up the Methodists, and have been busy ever since. We have a large, commodious church-building here, a nice roomy cottage for a parsonage right near the church, a pleasant people in a thriving town of some five hundred inhabitants. The preacher has been received kindly "for the work's sake," and with a small, but earnest corps of workers, begins a new year's work.

Our church is in the load in this country. The country is growing, the church is growing with it, and both have a grand future. This is a beautiful country, with its broad shallow rivers, its rolling prairies broken here and there by belts of timber or long low-lying mountains. With its six thousand bales of cotton annually, a large horse and cattle trade, our town is prosperous.

We are planning and working for a great revival of religion and of vital godliness. We know this is not to be won without an effort, or without many discouragements among probably the least demonstrative class of people in the world; but, through Christ helping us, we expect to succeed and see our heart's desire among this people.

Brethren, pray for your fellow-servants in this great Western field, where there is so much to be done for the Master.

Mississippi Conference Minutes.

The last of the Minutes were put in the hands of the mailing agents on Wednesday, Jan. 6. Very many of the pastors have not sent in their postoffices. Some are sending notice even now after the Minutes have been printed. I had to guess at the postoffices as best I could. Doubtless many will not receive their Minutes. Let such report to me as soon as they find Minutes coming to others, not to them. It may be that by giving them the postoffices to which their Minutes were sent, they may be able to secure them. No copies are left on hand for another distribution, as each pastor received his share in proportion to the number of his members. C. G. ANDREWS.

Exposure to Disease

Does not necessarily mean the contraction of disease, provided the system is in a vigorous condition, with the blood pure and all the organs in healthy action. When in such a condition contagion is readily resisted and the disease germs can find no lodgment. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine to build up the system because it makes pure, rich blood, and pure blood is the basis of good health. In cold weather it is especially necessary to keep up the health tone because the body is subject to greater exposure and more liable to disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the safeguard of health.

IT PAYS.

It pays to wear a smiling face
And laugh our troubles down,
Our laughter or our frown.
Beneath the magic of a smile
Our doubts will fade away
As melts the frost in early spring
Beneath the sunny ray.

It pays to make a worthy cause,
By helping it, our own;
To give the current of our lives
A true and noble tone.
It pays to comfort heavy hearts,
Oppressed with dull despair,
And leave in sorrow-darkened lives
A gleam of brightness there.

It pays to give a helping hand
To eager, earnest youth;
To note, with all their waywardness,
Their courage and their truth;
To strive with sympathy and love
Their confidence to win;
It pays to open wide the heart
And "let the sunshine in."

Three Things to Shun.

1. Shun bad companions. You may think their influence will not harm you. But, in after years, when it is too late, you will regret the bad ways and words and influences that you met when young. We are all creatures of imitation. Men are like geese. One goose drinks because he sees another goose drink. The infant learns its first lesson by imitating what he sees and imitates others, and imitation becomes a habit, until we imitate others unconsciously. As we are constantly imitating those with whom we come in contact, it is important that we have only good associates. We shall be like the company we keep. A certain painter once said that he had to make it a rule never to look upon a bad picture, because he found he could not paint so well the next time he tried. If you can not keep good company, you had a good deal better never keep any. This is what the apostle means when he says, "Evil communications corrupt good manners." People can tell what kind of a boy or girl you are when they know what company you keep, and they will form their opinion of you by the company you keep. Do not forget this! You are like the people you most like to be with.

2. Shun bad books. Bad books are even worse than bad companions. Many can have a bad book on the sly, when they would not dare to have a bad associate. And these bad books will teach them many vain and bad things that they would not listen to, if spoken out loud. No boy or girl can be a good scholar who gets a real taste for bad books. It is impossible. If you are going to make anything in the world, don't spoil your taste for useful reading by getting a taste for cheap novels. France became one of the wickedest nations of the world because its young people read bad books. Those who get a taste for bad books never like to read the Bible. If you want to keep your love for the Bible, let bad books alone. For if you lose your love for the Bible, you will lose your soul.

3. Shun bad habits. We are all bundles of habits. Everybody has either good or bad habits. If you lift a heavy weight to-day, it will lift easier to-morrow. If you do anything a few times, it gets easier to do it. The more we perform right actions, the easier it is to do them. The more we do things not right, the easier it is to do them. An old king once told a blacksmith to forge an iron chain of a certain length. He did so and brought it to the king. The king told him to take it home and forge it twice as long, and bring it back to him. When it was brought back, he said to his servants, "Bind him with his own chain, and cast him into a furnace of fire." This is the way the devil gets people to forge chains of habit. Little acts repeated each day are the links. Then by and by he will bind us in those chains and cast us into a furnace of fire. How many have come to a bad end and have said that it all started with little habits. We read a little verse that we want you to learn. It is this:

"A pebble on the streamlet scant
Has turned the course of many a river;
A dewdrop on the baby plant
Has warped the giant oak forever."

Ask God to help you to do right, and if you ask in faith he will, and then your habits will be good.

Did you ever see a watchman's clock in a factory? It is so arranged that he has to touch it every hour. If he fell asleep and failed to do it, the clock tells it in the morning.

Our readers have something more delicate than a clock. It is our character, and if we have once been haughty and bad, it will be written on our character, and some day it will be known. Let us try to keep these three rules: Shun bad associates, bad books, and bad habits.—Christian Witness.

Good for Evil.

A prominent lawyer relates to a correspondent of the New York Sun that many years ago while he was attorney-general of Missouri, he happened to be in Governor Steward's office when a convict was brought in from the penitentiary to receive a pardon at the governor's hands. The convict was a "steamboat man"—a large, powerful fellow, with the rough manners of his class.

The governor looked at the man, and seemed strangely affected, scrutinizing him long and closely. Then he signed the document which restored him to liberty; but before handing it to him, he said:

"You will commit some other crime, I fear, and soon be back in the penitentiary."

The man protested solemnly that such a thing should never happen. The governor looked doubtful, and after a few minutes said:

"You will go back on the river and be a mate again, I suppose?"

The man said yes, that was his intention.

"Well, I want you to promise me one thing," continued the governor. "I want you to give me your word that when you are mate again you will never take a billet of wood and drive a poor sick boy out of his bunk to help you to load your boat on a stormy night?"

The man answered that he never would, and seemed surprised, and inquired why the governor requested such a pledge.

"Because," answered Governor Steward, "some day that boy may become governor and you may want him to pardon you for some crime.

"One black, stormy night, many years ago, you stopped your boat on the Mississippi river to take on a load of wood. There was a boy on board working his passage from New Orleans to St. Louis, but he was very sick of a fever, and was lying in his bunk. You had men enough to do the work, but you went to that boy with a stick of wood in your hand, drove him on deck with blows and curses, and kept him toiling like a slave till the load was completed.

"I was that boy. Here is your pardon. Never again be guilty of so brutal an act."

The prisoner took the pardon, covered his face, and went out. —Ram's Horn.

Heavenly-Mindedness.

We live in too great a hurry, and our very religion has about it often that quick, nervous way that seems to be a reminder that the shortest road to the end is to be promptly taken, and that the Lord can have but a limited time and space in every day. Let there be system, of course; but religion and rest go together, and "he that believeth shall not make haste."

When the home atmosphere is religious, and the conversation is seasoned therewith, the children will grow up considering the high problems of personal duty and destiny, and will not hasten from godly speech, and act as if the subject were to unpleasant for consideration. We have been privileged to know a few people who were so sweetly abiding in Christ that their heavenly mindedness was manifest to all.

It has been to us not only a rare pleasure, but a high privilege, to sit at their feet, and hear them talk of him so affectionately, wisely, and reverently. We have discovered in their very speech a scriptural style, which told the source whence they got their sublime thoughts, and whose quaintness was an added charm; and we long for a revival of the old class meetings, and the disposition to talk on religious themes, so common in our boyhood, but now so seldom heard.

A church full of heavenly-minded people would be a power now, since its opposite so largely prevails; and we hope that a revival in the church of true and heartfelt religion will not long be delayed. As soon as our people are found groaning for it, the time will come; for "the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision."—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

There is something more than sentiment and love for old-time ways and observances in the signal revival of the curfew in towns throughout the West. Thirty-one towns in Minnesota alone, five in South Dakota, two in Michigan and several in Illinois have recently passed what is known as "the curfew ordinance," by which all children under the age of sixteen are to be off the streets after nine o'clock at night. Several towns of Illinois also have adopted the curfew, and anyone at all familiar with the life of our great cities would have no hesitancy in saying that the cities need such an ordinance far worse than the smaller towns. It is almost inconceivable the carelessness of some parents in this regard, considering the many dangers and temptations of city life. It is true that boys and girls in cities learn early to look out for themselves, but even in cities there are few boys and girls under sixteen who do not need parental vigilance, perhaps all the more from their being city-bred. The curfew question should be agitated in every village and smaller town and even in cities. The proper place for all children under sixteen is with their parents after nine o'clock at night, and there are not a few older people to whom it would be a blessing were the law extended to meet their cases. The custom has in its favor poetical traditions and observances and carries with it a wholesome return to the simplicity of elder days as regards the liberty of children. Even in far-away Hobart, Tasmania, they are discussing the propriety of ringing the curfew bell, and it would not be surprising if this ancient and excellent custom should once more become as general as in early days.—Interior.

Happiness.

In all ages of the world happiness has been and will be the great aim of mankind. Its promotion was the object of all creation. It has two forms, external and internal. The external consists in pleasing the physical and mental faculties. This is the most commonly sought and enjoyed, but it affords as much less satisfaction than the internal as the finite is less than the infinite. The internal is often sought in vain. Men have endeavored to obtain it by the accumulation of riches, but in vain. They have searched for it in the attainment of fame and power, but without success. Science and art have never discovered it. It comes only from God; it is the love of God. This is true happiness. It gives peace to the weary soul and joy to the sad heart. It turns trials and sorrows into bliss. It helps us better to enjoy the external. The internal is abiding, but the external comes and goes like the hours, and in a time of trouble is not to be found.—Selected.

A soldier in Tennessee, a great, strong, hearty fellow, was a teetotaler. One day when the army was going on a long march, a man offered him a drink of whisky. "I am a teetotaler," was the reply. "Never mind that. You're in the army now; besides, you need some stimulant to help you on this long march." Taking out a pocket Bible, he held it up before the face of his tempter, and said, "This is all the stimulant I want."

Mistress: "Our church is just like one family." Mrs. Candid: "Yes, indeed; I notice there is a good deal of quarreling among the members."—Tidbits.

Despondent Work.

How poorly prepared for religious duty is a man who sits down under the gloom of expected misfortune. If he prays, he says, I do not think I shall be answered." If he give, he says, "I expect they will steal the money." Dr. Chalmers, in the darkest hour of the history of the Free Church of Scotland, and when the woes of the land seemed to weigh upon his heart, said to his children, "Come, let us go out and play ball or fly kite," and the only difficulty in the play was that the children could not keep up with their father. Do not watch for evil. You will have nothing but misfortune in the future if you sedulously watch for it. How can a man catch the right kind of fish if he arranges his line and hook and bait to catch lizards and water serpents.—Exchange.

In the interconrse of life, it is by little acts of watchful kindness, recurring daily and hourly, by words, by tones, by gestures, by looks, that affection is won and kept, and happiness conferred. He who neglects these trifles, and thinks that when some great sacrifice is called for, he will be ready to make it, will rarely do it; and if he does, it will be for his own sake, and not for the sake of others. And he will never be loved.—Sala.

HYGIENE.

French Wines and Temperance.

The idea at one time prevailed pretty generally, even among the most intelligent Canadians, that the free introduction of light wines, especially French wines, would do a great deal towards making people more temperate. It is now an argument, among a few of the less thoughtful people especially, in favor of the adoption of the new French treaty, that the free use of these wines would destroy the demand for the more fiery, intoxicating distilled liquors. Such people seem to overlook the fact that the use of any kind of alcoholic drinks is almost sure to create an appetite for stronger ones.

Wine drinking too often ends in a thirst and demand for spirit drinking. That has been the experience of France during the past few years; it is its experience to-day. English writers who so frequently remarked the absence of drunkenness in France compared to England, were writers of years ago. Now things have changed.

We can not do better here than quote from the Paris Temps, one of the most leading and reliable journals in France. In a recent article, writing on the decline in population in that country, without any special reference to the temperance question, it went on to say that: "A deplorable change has occurred in France regarding indulgence in strong drink. Thirty or forty years ago France, thanks to its wine and cider, was considered the most sober nation in the world, and the gaiety, vigor and elasticity of the race were a result of its temperance. To-day France has changed places with Great Britain. Within the last twenty years the consumption of alcoholic drinks in England has diminished by one-half, and now France stands almost at the head of the list, with 4 56 litres consumption per head, while in Great Britain the figure is only 2 70 litres, in the United States 2.82, in Russia 3 07, in the Netherlands 4 49, in Belgium 4 91, in Germany 4 40. The increase in the annual consumption of alcohol in France has been from 1 400 000 hectolitres in 1885 to 1,735 369 in 1892. Within the same time the number of liquor sellers has increased from 390 000 to more than 450 000, which makes a seller to every twenty voters throughout France. The Temps brings all these facts in connection with the population question, and suggests that they help to account for the fact that the population of France has ceased to grow. Last year there were 20,000 more deaths than births. As it is known that in Australia, America, and Africa whole nations have been destroyed by alcohol, the Temps thinks it is time for the French to stop laughing at the English temperance movement, which has taught the working classes to substitute tea and coffee for alcohol."—Citizen and Home Guard.

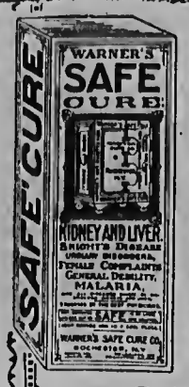
Warner's Safe Cure

IN LARGE OR SMALL BOTTLES.



Owing to the many requests from its patrons, Warner's Safe Cure Co. have put on the market a smaller size bottle of Safe Cure which can now be obtained at all druggists at half the price of the large bottle.

Warner's Safe Cure is not only a scientific vegetable preparation and does all that is claimed for it, but it is the only Kidney and Liver medicine used by the best people of four continents. A medicine that bears the stamp of the world's approval, and maintains its position for a fifth of a century, must necessarily possess peculiar merit.

Col. Samuel H. Powe.

Col. Powe was born in Wayne county, Miss., July 9, 1818, and died June 27, 1896. He lived all his life on the old homestead of his father, two miles south of Winchester. He was educated at the University of Alabama and at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio. At that date there were no railroads, and these places were reached by private conveyance and stage lines.

He married Miss Henrietta McWillie Stover, of Wilcox county, Ala., Oct. 2, 1850, who, with five sons and one daughter, survives him.

He was a member of the Legislature from 1854 to 1858.

In 1861 he joined the Methodist Protestant Church; afterwards became a member of the M. E. Church, South, and was a consistent member till his death. He was an official member of his church for many years, and was always ready to do any work for the cause of his Master. His house was the home of the preacher, and many of them will long remember his kindness and substantial aid.

Col. Powe was a true Southerner, and at the first call he left his home in May, 1861, and went to the front as first lieutenant in the Wayne Rifles, which was afterwards known as Company B, Thirteenth Mississippi Regiment. In July, 1862, after the seven days' battles around Richmond, he was promoted to captain, the former captain, W. J. Eckford, having been killed. In 1863, being unable to perform the labors in the infantry service, he resigned and joined the cavalry, and was elected first lieutenant, when he served in Adam's Brigade, Forest's command, till the close of the war. As one of his comrades, I can say that I loved him as a brother. He was kind to all alike, and was always doing all he could for the welfare of his men, and especially for the sick and wounded.

Col. Powe was a man of great energy. At the close of the war he came home and found his property gone; but he was not the man to complain, and went to work and was soon in independent circumstances. He was a man of bright mind, gifted with a fine memory and splendid conversational power. He was perfectly familiar with the leading questions that agitated the government for the last half century, and was also personally acquainted with many of the leading men, both State and National; and to be in his company was both interesting and instructive. He remembered well the great Indian, Pushmataha, chief of the Choctaws, whom his father had entertained.

Col. Powe was the most benevolent man I ever knew; was always ready to help those in need. In the death of Col. Powe our county has lost one of its oldest and best citizens, whose life our young men would do well to imitate. The title of "Colonel" was bestowed on him by one of the governors of this State prior to the war.

His funeral was conducted by Rev. J. N. Ware, a former pastor. There was a large number of his friends and relatives present, and among them a goodly number of colored people, his former servants. His remains rest in the family graveyard beside his father and mother, there to await the resurrection morn.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

FORD—Bro. B. F. FORD was born in Hardeman county, Tenn., Oct. 4, 1829; joined the M. E. Church, South, in his sixteenth or seventeenth year; married an excellent Christian women, Miss Mary Lane, of Georgia, Sept. 23, 1868. He was editor and proprietor of the Ripley Advertiser for twenty years. His father established this paper about fifty years ago. The faithful son carried on this journalistic work after the departure of the father until prostrated by his last illness. The people from his tripod had a pure, strong, live country paper. It reflected the purity of his life. Nothing corrupting nor unclean was admitted to its columns. "In all the varied relations and vicissitudes of his life, even in adversity's darkest hour, the same painstaking prudence and Christian circumspection were his shining characteristics." He was worthily popular with his brethren of the press. The last three and a half years of his life his suffering was almost incessant, and was truly intense; but murmuring found no place in his heart.

The cause of Christianity was an interesting theme to him until the wheels of life ceased to roll. The love and deep interest he manifested for his own church were marked, gratifying and stimulating to his pastor. A man who made the world better for having lived in it has gone. He left us on Nov. 23, 1896. We shall miss him. God bless his wife and sisters, and keep them as the apple of his eye!

J. M. WYATT.

JOHNSON—S. A. JOHNSON, son of S. and A. E. Johnson, was born in Carroll county, Miss., Feb. 12, 1851. He was baptized in infancy by Rev. G. M. Rogers. Bro. Johnson professed religion and joined the church when quite young, and through the subsequent years of his life was a faithful Christian. He loved the church, and cheerfully did whatever she bade him. The preacher never had a better or more sympathetic friend than S. A. Johnson.

Bro. Johnson had money, and he used it for the glory of God and the relief of the poor. If any were sick or destitute, somehow he found it out and went at once to their relief. The poor of the community testify that Bro. Johnson had a warm heart and an open hand. In times of need they went to him for help.

Bro. Johnson was an invalid for a long time before his death, but the All-Father kept his promise and made his bed in all his sickness. Christ was all in all, and through the long hours of suffering Bro. Johnson drank of that river the streams whereof maketh glad the city of God. He fought a good fight, kept the faith, finished his course, and was ready when the time of departure came. Sweetly, peacefully, he went to sleep in Jesus, in Jackson, Miss., Nov. 23, 1896. J. W. PRICE.

Greenwood, Miss.

CARRUTH—JOHN, son of S. E. and Zudo L. Carruth, was born Nov. 9, 1895, and died Dec. 9, 1896.

Little John suffered much two days and nights. When the third noontide came the death angel stood by his bed, the blue eyes closed, the little form grew still, and John fell "asleep in Jesus." The life so brief on earth accomplished its mission, making sunshine in the home, joy in the hearts. Only a short time before he passed away the blue eyes lit up with recognition as he turned to look upon the mother's face; the sweet lips murmured, "I em purty, mame;" then tried to tell Aunt Ida, too. Yes, John, you were "pretty" then, we know, but far more lovely now amid the throng of angel hebes above. He was a child of wonderful beauty, brightness, and goodness. The little face ever shone with gladness; the bright eyes ever sparkled with mirth and love. He had ever a sweet smile of welcome for the roughest and homeliest who came near. Fond parents and dear aunt, do not grieve, for Jesus wanted him, too.

Farewell, sweet child, but not forever. We, too, soon shall sleep, and some sweet morn we shall awake to meet little John in the "city not made with hands."

The Combination Oil Cure for Cancer

Has the indorsement of the highest medical authority in the world. It would seem strange indeed if persons afflicted with cancers and tumors, after knowing the facts, would resort to the dreaded knife and burning plaster which have hitherto been attended with such fatal results. The fact that in the last three years over one hundred doctors have put themselves under this mild treatment shows their confidence in the new method of treating those horrible diseases. Persons afflicted will do well to send for free book giving particulars and prices of Oil. Address DR. D. M. BYE, Indianapolis, Ind.

It is not a morbid fancy, but a simple fact, that prosperity can not ripen character. In that sphere it can not be made evident to others or to ourselves that we are not serving God for a reward. Hence the trier of life—the messenger of God—goes walking up and down the earth, jostling men out of their prosperity, and driving them into worlds of poverty and loss and sorrow and disease and loneliness, where they can test their principles and find out what they believe, what they stand on, and what they are living for. This is not Job's history alone: it is yours and mine and every man's.—Theodore T. Munger, D. D.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address, of all those old prejudices and false ideas in favor of soap, see what Pearline has done. Hundreds of millions of packages have been used! That shows it. Probably there never was another household article that came into general use so rapidly, so wonderfully, and from the very start, too.

You see, women were ready for it. Most of them were tired to death of wasting their time and strength and money with needless and ruinous rubbing. It hasn't taken them long to prove to themselves that Pearline is easiest, quickest, safest, most economical, in all washing and cleaning. Every woman can prove it. 490

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

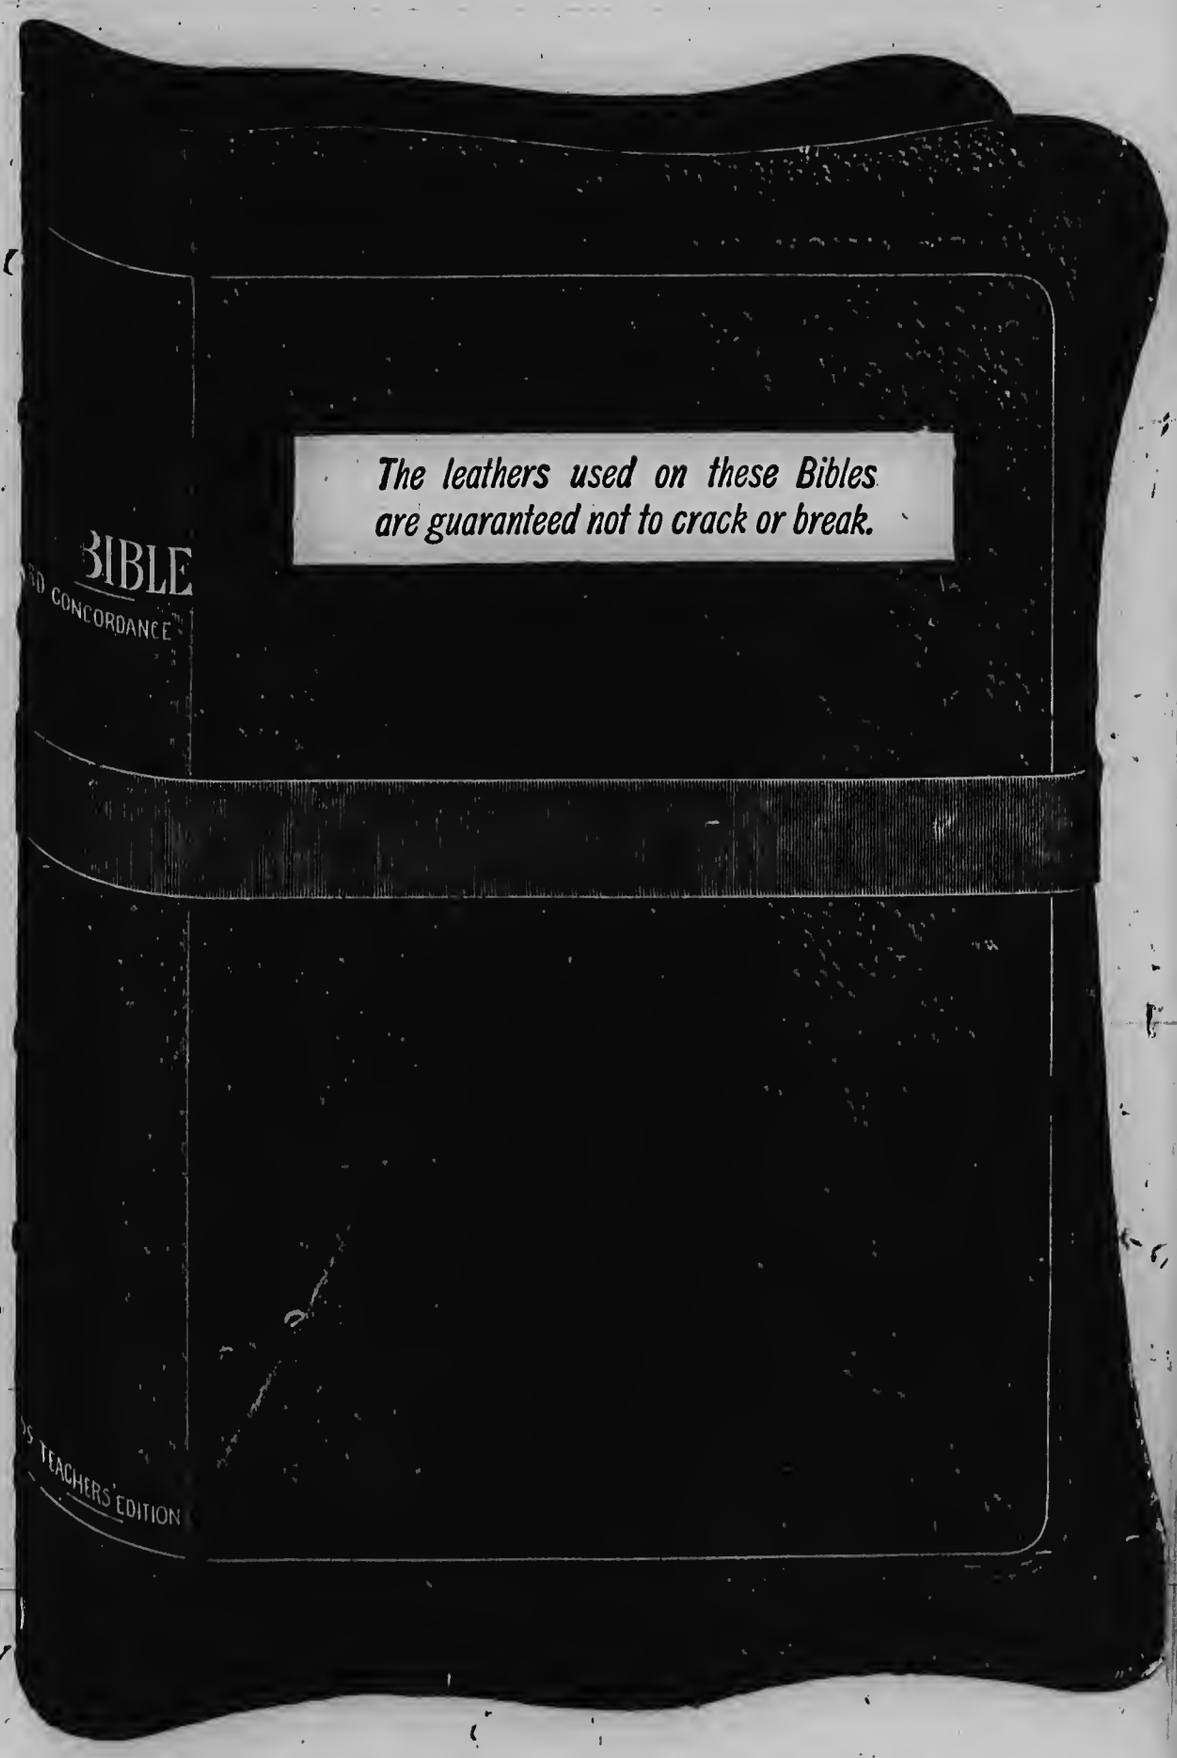
Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"



The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2 35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3 15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald) Our subscribers get this for $1 15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to January, '98 (A little later it will be Feb uary, '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

It is said that every trust operating in the State of Georgia has succumbed to the Calvin anti-trust law enacted by the recent General Assembly.

The fruit growers of California have decided to spend $10,000 in maintaining a lobby in Washington during the tariff agitation in the hope of thereby securing higher tariff taxes on imported fruits.

Representatives of the gold Democracy of Illinois and other States of the middle West, Northwest and South, met at the Auditorium, Chicago, on Jan 8. for the purpose of celebrating Jackson Day.

The mayor of New Bedford, Mass., holds, and rightly, too, that if gambling goes on in his city, and many people know the fact, and the police do not, then the police authorities are wholly incompetent.

In a recent address in Boston, Prof. Norton, of Harvard College, created considerable of a sensation when he stated that the people have not risen in the last 2 500 years above the best thought of the Greeks.

The thirty-sixth anniversary of the admission of the State of Kansas into the Union will occur on Jan. 29. The populists of the State propose to observe it by holding mass meetings to denounce Eastern "blood suckers."

On Jan. 20 there will assemble at Tampa, Fla., on the invitation of the governor of that State, a convention to consider the necessity of the immediate protection of the Southern coast line by the government by the erection of proper fortifications.

Captain George McC. Derby, of the United States Engineer Corps, has addressed a letter to the Unsectarian Charitable Association, offering work in building the Mississippi river levees near this city to any and all able-bodied men seeking work who may apply.

It is now certain that Bishop Keane, formerly of Washington, will be nominated as bishop-assistant at the pontifical throne, though the nomination has not yet been officially made. The Pope will nominate him as titular archbishop and canon of the patriarchial Basilica and adviser to some Roman congregation.

Benjamin Franklin in 1790 left $5,000 to the selectmen of Boston, and to certain ministers, to be loaned out to needy apprentices at 5 per cent. per annum. After 100 years the accumulated sum was to be applied to specific objects. The hundred years have more than expired, and the $5,000 now nets the handsome sum of $360,000. The aldermen wish to appropriate the entire amount for "a trades' school."

FOREIGN.

A force of 3 000 men is said to be at work on the Panama Canal. This is to be further augmented during the dry season.

Owing to the exodus on account of the plague the population of Bombay has been reduced one-half. The weekly mortality is 200 per 1,000.

The Right Hon. and Most Rev. Frederick Temple, D. D., was enthroned, on Jan. 8, at the cathedral in Canterbury as Archbishop of Canterbury and Primate of all England.

More than 28 000 applications for patents were made in England during 1896. About one-third of the number were for inventions connected in some way or other, with the bicycle.

The Wesleyan Methodists of England have requested the Rev. William J. Brown to visit the United States and Canada, and raise money for a monument to be erected over the grave of John Wesley. Mr. Brown is the pastor of the chapel in London where Wesley once preached.

The Turkish Reform League has issued from Brussels an appeal to the people of Europe, declaring that the Sultan has plans of a massacre to take place during the Ramazan feasts, and implore the powers to interfere and depose the Sultan and install the Sultan's brother as his successor, with a council of state made up of equal numbers of Moslems, Christians and Europeans.

"I have found Hood's Sarsaparilla to be one of the best blood purifiers I ever tried. I am feeling better since taking this medicine than I have felt for years."—Geo. B. Alcock, China, La.

HOOD'S PILLS are the favorite cathartic.

North Mississippi Conference.—N.B.

Many of the preachers and stewards have been enquiring for "The Pastor's and Steward's Account Book" that was extensively used a few years ago, which has been out of print for awhile. I am glad to announce that I can now fill all orders for at 10 cents single copy, and $1 per dozen, postpaid.

We are glad furthermore to announce that "The Sunday-school Hymnal," ordered by the last General Conference, will be ready in a few weeks. It has been prepared with great care and painstaking, and is expected to be the best publication of the kind ever issued by our Publishing House.

Let our preachers and superintendents see that our schools are supplied with this, our new song book, at an early day. Price only 25 cents per copy, postpaid. Send me your orders at once. G. W. BACHMAN, Colporter and S. S. Agent.

Ministerial Education, Mississippi Conference.

The treasury of the Ministerial Educational Association of the Mississippi Conference is $8.05 in debt. Another month's board of the young men will soon be due. If all who owe money on their notes would only pay up, there would be ample funds to continue the young men till commencement. It would be a great pity for them to stop in the middle of a session. Please send in your dues at once to me. C. G. ANDREWS.

Meridian, Miss., Jan. 7, 1897.

For General Debility

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. T. P. WYNN, Tarboro, N. C., says: "No other preparation compares with it in ordinary cases of general debility."

We all live on far lower levels of vitality and of joy than we need to do. We linger in the misty and oppressive valleys when we might be climbing the sunlit hills. God puts into our hands the Book of Life, bright on every page with open secrets, and we suffer it to drop out of our hands unread.—Canon Farrar.

Sample Mailed Free.

DR. BLOSSER'S CATARRH CURE.

To prove the pleasant, beneficial effect of this great remedy we will mail a sample absolutely free to everyone who will write to us for it, or we will mail enough for one month's treatment for $1. It is smoked in a pipe, but contains no tobacco. It is pleasant to use, soon gives relief, and cures the worst cases. Address

I have used Mul-en-ol, and find it good for many things, but especially for cutaneous diseases, cuts, burns, and corns. In every case it has been eminently successful and satisfactory. I do not want to be without it in my family. Please send it right away, and oblige, Yours truly,

REV. W. M. LEFTWICH.

Nashville, Tenn.

It is still the habit of the stingy church member to cover up his stinginess by likening himself to the poor woman who cast her two mites into the treasury.

I have used the "Mul-en-ol" for several years and can testify to its efficacy in "Colds," "Sore Throat," and especially in applying it externally for Rheumatism. Several friends have found it an almost immediate relief in Rheumatism. I have personal experience as to its healing properties in "Colds" and the throat diseases.

MRS. S. C. TRUEHEART,

Sec. Woman's Bd. of Missions.

MUL-EN-OL is the greatest of all antiseptic dressings. Is a sovereign remedy for healing flesh wounds on man or beast.

Giving money to the Lord is just as much an act of sacred service as offering a prayer, or singing a hymn of sacred praise, or teaching in a mission school, or coming to a sacramental table. In the Bible the consecration of our substance is not made a mere incidental; it is put in the forefront of our religious duties. —Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

PERUVIANA

Absolutely essential in the successful treatment of Kidney, Liver, Bladder and Urinary Ailments, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism; Gravel, Gout, Female Irregularities and all diseases caused by neglected Kidney, Bladder and Urinary Ailments.

WHAT IT IS.—Its ingredients are Peruvian herbs, (herbal remedies are Nature's remedies) whose virtues first became known to that distinguished explorer and traveler, Prof. E. D. Mansfield, on a tour of investigation in the mountains of Peru, hence its name, PERUVIANA.

It has cured case after case of ten to thirty years standing, that had been given up by doctors as hopeless. This wonderful SPECIFIC is found on nature and supported by common sense.

Dr. Dio Lewis, an acknowledged author said: "Nineteen diseases out of twenty originate from diseased kidneys." And those who have made pathology a study will agree with the eminent physician in the opinion that where the kidneys are inactive and sluggish, or fail to perform their functions, the whole system becomes enervated and the body diseased.

PERUVIANA has proven itself to be a true specific for all diseases the origin of which can be traced either directly or indirectly to derangement of the Kidneys and Urinary organs.

The Hon. Walter Cleary, of Kentucky, writes: "It gives me unbounded pleasure, unsolicited, to say to you that your great PERUVIANA is undoubtedly the best Kidney medicine the present century has ever seen. I can truthfully say that after months of suffering, three bottles of your wonderful medicine entirely cured me.

Sidney Higgins, of Liberty, Wisconsin, a prominent Justice of the Peace, described his sufferings as though knives were being thrust into his Kidneys. PERUVIANA cured him, and he writes for pamphlets that he may scatter the news.

Mrs. Marcia Morse, Columbus, Ohio, writes: "May God bless you! I feel very grateful to you for the good the medicine has done me."

Mr. J. W. King, a prominent farmer at Nashville, Ill., writes that it cured him of Bright's Disease which two doctors pronounced incurable. Mrs. Serene Standley, of Shelburn, Ind., writes that she had tried many doctors and remedies and was about to give up in despair when induced to try PERUVIANA, which promptly cured her. Mrs. S. W. Butler, Belle, Tenn.; Miss A. Ramsey, Glenlock, Tenn., and many other join in testifying to the wonderful restorative and curative effects in all forms of Kidney and kindred ailments and all other serious troubles peculiar to women. *Write to us for this Free Gift. THE PRESENT CRISIS.

BY BISHOP COX:

We are living, we are dwelling,
In a grand and awful time,
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime.

Hark! the waking up of nations,
Gog and Magog to the fray.
Hark! what sound doth? 'Tis creation
Groaning for its latter day.

Will ye play, then; will ye dally
With your music and your wine?
Up, it is Jehovah's rally;
God's own arm hath need of thine!

Hark! the onset; will ye hold your Faith-clad arms in lazy lock?
Up, O up, thou drowsy soldier!
Worlds are charging to the shock.

Worlds are charging—heaven beholding;
Thou hast but an hour to fight;
Now the blazoned cross unfolding,
On, right onward for the right!

On! let all the soul within you
For the truth's sake go abroad!
Strike! let every nerve and sinew
Tell on ages, tell for God!

IN MEMORIAM.

Judge Edwin Thomas Merrick

Died in his eighty-seventh year, in New Orleans; born in Wilbraham, Mass., in 1809. Wilbraham was the center of New-England Methodism at that time, and his family were of the old stock of New England Protestants. He was educated at the Academy, then recently founded, but which still continues in unabated prosperity. In 1828, when but ten years of age, I was sent to school here, under the presidency of Dr. Wilbur Fisk. There I met Edwin Merrick—a bright, active youth, and ard student. I next met him in Jackson, La., in 1849. We were trustees of Centenary College. Then he was living at Clinton, of excellent repute as a lawyer, regarded as one of the ablest in that part of the State. He was a liberal supporter of the college, and a decided Methodist. We met again during the war at Pleasant Hill, to which place the judge had removed his servants, and farmed upon a rented place. Before the war he had been elected to the high office of Chief Justice of Louisiana. Since that time he has resided here, universally respected for his nobility, his ability, his industry and accuracy as a jurist, and for his high moral character as a man and citizen. He was a scholar, and had acquired a fair acquaintance with several modern languages. Of an investigating mind, he was much interested in the recent wonders of science, whose unseen currents have floated many conservative spirits dangerously far from shore. In common with the great orthodox thinkers of England, he found the doctrines of evolution and disturbed the theories and faith of a life-time. The law of the Lord had been his delight from his youth. Could he still count on it as the stay of his manhood and the light of his life? It is more than probable that the revulsion from Darwinism, as declared in the address of Lord Salisbury at Oxford, and by Sir Richard Owen, the great anatomist of London, followed by George J. Romanes, the apostle of Darwin, had their effect upon the Judge; and that, in common with many of those who were chief in the school of English scientists, he had accepted the verdict of "not proved," and had gone back to the impregnable foundations of the Pentateuch. He had never given up his habits of personal devotion, which now, doubtless, after years of mist, led him in making his way out into the clear light of the Savior, the man of his counsel, and the one hope of an immortal being. "Few men have rounded their career into a grander profession of all the qualities which secure in the useful citizen and influential public magistrate." By his own efforts, steady purpose and sterling qualities he rose from an ordinary chance to the highest place in the State and the most responsible in the gift of its citizens. An incorruptible and a capable judge is not only the most important, but the most admirable character in the official constitution of government.

The judge was always a bright, delightful person in his own family, and with his acquaintances and friends generally. He was more than ordinarily generous in the support of the institutions of the church, and now he has entered into the height and depth of that infinite mercy of which Christ himself is the unwasting spring. J. C. KEENER.

An Evening in Korea with the Epworth Leaguers.

BY BISHOP E. R. HENDRIX.

WHERE IS KOREA?

It is less than a day's sail from Japan and two days' sail from China, and is the great peninsula which separates these two countries, some of its islands being in full sight in going between the two. Seoul, the capital, is in about the same latitude as Washington City.

WHAT IS THE SIZE OF KOREA?

It is as large as Great Britain, embracing some 90,000 square miles.

WHAT IS THE CLIMATE OF KOREA?

It has every variety of climate to be found in New York or in North Carolina, the variety being due to the Japanese Gulf Stream, as it is called.

WHAT IS THE POPULATION OF KOREA?

Korea has 12,000,000, which is more than the population of Mexico (10,000,000), or of Brazil (11,000,000), or of all Siberia (11,000,000), or twice the population of Thibet (6,000,000), or more than that of both Burmah and Siam (4,000,000 and 5,700,000), or of all Persia and Arabia together (7,653,600 and 4,000,000).

WILL RUSSIA, CHINA OR JAPAN CONQUER KOREA? NOBODY KNOWS.

It is now virtually under a Joint-Protectorate, while American influence is in the ascendant in its internal affairs, because Americans can be most trusted as having no designs on her territory. It was doubtful for a long time whether the Romans, the Danes, the Angles, the Saxons, or the Normans would conquer England. They all had their days of supremacy, and Christianity, in turn, conquered them all and controlled the mixed blood which has done so much to make old England the greatest little country in the world.

WHAT ARE THE PRODUCTS OF KOREA?

Wheat, millet, rice, hay, beans, apples, pears, plums, oranges and the finest persimmons in the world. The soil of Korea is the most fertile in Eastern Asia, and the cattle, which find ample pasturage, furnish a leading article of export in the hides which are sold to less fortunate Japan and China.

WHAT HAS KOREA DONE FOR THE WORLD?

The oldest book in the world is one printed from movable types and it is sacredly preserved in the British Museum. It is a Korean book and is dated 1337, or more than 100 years before Gutenberg invented movable types or gave the art of printing to Europe.

WHY DOES JAPAN CALL KOREA "THE TREASURE LAND OF THE WEST?"

Because Japan got her art, her letters, her architecture, her religion, all from Korea. She is also called the "Italy of Eastern Asia" for the same reason. Like Italy and Greece, Korea is a peninsula with an extended coast line which affords means of speedy communication. Each of her eight Provinces is a maritime Province.

ARE THE KOREANS A BRAVE PEOPLE?

They have avoided war since 300 years ago; they resisted the Japanese until their country was desolated and famine stricken, their navy of 200 ships, some 250 and 300 feet long, wholly destroyed, and when, after five years' war, the Japanese withdrew, following the death of their greatest general, taking with them the ears of nearly 200,000 human heads, which had been severed from Korean soldiers who had perished to free their country from the invader. Since then the Koreans have been a hermit nation, refusing intercourse with the rest of the world. Twice within the last thirty years they successfully resisted the attempts of modern warships to approach their capital, and when the "Monocacy" of our navy shelled and stormed the Korean forts, it was only by massacring the brave soldiers who refused to surrender. Yet no flag is so honored in Korean waters to-day as our national colors, which tell of a liberty-loving people who have no designs upon Korean territory.

WHAT IS THE RELIGION OF KOREA?

Confucianism, since Buddhist priests have been forbidden to enter the cities at their peril after the Japanese disguised themselves as Buddhists in order to conquer Korea.

Christianity, when it was known under some other form than Romanism, seeking conquest in the name of Portugal or France, was met with a hospitable reception. The present King has sent a message from the throne to the American people, thanking them for the missionaries which they have sent and asking them to send more.

HOW MANY MISSIONARIES HAVE WE IN KOREA?

Rev. Dr. C. F. Reid and Rev. C. T. Collyer, and their families, supported by the Epworth Leagues of Missouri and Virginia, with the most favorable openings for missionary work in Eastern Asia. All the churches heartily welcome the missionaries of the church, through which such a devout Korean as Mr. Yun was brought to Christ, and his Christian labors aid in the Christianization of the Koreans. They forget all sects, whose only foe is heathenism, and whose only passion is Christ.

Letter from "Gilderoy."

If I am not mistaken in the signs of the times, we are in the immediate presence of a great calamity, if not face to face with an appalling disaster. When I say "we," I mean all the Christian people of all the Protestant Churches of this country. It becomes us to rouse up, to wake up, and to look about us, and to see the danger right in front of us. If something is not done to avert this evil, it will soon be upon us, and sad and costly will be the day when it comes. For long, long years all the churches have gotten all the Bibles they wanted and needed for home supply and for mission work abroad from the American Bible Society at the exact cost of publication, or free of all charge. This has been a very great blessing—a blessing to the churches at home and to the missionaries in foreign lands. It is difficult to understand how all this great work could have been carried on without the Bible Society and Bible Houses in New York and London. The Bible Society has about come to the end of its row. Unless help comes speedily, its presses will have to stop, and immediately there will be a dearth and destitution of the Scriptures. This will be a calamity, an appalling disaster. No other institutions in the whole world are prepared, or have the means to take up this work and carry it on. The churches all have their Publishing Houses, but not one of them is prepared to do this work, or has the means to do it with, as perfectly, expeditiously and as cheaply as it is done by the Bible Society. If the work of this greatest of all benevolent institutions is to stop for the lack of funds, it is high time somebody, some church, some organization were getting ready to do it. If not ready, the supply of God's Word may be cut off suddenly and unexpectedly.

The American Bible Society, in its last annual report, has issued a warning note; has given the churches and the world to understand the situation just as it is. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear what the Bible Society saith unto the churches. The best thing to be done, and the cheapest thing, is for all Christian people of this Christian land to rise up in their might and say to this Society, "Here is the money; go on with this great work." We must do this, or somebody must do it, or the work will stop. We have been forewarned, and if not forearmed, sin lieth at our door. What are we going to do about it? That is the question. The Bible Society can not go along without money. Nothing—no kind of work, no sort of enterprise—can go on without money in this world.

More, the Bible Societies of this country and of England are the only institutions in the world that are prepared to publish the Scriptures in foreign languages and dialects. The missionaries in the field, representing all the churches and all of the doctrinal differences known among us, agree upon a translation of the Scriptures into some new language or dialect, and these two Societies publish it at the exact cost of the work. This insures and secures to all the churches and to the heathen uncorrupted versions of the Holy Scriptures. This could not be done—or, likely, would not be done—if each of the denominations made its own translations and did its own printing. Pretty soon there would be in some foreign tongue a Baptist Bible, or a Methodist Bible, or Presbyterian or Episcopal Bible. Few people in any church are so far saved from denominationalism as not to do this thing. If anyone thinks he is free from all bias, let him try a translation, or even an exposition, of a few passages where he differs in belief from others.

This item with regard to the work of the American and British and Foreign Bible Societies is infinitely more important than it would at first appear to be. It takes time and patient pondering in one's heart this thought to appreciate the full force of it. What a calamity to the missionaries, to missionary enterprise and to the heathen world if the Bible Society has to stop work for lack of funds. This must not be. The honor of God and the salvation of souls is at stake. We ought to wake up and do something. It ought to be done at once. GILDEROY.

"Some Things" Some One Else "Don't Like."

(Concluded.)

It is a fact that "every dog has his day," and that a good many dogs outlive their usefulness. And those persons who can not accommodate themselves to the inevitable changes of time and progress are a positive disadvantage to any circle, social or religious, in which their influence is felt; and the sooner we realize this fact, and relegate such individuals to obscurity, the better for all concerned. We are prone to attach great significance to "gray hair." I have no more respect for "gray hair" than for hair of any other color; and I don't know where we got the idea that gray hair lends respectability to that upon which it grows, unless it was from the fact that Samson's seven locks were the seat of his great strength; but the idea is a very erroneous one, regardless of its origin. I always look to see what the hair is growing to, because I believe I have seen more gray hair on mules than anywhere else.

There is one musical method of telling "the old, old story" about which I have so far said nothing; and for effectiveness this takes front rank, as well as being always gratefully received by all who love good music. I allude to vocal solos; and, strange to say, some people object to solo singing; but there is nothing under the sun of any value that has not met with opposition from some source at some time in its history, and the opposition to the solo is so feeble, of so little consequence, and generally so insignificant in its origin, as to scarcely merit attention. Those persons who object to choirs object to solos as a matter of course. Not that they can point out anything wrong in the solo per se, but because the same inherent and predominant selfishness that leads them to "kick" in the one instance manifests itself in opposition to anything and everything in which they can not take part. They are always people who have little or no ear for music—such people as would pronounce a service dry because the choir sang new songs—and who are incapable of appreciating a musical number because of its intrinsic merits. With them the word "music" is synonymous with "fuss set to time." The soloist may execute in a faultless manner a selection consisting of the most beautiful and appropriate of words accommodated to music that inspires our very souls and fills our minds with restful thoughts, delightful images, and visions of heavenly scenes and places; and the effects may be of the visible and satisfactory character—the tear-drops glistening in almost every eye in the house; here a good sister weeping softly; there a brother blowing his nose vigorously, and one of these fellows who doesn't believe in solos and "sich like," sits by like he had had a ram rod substituted for his spinal cord, and with disapproval sticking out in great chunks on every feature. And we sincerely sympathize with this brother, and from the bottoms of our hearts we are sorry for him, because in his inability to appreciate good solo singing, he is deprived of one of the most delightful of God-given indulgences. I have no doubt that many a poor soul who was wandering in the dark night of sin and almost despair has seen the light flash suddenly across his pathway while listening to a solo sung by some sweet voice that had been consecrated to Almighty God and his service. And there are many such voices throughout the land, and I, for one, thank God for them. But, oh, there ought to be so many more than there are! I believe there are many among us who are "called" to sing the gospel just as some are "called" to preach it; and that in many instances the voice constitutes a talent for which we shall have to give account in the great day. I sat among thousands of people and listened for two hours and a half to Adelina Patti, "The Queen of Song," and I have wished ever since for the power to describe intelligently the sensations that thrilled through and through every fibre of my being as her magnificent voice rose and fell in perfect cadence. And there came to me the thought: "If Patti had but consecrated her voice to the service of God in her youth, with his blessings what might she not have accomplished singing for his glory during the many years she has sung for the applause of men!" And I was sad as I thought on her wasted talent.

The Closing Year.

The old year has ended. Some of us began the year with serious inquiry. We have met its storms, its defeats and disappointments. We have been lifted up and brought low. We have found its alternations of sunshine and shadow, and are brought through infinite mercy almost to its close.

The future is unrevealed to us. What shall be its demands upon our steadfast patience, our poise of spirit, our good-will, our forgiveness, our control of temper, our pious zeal?

We are solemnly impressed with the errors and demerits of our past lives, that our best efforts made in our own strength will not bear divine scrutiny. How much weakness through indecision is apparent; how much shrinking from self-denial!

But amid it all everyone has been the special object of divine care, and has had occasion to magnify God for his special deliverances. Some of us have experienced the blessings of renewing grace; a marvelous change has been effected by the Holy Spirit. Once the seductive world established its ascendency over our hearts. Now we loathe its folly. We were once in a most galling servitude: once ambition beckoned us to the high seats of power and opened before us earthly glory, but now we exclaim, "God forbid that we should glory save in the cross of Jesus Christ!"

Some of us have risen to a higher Christian life, and now walk with God continually. We have been drawing refreshing waters from the wells of salvation; have enjoyed clearer views of his redemption. Our experience has been tested in the furnace of trial, but the flames have not touched us, for the form of the Son of God has been there, and we now exclaim, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee."

Above us has pulsated the heart of infinite Love. The all-seeing eye has beamed with benignant interest. All has been love in the arrangement of our circumstances. Have we "known and believed this love?"—New York Advocate.

To Whom It May Concern of the Louisiana Conference, and the Woman's F. and H. M. Society.

There are a few here in Mer Rouge who would like to hear from any who are interested in saving souls for Christ. Why is it that Louisiana is so far behind other States in this great work? Why is it that there is no provision made by the Board of Domestic Missions to send the gospel to the people in several of our southwestern parishes? We hear that there are quite a number that are almost entirely without Protestant teachers, Sunday-schools or churches. Please tell us the cause of this "seeming" neglect.

We hear that there are many applications for admission into the Louisiana Conference; we hear also that there are missionaries sent to other regions. Why is this part of our beloved State neglected?

Parsonage and Home Mission Work on a Boom in Meridian.

On last Monday, Jan. 11, Mrs. Kate Kennedy, of Lauderdale, the W. P. and H. M. organizer for the Meridian district, was with us in an official capacity. As a result of her visit, we report two thriving W. P. and H. M. Auxiliaries in this bustling, church-loving city. The one at East End organized with fourteen members, the other at West End with twenty-two.

The W. P. and H. M. star of Meridian rose brightly in the east, moved gracefully across the center, and set brilliantly in the west.

Let other district secretaries follow the example of Sister Kennedy.

Providence Circuit.

The report of Providence circuit, Mississippi Conference, as it appears in the Minutes, is misleading. This report was made by my presiding elder, and includes only the amount reported up to the time of the fourth Quarterly Conference. My report was lost in the mail. A duplicate was forwarded to the secretary; but it was too late for insertion in the Minutes. A duplicate of check and receipts has also been forwarded to the several Boards.

YOU NEVER CAN TELL.

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

You never can tell when you send a word.
Like an arrow shot from a bow
By an archer blind, be it cruel or kind,
Just where it will chance to go.
It may pierce the breast of your dearest friend
Tipped with its poison or balm;
To a stranger's heart in life's great mart
It may carry its pain or its calm.

You never can tell when you do an act
Just what the result will be;
But with every deed you are sowing a seed,
Though its harvest you may not see.
Each kindly act is an acorn dropped
In God's productive soil;
Though you may not know, yet the tree shall grow
And shelter the brows that toil.

You never can tell what your thoughts will do
In bringing you hate or love;
For thoughts are things, and their airy wing
Are swifter than carrier doves
They follow the law of the universe,
Each thing must create its kind;
And they speed o'er the track to bring you back,
Whatever went out from your mind.

The Itinerancy---A Bright Side.

Any preacher's wife who has never received a telegram from Conference saying, "We go to Moss Point," has missed a good deal. Fortunately, they do not realize how much, else there would be some dissatisfaction with the appointing powers. The above-mentioned telegram sent a thrill of pleasure mingled with sadness—sadness at the thought of leaving the old friends; pleasure in thinking of the good times in store. Getting up at two o'clock A. M.; getting five children awake and ready for traveling; the final arrangement of the lunch basket in order to get in all of the nice additions sent by the old friends; a last sad and tender look at the house that had been a happy home for four years, and we are off. Many miles of darkness; at last the world and little folks are all awake. We enjoy the beautiful sunrise on the lake; the many exclamations of delight over so much water, white-caps, ships, boats and schooners from the highland little folks. We hear the cry, "Scranton, next stop." A hasty wiping off of smutty faces, putting on of wraps, etc. We are at the end of the long railroad trip of 250 miles. As we step on the platform the pleasant face of Dr. Griffin, from Moss Point, greets us. Through the courtesy of the owner, we are given free transportation on the branch road from Scranton to Moss Point. We are seen here. A glance out the window, and our hearts are gladdened by the smiles of welcome. Next come the cordial grasp of hands, with pleasant words of welcome. What a pleasant feeling it gives to a preacher's wife, at least, to see such busy men as Bros. L. N. Dantzler and C. W. Jackson leave their business to meet the train, extend a cordial welcome to the new pastor and family, and escort them to the parsonage. Arriving there, we found the climax reached. Busy hands and thoughtful minds had worked diligently in arranging for our comfort. All the workers had withdrawn, leaving as their representatives two friends of other days. We found the parsonage had been thoroughly renovated, both outside and inside; everything fresh and attractive; and that dinner! Through sympathy for less fortunate sisters, I will omit the menu. We literally had nothing to do except take possession. Baggage delayed a week was a positive luxury, giving a needed rest. There was no need to go to the bottom of every trunk, box, or barrel—"just to make out." We were just as comfortable and cozy as need be. The most inspiring of all is a morning at the Sunday-school. With such a wide-awake, enthusiastic superintendent, it could not fail to be a success. None seemed to have grown too old or wise here to attend and work. We were in time for the Christmas entertainment. An old-fashioned Dutch wind-mill, with lovely scene painting, ground out presents for the school. A genuine Santa Claus, music and recitations afforded an evening of much pleasure. Then the Christmas turkey, with other good things; but I must stop—our four years have just commenced.

I am already a little nervous for fear some other preacher may be yearning for the place. I rather think some such suspicion as this has kept the pastor from expressing himself. Being less cautious and so constituted that I do not enjoy a secret, I could not repress the desire to tell just a little. The Moss Point people know how to make a preacher's family feel happy and grateful. I agree fully with one of our preachers, who said, "Cooper has the best thing in the Mississippi Conference." If there are any who doubt this statement, wait your turn.

Moss Point, Jan 6, 1897.

Greenville, Miss.

Our church in this, the "Queen City of the Delta," is beginning to realize the good fruits resulting from the holding of the North Mississippi Conference here. Bishop Galloway never made a better or more suitable appointment than he did in sending Bro. J. E. Thomas to be our pastor; and we give our beloved Bishop notice in advance that we do not intend to give him up until forced to do so—at the end of four years. Our church has suffered in the past from a frequent change of ministers, and we were naturally apprehensive when we found we had to give up Bro. Ramsey for a pastor who was an entire stranger to us, fearing he might not prove to be the "right man in the right place;" but we are glad to say our apprehensions were groundless. We now think if we had had the choice, we could not have made a wiser selection. A wise, prudent, consecrated man of God, full of energy and zeal for the Master's work, he has taken our hearts by storm. Our church is beginning to awaken to the duties before us. The deck of our loved "ship of Zion" is being cleared for action, her guns trained upon the enemy of souls, and vigorous plans are being laid for battle, with our trust in Jehovah as our Captain and Leader. The members are buckling on their armors, and awaiting orders to march forward. I have never known a church to commence a new year more united, nor more willing to enter into the aims, plans, and to rally to the assistance of the pastor, than is ours. May the Lord of hosts abundantly give us his Holy Spirit to strengthen us, and grace to faithfully run and not be weary, and to carry out these resolutions! We are praying, hoping, and expecting a gracious revival of religion in our church this year, and we believe God is going to honor our faith, and "open the windows of heaven" and pour us out the greatest blessing we have ever had. We do not propose to simply talk, but intend to show our faith by our works. Bro. Thomas believes in doing rather than talking, and is beginning to inspire us with his zeal and energy.

A few nights since we had a meeting of the Official Board, and a few members, to discuss the possibility and advisability of building a new church upon our beautiful lot. There were a dozen present, including the pastor. Some of the good, efficient, and prudent brethren, like the hand sent out to spy the land of Canaan, "saw that the land flowed with milk and honey," but were a little afraid of the giants of hard times and other difficulties; but there were some Calebs who said, "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are able." The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that we build a brick or stone church, to cost not less than ten or twelve thousand dollars.

Subscriptions were taken, our pastor giving liberally, resulting in twenty-four hundred dollars, for, of course, we could not be far behind our pastor's liberality. After services this morning our Church Conference unanimously ratified the resolution to build a church, and in a few moments about a thousand dollars was subscribed, making thirty-four hundred dollars pledged. Bro. Thomas will at once appoint a committee to solicit subscriptions, and another to get up a plan for building, etc. He says he expects to have a thousand dollars in cash in the bank by the first of February, and we believe he will, for he knows how to work systematically and to infuse his members, as well as pray and preach, and his church thinks him the equal of any man in this line. It is our purpose to proceed on a cash basis, paying as we go, thus avoiding any debts; so that, when completed—which we hope and expect to do in three years—we will not owe a dollar. We propose to have every member—man, woman and child—give something, and then ask anyone else who will to help us. So, Mr. Editor, when next the Conference is held here, we hope to have you preach for us in one of the neatest and prettiest churches in the North Mississippi Conference. Outsiders have promised liberal assistance, and we feel that our success is a certainty.

Whenever a church honors God, he will not be slow in carrying out his promises. If we but have faith to stand out on the platform of his promises, we will not be disappointed in the realization of them. If members would but comply with God's plain, unequivocal command to give one-tenth of their income to him, how smoothly the church machinery in every department would run!

We hope, Mr. Editor, this will not find its way to the waste-basket, but that you will publish it, to let our friends know what we are doing, and give everyone so disposed an opportunity to contribute to this cause. Any amounts sent to our secretary and treasurer, Bro. Robert Sommerville, will be thankfully received and appreciated, and they will have the assurance of having given aid where it was needed; and it will be a monument to their liberality that shall be enduring, and a gift acceptable to our Father, to whom we are indebted for every good thing.

Too Many Moves.

There is a common impression among our Methodist people that there were very few changes made during the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference, when, in fact, one-half of the pastors were moved. We are satisfied in our own mind that so many changes were unnecessary. However, what we may think or say about the matter is not intended to reflect in any way upon the Bishop or his advisers, for they are all wise and good men. We will presume that they, with the facts before them, made no mistakes. Hence the trouble is to be found elsewhere. The pastor is often the cause of his own move when there is no good reason for it, and when he insists on a change against his presiding elder's judgment, he is usually disappointed in what he gets. Many pastors are restless and always ready to move. They imagine there is something better further on. They talk this way about it: "I can't do worse in my appointment, and I may do better." It gets to be somewhat a game of chance with them. If we would try harder to work up what we have, and not study so much about something "better," we would have less trouble in getting what we are hungering after, and have oftentimes kinder feelings towards the presiding elder. Then, too, the people are often anxious for a change when there is no cause for it. They ask the presiding elder to move a pastor for a mere trifle. A pastor oftentimes has to say or do something the first year that offends some one of his flock, and for this it seems that he ought to move, when, if he could get back another year, he would soon live down the opposition and do a much better work. Then, too, think of the great cost to these pastors, and to these usually who are least able to stand it. It costs, on an average, about $40 for a minister to move. So you see it costs these preachers not less than $3,000. This is a tremendous tax on the brethren.

It does seem to us that a preacher ought to stay, on an average, three years in a place.

Now, brethren, let us, as pastors and good, loyal Methodist people, do more faithful work this year, and it will not be necessary for so many changes at the next Conference.

May the good Lord give us great power for service, that many souls may be added to the church during the year of 1897 in the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference!

BETA.

In Memory of Rev. N. M. Clark.

On the first day of March, 1843, in Tuscaloosa county, Ala., Bro. Clark was born. His father was an exhorter in the Methodist Church, and his mother was a devout member of the same. His devotion to his parents, especially to his mother, was great. At the age of twelve he was converted and joined the Methodist Church. On the ninth day of February, 1868, he was married, at Starkville, Miss., to Miss Mary Peterson, who was reared at Columbus, Miss. Rev. K. A. Jones, brother to Rev. R. J. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, performed the marriage ceremony. According to the best recollection of his wife, he was licensed to preach in Alabama, February, 1874. In 1876 he and his wife returned to Mississippi, and during the session of our Conference, at Vicksburg, in December, 1880, he was received on trial and remained on the effective list of preachers until his death, on the fourth day of November, 1896.

He was devoted to his wife and adopted daughter, and, therefore, esteemed no sacrifice too great that he could make for their comfort. As a friend he was true.

He was one of these peculiar characters that was not well known without intimate association. His independent carriage and brusqueness of speech were calculated to mislead those who knew him not as to the real man. The writer of this must confess that he himself was thus misled until his intimate association with him at Enterprise and Stonewall. He then learned something of his true manhood and real worth. In preaching he aimed at immediate results, and therefore, in order to this end he would say hard things ever and anon.

Before his assignment to Pachuta charge, which was his last, his health had been quite feeble, but was restored through prayer, and for awhile he was quite well until last year. Towards the close of last September he was taken very ill and remained sick until his death.

He was not afraid to die, and during his sufferings he frequently said he was prepared to die. How comforting this is to all of us! Glory to our Lord! His wife and adopted daughter survive him, and they mourn his departure. The nearest relative his wife has is a widowed sister in Virginia. May our holy Father greatly bless and comfort his wife and daughter!

Brethren, let our materialized blessings rest upon them, too. Sister Clark's address is Nineteenth avenue, between Tenth and Eleventh streets, Meridian, Miss.

Dr. Mudge on "Divine Providence."

MR. EDITOR: I have just risen from the third reading of Dr. Mudge on "Divine Providence," in the December number of our Quarterly Review. What am I to do? I do not feel like accepting all that he says, and yet I can not disprove his position. Is it true that God controls all action? That the life of every bad man, as well as every good man, is a link in that wonderful chain of Divine Providence? If so, he is responsible for the result of all action, for that which he can prohibit, and does not, becomes his.

This is hard to believe, and yet, if God can not control all action, whether originated by men or devils, he can not protect his own under all circumstances; and if he can control all things, and does not, he is certainly responsible for the results. We need light. Let some masters of the quill give us something on this important subject. He will do the readers of the ADVOCATE a great favor by settling us in the truth of Dr. Mudge's position, or showing us wherein he is wrong.

At the twilight hour on Sunday, during the session of the Annual Conference held at Port Gibson, a beautiful and most impressive service was held in the interest of W. F. M. Society by Miss Marshall at the Female College. The appropriate and inspiring Scripture lesson, that of the little maid who was instrumental in the Lord's hands in having the leprous Naaman healed, was read by the writer. Miss Purnell offered a most appropriate prayer specially for the young ladies who had assembled for the purpose of organizing. All present enrolled their names, and with two teachers who were present, who joined them, seventeen members were obtained.

Mrs. Chatfield, in a letter just received, expressed the great desire to have our Conference give liberally to the McGavock Memorial Fund. I trust that all will deem this a delightful privilege to thus honor the precious memory of our consecrated, gifted leader. Burtonton Auxiliary gave a small amount last year. I neglected to mention this in the report at the annual meeting.

She sent the following from Mrs. Trueheart: "The work on our various mission stations is growing, and demands increased activity on our part if we keep up with it. The doors are open. We need not pray for such opportunities, since they demand our best efforts if we enter, and meet our responsibilities. Are we all ready for this needed advancement?

"I enclose blank for December quarter, and look anxiously for results of our Week of Prayer, which has just ended. To many societies it has been a gracious time, I doubt not, and the coming months will show the effects of the spiritual power that characterized the services. From China has come the news of the recent Annual Conference. Dr. Fearn was sent to Changshah, a very interesting and promising work, about thirty miles from Suchow. The walls of the Davidson Memorial Bible College are up, and the Bible work is full of promise. The Brazil schools are promising, and the work of our missionaries satisfactory. The new missionaries in both Brazil and China are making fair progress in the study of the language, and are preparing for excellent work. Mexico has never given finer promise of success. The schools are gaining pupils, and work in the intellectual and spiritual training of these was never more cheering. Two Bible women, one at Laredo and one at Chihuahua, are ready to go out with the Word of God in their hands to show their degraded, unhappy sisters the wonderful plan of salvation, free for all. Sixty dollars will enable these women to give their time to the work for a year, as in China. I believe the multiplication of these native Bible women in Mexico, superintended, as they will be, by the missionaries, will aid in evangelizing Mexico, and Mexico is ready for them. I have on hand the program for Juvenile Missionary entertainments at ten cents a dozen, and two cents for postage, and believe much good will result from its use. It will suit small children, and calls for little work in preparing any who may take part. If you want a sample copy, send two cents—one for the copy, the other for postage. In your Christmas remember your Lord."

DR. ANNIE WALTER FEARN.

The following in Nashville Advocate will interest the Masons in the State, as well as other friends: "At the session of the China Mission Conference, recently held in Suchow, Dr. Fearn was sent to Changshah. Dr. Fearn is the husband of Dr. Annie Walter, of the Mary Black Memorial Hall, and the hospital for adults, in Suchow. She will, no doubt, do good wherever she goes. The following letter from her came by last mail: 'The coming of Dr. Polk and Dr. G. has been a fresh inspiration to the medical work in Suchow. We thank God for the help they will give, and the good they will do. After three years of work in this hospital—work that I have learned to love with a love surprising even to myself—it is with a sad heart, and yet a glad heart, that I turn it over to other hands—glad because only good can grow out of the change, glad that because of this change God, in his pleasure, has seen fit to send two more workers here, and because I know that wherever we may be, we will find something to do for the cause of God and these needy ones. My heart is very full of loving thoughts for my fellow-workers, and for all the members of the Woman's Board, who in everything, and at all times, have shown only kindness, interest, and generosity toward me and my work.'"

A New Year Angel on the Road.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

A Happy New Year will it be to all who at the threshold of the year shall meet God's angel on the road, and not the terrible spectre of a wasted life. To all God's faithful children the angel brings this message—"Acknowledge him in all thy ways, and he shall direct thy paths." What the coming year has in store for any of us we know not; we need not wish to know; one step at a time is all that we have to take. Our Father knows, that is enough.

In the narrative of the patriarch Jacob's journey towards Canaan we are told that he "went on his way, and the angels of God met him." And we may be sure that during the journey of the year 1897, we shall not go out of the every-day track of life in order to find God's angels. If they come to us, they will come in the ordinary path of our daily avocations. We need expect no miraculous appearances; for our humble lives run along a very plain, prosaic level. When we common folks pray, it is not on a Mount Carmel; when we are hungry God sends to us no ravens; when our faith catches glimpses of our Lord, no blazing cloud surrounds him as on the peaks of Hermon. Yet as we trudge along the dusty road of duty the angels often meet us, even though our eyes recognize no visitant with the lustre of heaven on his wings.

Our loving Father has many a method of directing our paths. More than one husband has found his good wife, more than one pastor has found the right field of labor, more than one young man has chosen the right occupation, when an unseen hand was guiding them just as truly as an angel pointed Philip towards the town of Gaza. From this hill-top of a new year I can look back over my own humble pathway and recognize turning-points and decisive moments when my whole life was being shaped. No winged messenger met me such as met Cornelius, and bade him send for Peter; but an invisible divine influence had its hold upon my will, "leading me by a path that I knew not." Every Christian may recall many and many a time in his history when a supernatural power was at work upon him, or a sweet mercy met him, or a deliverance came in an hour of trouble, or a sudden joy flashed on the path in which he was toiling through the mire, or against a driving wind. We speak of all such experiences as "special Providences." But if God's angels are sent to "wait on them who are the heirs of salvation," and if they "encamp around them that fear him," why may not angelic agencies have been acting in some mysterious manner upon us?

Our eyes have beheld no celestial visitant as Peter saw one in his prison cell, or as Paul saw one in the tempest-tossed vessel. Neither do we see our Lord and Savior with the outward eye. That does not hinder our faith, or make his presence with us one whit less real. "Lo, I am with you," is the promise of a literal fact. If that be not so, our religion is a devout delusion. Let us hold fast to the other and kindred truth that God employs his angels as "ministering spirits" to the humblest and lowliest of his children. If our eyes were opened to the supernatural, perhaps we might behold them as distinctly as Elisha beheld the hosts of chariots and horsemen of fire on the mountain-side. Very often we may be entertaining angels unawares when we open our hearts at the call of duty, or open our doors to the poor in the hour of their need. Our Lord may have had some reference to this great truth when he spoke of "the angels always beholding the face of his Father in heaven," and also of the angels as attending the panper Lazarus up to the bosom of Abraham.

The coming year is unknown to us. We move, in fact, amid mysteries at every step. Unseen things encircle us. If celestial spirits attend us and watch us, how carefully we ought to live! If God gives them charge concerning us, how cheerfully and trustfully we ought to enter upon the journey of the opening year! When we need them most they may be at hand. Faith has sharp eyes, and endures as seeing the invisible. Faith often wears coarse clothes and works at very lowly occupations—rocking cradles, driving looms, sweeping floors, holding plows, teaching little children, and nursing the bed-ridden in a garret; faith foots it along the dusty road towards heaven; then we let her go singing on her way, for the angels of God are keeping her company. With a brave, trustful heart and good friends, let us grasp the New Year angel's hand; and if we acknowledge God's guidance, he will direct our paths aright till we reach our home.—Evangelist.

If poverty is the mother of crime, want of sense is the father of the same.—La Bruyere.

Our actions must clothe us with immortality either loathsome or glorious.—Colton.

To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of cores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,
Editor Christian Advocate.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. M. Wyatt, Jan. 11: "We closed a gracious meeting last night. Bro. J. A. Bowen, of Water Valley, did the preaching. His sermons were strong, tender, effective. God was with us in his great love and marvelous power. Christians were encouraged and strengthened. It was a revival that revived and will abide. Thank God for his rich, helpful blessings."

Rev R. M. Blocker, Jeanerette, La., Jan. 5: "This is my third year at this place, and by far the best outlook for a good year's work. I have had two accessions to the church (one by certificate) and other applications. I shall find no time this year for protracted meetings abroad, for the much work to be done in this town will demand my entire time. I am canvassing for the ADVOCATE."

Rev. B. T. Crews, P. E., Arcadia, La., Jan. 8: "I am now settled down in the district parsonage. Have held two quarterly meetings. About all the preachers are in their places. The most of them moved before January. I am glad to say that, notwithstanding the crop failure last year, preachers and people are taking hold of their work with love and confidence in God's promises. We expect gracious revivals all over the district, and will work together to that end. As far as I have been able to learn, the people are delighted with their preachers."

Rev. H. P. Lewis, P. C., Carthage, Miss., Jan. 7: "For the first time in thirty-two years I failed to remain two or more years at one place. I had been at Lake one year only. I was becoming pretty well acquainted with the work and people, and learning to love them more and more. Our good Bishop Hendrix thought proper to remove me from Lake, and send I. B. Robertson to take charge of those good people. God bless him and them! We are comfortably fixed up in our new home here in Carthage. Quite a number of women and children were at the parsonage when we arrived late in the afternoon of the seventeenth of December. They gave us a real cordial reception. We are among good people. I am just in from prayer meeting, where we had, notwithstanding the very cold weather, about fifty persons, most of whom seemed much interested in the service. Carthage is a very quiet town, with some four or five hundred inhabitants. We have here the most religious people it has been my privilege to serve for some years. My! how they sing, pray, and testify to the saving and sanctifying power of the gospel of Christ. I like it. Would that all our Lord's people were prophets, and blessed with sweet and rich Christian experiences. God help me to serve them just right as pastor and preacher."

Rev. J. H. Foreman, P. C., Trenton, Miss., Jan. 8: "This is our second year on this work, and the time has been pleasant with us. We have many good and kind people here. We were very kindly received. Never before have we been more kindly welcomed to our work. We begin the work of this year under much more favorable circumstances than last year. Our people seem to be willing to do something. This is only as it should be. We must all do something this year. Almost every day since my return from Conference has brought tokens of kindness and appreciation from our neighbors, not only by Methodists, but from all; and the best part of all this, Mr. Editor, is the mysterious way in which they have in pounding a preacher. In a mysterious way a box was found sitting under the Xmas tree on the night of the twenty-fourth addressed to the preacher in charge. It was conveyed to the parsonage opened, in which was found many nice and valuable things for the preacher's family. We learned afterwards that this box came from the east. On New Year's night some unknown person left a box on the gallery of the parsonage, in which was found many nice things that made us glad. We are satisfied that this box started in the west and traveled east to the parsonage. Last night the storm was harder than ever. After the cloud all passed away there was a box found on the gallery more valuable than the former. These boxes contained such as flour, rice, hams, shoulders, sugar, coffee, canned fruit, soda, butter, lard, dry goods, etc. God bless everyone who participated in this act of kindness, and rest assured, dear friends, that the preacher and his wife appreciate the same. And may God give us grace and strength to minister unto you in spiritual things as you have to us in temporal things. Success to you, Mr. Editor, and the dear ADVOCATE."

Rev. W. H. Sanders, Carrollton, Miss., Jan. 7: "The North Mississippi Conference adjourned on Monday, Nov. 30, 1896. At 8 P. M. of the same day we were at Carrollton in the parsonage ready for a second year's work on the Carrollton circuit. On Saturday, Dec. 5, this writer went over to Lyon, in Coahoma county, on the main line of the Y. and M. V. R. R., and on Sunday, at 11 A. M., preached and dedicated the new church at that place. This is one of the most beautiful little churches in the Conference, and is well furnished and out of debt. It is an honor to the good people who built it. We met many old friends, and Bradley, the pastor, who is one of our most aggressive young men. May his work be crowned with abundant success at that place during 1897! On our way back home we stopped off at Cleveland and spent the night with Crowe, who is beginning his fourth year's pastorate at that place with bright prospects of success. At home again on Tuesday, Dec. 8, at 8 P. M. On Saturday, the twelfth, we had a stewards' meeting to plan for the work of 1897. We are making some progress on this charge. We will soon have a beautiful church at McAnerney, on the G. P. R. R., six miles east of Carrollton. The stewards raised the assessments for presiding elder and preacher in charge from $520 to $580. Bro. Stone, our presiding elder, is still improving in health, and says the prospects are fine on the district. He is fully able to do the work committed to him. We spent the holidays at Clinton, in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference, ten miles from Jackson. Spent a part of one day at Jackson, and made a short visit to Millsaps College. Dr. Murrah, the president, showed us through the new building, the Science Hall, which is a substantial and commodious building, well adapted to the improved methods of teaching. The Methodists of Mississippi should feel proud of Millsaps College, and the able faculty in charge of it, and the work that has been done thus far, and of such a man as Major Millsaps. Seeing what Major Millsaps has done, and what he proposes to do, should inspire every Methodist in the State to an increased liberality for education. Every dollar of the assessment for that purpose should be raised, and much more."

LOWER COAST WORK.

The itinerant wheel in Methodism turns up some strange things—things that are surprising to all of us. At the last session of the Louisiana Conference it picked this writer up in North Louisiana and whirled him the full length of the State—as far south as he could be sent in this Conference.

When the appointment was read by the Bishop I thought of the answer I gave the brother who examined my class for admission on trial. I was asked if the Conference received me, would I go wherever I was sent. My answer was, "If they assign me to the moon, I will go as far as the land goes." I must say I am as far as the land goes. I find another thing that is surprising to me. How a preacher can travel so far on so little money. It might be supposed, because he was not charged full fare, as a rule. That would not reach this scribe's case, for he was charged full fare even by the drayman that hauled his plunder. We traveled by railroad and steamboat to reach our new field of labor, arriving here in time to commence the new year. We find a clever people here who have received us kindly, and we are beginning to feel at home among them.

I can say I have a good appointment and generally get good appointments.

We have oysters and oranges for the small sum of "thank you, sir;" while the people try to supply our necessities. For fear I may make some brother's mouth water for this work another year, I will say there are some bad features about this work. The mosquitos are as numerous as anyone could wish them, and very healthy. Then we sometimes have storms from the east which overflow us with salt water from the bay. I have stood the overflows from the Mississippi, and, being fresh water, could drink of that. I do not know how we will like a salt water overflow.

I have traveled works on horseback, in a buggy and by railroad. Here the preacher travels mainly by steamboat. The officers of these boats are as nice, clever set of gentlemen as you ever saw; they will land their boat and put a preacher off on a mud bar with as much grace as a Frenchman would tackle a dish of frogs. They thoroughly understand their business. The morning we landed at this our new home, knowing we would get there early, I was up before light, watching the boat make the landing. The boat whistled to land, the electric light was thrown on shore; I could see nothing but a growth of young willows about ten feet high and as thick as a Mississippi river fog. The stage was turned around to lower on the wharf, and the man out on the end of the stage said he could see nothing. The pilot hollored to him to jump ashore—the wharf was there. The stage was lowered about four feet and the man stepped off on the wharf. I felt like an old brother who would invariably go to sleep during the service. One day I went to him after service, and said: "My brother, I hope the Conference will send you a man next year who will be able to keep you awake." "Oh," said he, "you must not think anything of my going to sleep; it is the confidence I have in you." I felt that I could go to sleep and leave the whole running of the "Grover Cleveland" in the hands of her officers.

I see the preachers who have preceded me have all done good and faithful work. May the Lord help me to do the same.

C. T. MUNHOLLAND.

Every day engagements are entered into, and marriages are made between people who have no business to be married. Women enter into the most serious obligation of life without the proper physical equipment for it. When a woman marries, she tacitly makes the declaration that she means to become the mother of children. This declaration ought also to mean that she is physically able to perform what she undertakes. The bearing of a child is all too frequently an injustice to both mother and child. The woman who expects to bear intellectual and physically healthy children, should be herself in strong and vigorous health. The organs that make her a woman should be free from any taint of disease or weakness. If they are not, the child will have a bare chance for health, and the mother may easily make herself a weak, nervous, semi-invalid for the rest of her life. Female weakness of any kind—whether hereditary or acquired—may be cured by the right sort of treatment. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is designed for the treatment and cure of just this one class of diseases and no other. It works in a perfectly rational way directly on the organs affected. It cleanses them of all impurities; allays any inflammation that may be present—and that generally is present in sickness; restores the organs to their natural, healthy, regular action—prepares them for the accomplishment of woman's greatest work, and if taken during gestation, the time of parturition will be comparatively safe and painless.

The "Favorite Prescription" is not a cure-all, and if the general system is run-down, Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery should be taken in connection with the "Favorite Prescription." These two medicines together have the most wonderful influence on a woman's health. They will round out the hollows in her cheeks, bring redness to bloodless lips, and brightness to lack-lustre eyes. At all drug stores.

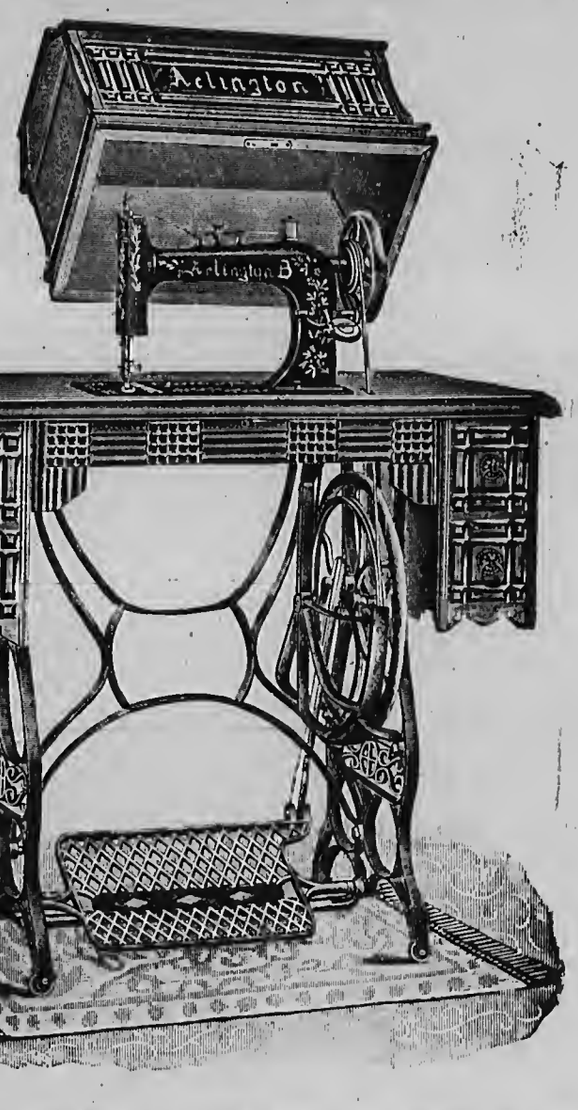
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.



A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachment as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw-driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

THE LOVE THAT FORGIVES.

BY L. A. COONLEY.

A beautiful love is the love that adores;
It changes life's rocks into smooth, sloping shores;
But better 'mid breakers for each one who lives
To cling to the beautiful love that forgives.

The love that adores is a holiday love;
It falls when by trial its weakness we prove;
Then for life's every day thank the Lord when he gives
That crown of his blessings—the love that forgives.

Some people talk more religion in a day than they live in a year.

The man who never made a mistake died a long time ago. The man who thinks he never made one is still living. He is a most delightful person to—avoid.

We need one more column in our statistical tables in order that we may be able to report our Zion as she is, viz.: a column showing how many of our members are good for nothing.

A little library growing larger every year, is an honorable part of a man's history. It is a man's duty to have books. A library is not a luxury, but one of the necessities of life.—Henry Ward Beecher.

The thing we have most to fear from is not the liveliness of the sinners, but the deadness of the saints—that remoteness from God, that inexperience of the great realities that makes God a name and a report rather than a felt person, and the superb verities the possession of the few rather than the realization of the many.—Dr. Parkhurst.

Shortly before he died, Sir Walter Scott said: "I have been, perhaps, the most voluminous author of my day, and it is a great comfort to me to think that I have tried to unsettle no man's faith, to corrupt no man's principles, and that I have written nothing which on my death-bed I should wish blotted out."

May the Lord enable us all to say as much at the last hour.

When tempted to speak ill of or otherwise maltreat an old friend, pause and let vivid visions of the past chase each other in rapid succession through the chambers of your soul. Think of the numerous evidences of pure, generous, unselfish friendship that lie thick along life's pathway. Do this, and perhaps the censorious word will remain unspoken, the malicious act unperformed.

A good sister once said to her pastor, "We are perfectly willing for you to scold us when you think we need it, but please don't do it in your public prayers." Other preachers might profit by this good woman's advice. An oral performance ostensibly addressed to the God of heaven, but really intended as a cat-o-nine-tails for human auditors, is a—well, we will let our readers name it. We do not care just now to ransack Webster's Unabridged.

"Waiting on the Lord."

The servant of God must learn to wait as well as to labor. Not all of life can be spent in active service, any more than all a soldier's time can be spent on the field of battle. [illegible] hours on guard, or in camp waiting the departure of Winter or the arrival of reinforcements. Though eager for the fray, an army has now and then to be held in check till the enemy's movements may be known, or until there is perfect readiness for an engagement. Undue haste has often resulted disastrously to the attacking party. Pauses, whether in war or in the conduct of ordinary business, cause annoyance, and are ill-endured, but nevertheless are ofttimes necessary.

After the planting of a crop follows an interreguum till the seed have germinated, and burst their earthy covering. Another period of waiting comes when the crop has been laid by, before there is the full corn in the ear, or the mature fruit from the flower. "Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain." On every hand nature exhibits repose following activity, of rapid development succeeding temporary delay.

It might seem to us that seed ought to come up in a few hours after being planted, or that higher animal life ought to attain its full development after but a brief interval. Yet it is not so. God, who is infinitely wise, has not seen proper thus to create life. Were children to grow up to manhood and womanhood in a few months or a few years, while a great deal of toil and trouble would be saved their parents, they would simply be grown-up children, lacking experience, culture, and that maturity of mind and heart that can come only through the long-continued exercise of physical and psychical faculties.

In the spiritual life also there are frequent pauses that tax our patience, and yet are none the less necessary and helpful. Toil is nearly always more pleasant than waiting. Many times we can see no good reason why our plans should be frustrated and our hopes deferred. We outline a certain course, or plan to execute at once a certain piece of work; but something occurs to prevent, and we can do nothing but wait developments or the removal of obstacles which God has placed in our way. "Man proposes, but God disposes." Just as a vessel has occasionally to tie up until the fog lifts, so we are forced now and then by disappointments and afflictions to cease active effort, and patiently endure what God sends upon us, knowing that whatsoever befalleth us, if we continue steadfast, shall contribute to our growth in grace, the ennobling of character, and the deepening of our joy and faith.

The expression, "waiting on the Lord," seems to have been a favorite one with the Psalmist. This attitude of the devout believer involves watchfulness, patience, and hopefulness. Expectancy of some good, or a longed-for opportunity, is characteristic of the waiting soul. Alertness, readiness to seize a coveted advantage and enjoy a hoped-for blessing is sure to exhibit itself in the conduct of those who tarry for the fulfillment of the Lord's promise. The man who awaits the arrival of a dear friend watches every train, and carefully observes every passenger who alights that he may be sure of finding him. The mother who ministers to her sick babe notes every symptom, and anxiously watches for signs of its recovery. So likewise must the Christian during seasons of affliction or enforced inactivity, guard against discontent, coldness of heart, and unbelief. The waiting soul must ever be a watchful soul. Thus does the Psalmist voice the eager longing of the true worshiper: "My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning."

But if patience be wanting, our waiting will be to little purpose. How frequent is the need of this grace in weathering the storms of life! Like the little boy who dug up the seed a few hours after he had planted them, we often are in a hurry for the execution of some cherished plan or for the attainment of a promised blessing, and almost cease striving to be faithful because things do not turn out as we expect. From time to time God teaches us all a lesson of patience, though we may have supposed it not needed. Moses was eager to deliver Israel out of bondage; but God saw that he was not ready, and sent him into the wilderness of Midian for forty years to learn meekness and humility. For twelve long years John Bunyan languished in the Bedford jail; but God was with him, and his imprisonment gave him opportunity to produce that wonderfully popular and helpful Christian allegory, "Pilgrim's Progress."

The world was not made in a day, neither are God's promises fulfilled all at once. The man who has been dangerously sick would like to get well in a moment, but, however great his own impatience or that of his friends, health and strength are regained but slowly. Anxious as we may be to become mature Christians immediately, like recovery from illness, or like the acquiring of an education, it is in most instances a process that requires time, patience and many struggles. Nor is it any reflection upon God's power and wisdom that such is the case. Many mistakes would be avoided if we would more carefully study God's methods of operation. Says the Apostle James: "Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." Again says the Scripture: "Ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise."

Men often wonder why God does not at once right all wrongs, and destroy the works of the devil; why he does not immediately give us the things we ask for. But God seeth not as man seeth, and if our prayers are not speedily answered, we know that it is all for the best. The Lord lets us wait that our earnestness and faith may be increased.

Hopefulness must also be the constant companion of the longing, waiting souls, else weakness and despair will overtake it. No man will tarry for what he has little or no hope of receiving. The stronger the hope, the more eager and patient is the waiting. The Christian can afford to be confident and submissive at all times, because the Lord is faithful, and never disappoints those who commit their way unto him. What encouragement is here! What a wonderful incentive to resignation, to continuance in prayer and labor! "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint." If we wait upon the Lord in prayer, in faith, in steadfast service, in earnestness of spirit, in meek submission, he will assuredly manifest himself to us, and it shall be light about us.

Restored Friendships.

How to effect a reconciliation between friends that have become alienated is a question which, though it is as old as the Christian religion, is ever new. Though discussed in almost endlessly varied form and phraseology through all the ages of the past, it needs still to be discussed.

In every case of alienation we need first to give attention to its cause. Very frequently the whole trouble originates in a misunderstanding. Poor, fallible mortals are prone to misjudge the motives of their fellow-mortals—even those whom they regard as their friends. It often happens that an act which sprang from motives of genuine friendship is attributed to an exactly opposite source. Thus a process of estrangement begins which gains in volume with the flow of time until after a while it becomes a thing of mammoth proportions. In such cases what is needed is that the parties get together and completely unbosom themselves. When they understand each other thoroughly as to motives all cause for estrangement is removed and the result is a friendship stronger than ever before. What a pity that this simple remedy is not more frequently resorted to. Alas! alas! that men made in the image of God and wearing the livery of heaven so often allow a shallow conceit which they conceive to be their dignity to stand in the way of a real heart conference which would bind two souls together in the bonds of a heaven-born friendship.

But, painful though the admission be, it must be confessed that alienation does not always originate in misunderstanding. Since man is fallen and fallible, it must needs be that offenses will come. Men frequently perpetrate a wrong upon even their friends. In such a case what must be done? Taking the principles announced by "the Man of Galilee" as our guide, we can not do otherwise than say that the offending party is under the most solemn obligations to confess his wrong, ask pardon and make all suitable amends. To the average descendent of Adam this is one of the hardest of all requirements. Unregenerate humanity usually puts it aside as an impossible task; and even the disciples of the Nazarene often stagger and fall beneath the load. But onerous though the burden be, Christian obligation requires us to take it up. Moreover, disagreable as this duty is, when performed in a proper spirit, it brings its reward. There are few duties from which one can extract more of real sweetness than from confession, apology and reparation to one who feels agrieved.

But suppose the offender stubbornly refuses to apologize, or make amends, what then? Does this absolve the offended party from all obligation to seek reconcilation? Just here a very erroneous idea prevails. Christian people often say: "We are required to forgive our fellow-men just as God forgives us. But God does not forgive us until we repent and ask forgiveness. Therefore, if my fellow man has wronged me, I am under no obligations to forgive him until he brings forth fruits meet for repentance."

Let this be granted, and still it does not follow that the offended party is absolved from all obligations to seek reconciliation. Although God does not dispense pardon except on condition of penitence, yet he absolutely exhausts the resources of omnipotence in seeking to bring the sinner into that frame of mind and heart which makes forgiveness possible. In order to melt the sinner's heart and subdue his will he delivered to the horrors of Calvary his only begotten Son. The Bible is God's message of love to an apostate and impenitent race. The church with all its institutions is but an expression of the infinite yearnings of a loving heavenly Father for reconciliation with his erring children. And his providential dispensations towards us are directed to the same end. In addition to this he speaks through "the still, small voice" of the Spirit's strivings messages freighted with all the fullness of love divine into every sinful ear. If, then, we are to take our heavenly Father as our example, we must do all that in our power lies to let the offender know that we desire reconciliation and to bring him into that frame of mind and heart which makes reconciliation a possibility. The difference is world-wide between this policy and that of the man who stands upon his offended dignity and does all in his power to show the offender that he holds him in supreme contempt.

The Lord be praised if these lines shall result in causing any of our readers to reap a blissful reward by seeking reconciliation with those from whom they have become estranged.

Joaquin Miller at Home Institute.

On Saturday night, the sixteenth, we had the pleasure of hearing "Joaquin Miller, the poet of the Sierras," at Home Institute. The auditorium was taxed beyond its capacity, standing room being at a premium. The theme was "The Sierra Nevada Mountains." With the aid of a large number of well-chosen and artistically executed stereopticon views, he held the attention of the audience closely for nearly two hours. Some of the scenery illustrated is perhaps unsurpassed in the world for grandeur. The poet will leave the city this week for a brief trip to the North. He will again visit New Orleans before starting upon his contemplated lecture tour.

It may interest some of our readers to know that he is the son of a Methodist preacher. To the talented principal of the Home Institute, Miss Sophie Wright, and her accomplished sister, Miss Jennie, we are indebted for an invitation to this entertainment, and also for a pleasant interview with the distinguished poet and other much appreciated courtesies.

We are pleased to learn that the Boarding Home for Working Women, established recently by the Parsonage and Home Mission Society of this city, is doing well. An article in relation to its work will appear in our next issue from the pen of Mrs. E. S. Kennedy.

Col. Nugent Dead.

Col. W. L. Nugent died at his home in Jackson, Miss., on Monday, the eighteenth. He was one of the ablest and most successful lawyers in the State. Such were his intellectual abilities, his literary and professional resources and his probity and dignity of character that he would have graced any official position. In the United States Senate or on the United States Supreme Bench he would have been, in our judgment, the peer of the great Lamar. He was a humble, devout, thoroughly consecrated Christian. When at all practicable he was always in his place in the sanctuary, not only on Sunday, but at the week-night prayer meeting. He had been superintendent of our Sunday-school in Jackson for twenty years. He was one of the most liberal men we have ever known. Having been his pastor for four years, we speak of him knowingly, and we do not hesitate to say that we regard him as one of the very best men it has ever been our privilege to know. We have room in this issue only for this brief notice. A suitable memoir will, of course, appear in due time.

Conference of Charities.

The National Conference of Charities will hold its twenty-third annual session in New Orleans, beginning on Thursday morning, March 4, and closing Sunday evening, the seventh.

A number of persons of large experience in the broad field of charity will be present by invitation to deliver addresses on special themes. Among those thus invited we notice the name of our friend, the distinguished educator and philanthropist, Miss Julia Tutwiler, of Alabama. If we mistake not, this is the first time this body has held one of its meetings in the South.

The Missionary Debt.

As will be seen on our fifth page, we have made a start in the matter of paying off the missionary debt. Let all our readers give according to ability, and the debt will be paid. Let the subscriptions roll in. The money will not be called for until a sufficient sum is subscribed to liquidate the entire debt.

In the Living Present.

The Independent complains that most sermons, usually called grand, are but rhetorical pyrotechny. Are abounding with imaginative and speculative nonsense. Moody's sermons, though plain, exhibit everywhere common sense and sturdy strength. Preachers should adopt the style of the better class of evangelists.

The Christian Register remarks that there are two types of preachers: Those whose strength lies in organizing, and those who know how to spiritualize and enthuse. Both are needed. Sometimes the two gifts are conferred on the same person. In that case there is immense and marvelous success.

Dr. Hoss says in the Independent that our church requires a better-equipped ministry. The proper equipment of ministers had not kept pace with the building of large churches. Our preachers had done well; but the manifest advancement in all branches of erudition required now a higher standard of intellectual cultivation in applicants for the ministry.

The Watchman, of Boston (Baptist), endorses the above views. Says the reason why less men than women are found in most churches is because that too much of the preaching lacks mental strength and culture. True learning would raise the preacher above pedantry. He would know how to accommodate himself to his hearers.

The Methodists and the Roman Catholics have established universities in Washington, D. C. Now the Israelites have taken steps to found a similiar institution at the same place. Some Jews object to this enterprise because of apparent clannishness. The Hebrew Union College, in Cincinnati, meets with large success.

The Expository Times, of Edinburgh, discourses upon "What the Bible Teaches about the Human Body." Christ's incarnation, more than anything else, had ennobled human flesh. Our bodies are temples of God. The doctrine of the body's resurrection had permanently established its dignity. It is hence that only in Christian lands hospitals and infirmaries are found.

Appleton's Popular Science Monthly brings an excellent article on genius. Holds that it is not a mere morbid intellectual condition. Genius resembles insanity as gold resembles brass.

ICH DIEN.

NOTES.

Rev. R. M. Standifer had a royal reception at Oxford, Miss.

The address of Rev. H. W. Knickerbocker is 813 Fonchet street, New Orleans, La.

If the pastor does not introduce the church paper into the homes of the people, who will?

Rev. T. L. Mellen had a cordial reception at Canton. His congregations are steadily increasing.

Rev. H. R. Singleton has made a fine impression at Rayne Memorial, both in the pulpit and in the social circle.

Rev. S. S. Keener is doing good work at Dryades Street, and is steadily growing in favor with his people.

We are pleased to be able to present to our readers in this issue a sketch of Judge Merrick from the pen of Bishop Keener.

Rev. J. W. McLaurin occupied the pulpit of Dryades Street Sunday morning, and took a collection for the American Bible Society.

Rev. H. W. Knickerbocker has made a very auspicious beginning at Louisiana Avenue. His congregations are steadily increasing.

Rev. C. W. Huff, of the Mississippi Conference, has been transferred to the Columbia Conference, and stationed at Klamath Falls, Oregon.

Rev. C. R. Montgomery, of the Louisiana Conference, has been transferred to the Pacific Conference and stationed at Butte City, California.

Rev. J. F. Scurlock is making full proof of his ministry at Morse Street. He preaches a full-orbed gospel, and is diligent in house-to-house visitation.

The article from the pen of Bishop Hendrix, on our first page, presents much valuable information concerning Korea in the good old Methodist form of question and answer. We invite especial attention to it.

Dr. H. W. Featherstun has made an auspicious beginning at Central Church, Meridian. He commands large audiences and has addressed himself to the task of building a handsome parsonage during the year.

The membership and congregation of Dryades Street Church gave a reception last Monday night to their pastor, Rev. S. S. Keener, and his wife. Dainty refreshments were served and appropriate recitations were charmingly rendered. The attendance was good and everybody was delighted.

Rev. J. F. Foster is showing himself to be a real hustler. We know of no one who can pay more pastoral calls in a given time. The old saying, "A house-going pastor makes a church-going people," finds abundant confirmation in his case. The increase in the size of his congregations has been very remarkable.

On Friday night, the fifteenth, in the Sunday-school room of Ryan Memorial, a reception was given to Rev. H. R. Singleton and family by the members of his church and congregation, to which this scribe received an invitation. It was a most enjoyable affair. The chief feature of the occasion was, as it should have been, the "feast of reason and the flow of soul," but there were also delightful accompaniments in the shape of good music, well-rendered recitations, and toothsome refreshments.

We had the pleasure of participating officially in a very pleasant matrimonial affair on the fourteenth at the residence of Mrs. R. W. Lee, 2106 Royal street. The contracting parties were Mr. J. C. Lindsay, of Ashwood, La., formerly of Amite county, Miss., and Miss Nina Virginia Hazlip, youngest daughter of Mr. and J. Hazlip, of Adams county, Miss. The happy couple have our hearty congratulations. May the richest blessings of our heavenly Father attend them through life! They begin their matrimonial career as all Methodists should do—by subscribing for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

MUL-EN-OL is the most modern remedy for pain, and is free from all objectionable features of the old-time remedies. MUL-EN-OL tastes good, smells good, and does good. It soothes and cools, instead of Irritating. It instantly quiets the pain, and effects a permanent cure.

MUL-EN-OL

Drives away every sort of pain—external or internal, in old or young. When you meet with an accident, or are attacked by sickness, MUL-EN-OL, if applied at once, will prevent it from becoming serious. Have it ready. Sold everywhere. Price 50c., $1.00, $2.00. Prepared by FINLAY, DICKS & CO., New Orleans.

To Subscribers.

We dislike to lose a single subscriber, but we can not continue delinquents indefinitely. Quite a number of names will be cut off soon if arrearages are not paid up. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

Special Offer.

From now until the first of March we will sell our Holman Bible, in emerald type, at $1, instead of $1.15, to subscribers who pay a full year in advance. After March 1 the price will be as heretofore—$1.15. Better not miss this bargain.

Prayer Meeting Topic for January.

THE GOSPEL IN ISAIAH.

Jan. 3—A Gracious Invitation. (Isa. lv, 1, 2, 6, 7.) Jan. 10—The Sure Word of Promise. (Isa. lxv, 24; xxx, 19; Ps. cv, 42.) Jan. 17—The Wells of Salvation. (Isa. xii, 2-6.)

JAN. 24—THE HIGHWAY OF HOLINESS. (Isa. xxxv, 8-10.)

(Day of Prayer for Colleges.)

Isaiah beautifully describes in chapter 35 the great spiritual change that would take place in the future of Christ's reign. In the preceding chapter there is a description of most awful desolation that would happen to all of Israel's enemies (verses 8-15), and it seems also to be a foreshadowing of the final judgment and desolation that would overtake all the enemies of God and his people. From this gloomy picture the prophet turns, in the next chapter, to a picture of desolation converted into beauty and glory. An era of joy, and peace, and righteousness is foretold. It partly has reference to the return of Israel from captivity, but largely refers to the moral and spiritual beauty that would spring out of the world's disorder under the reign of the coming Savior.

In the midst of the desert of this sinful world there is set a highway, a way on which the redeemed walk with singing and everlasting joy in the direction of the heavenly Jerusalem. As to this way we may note:

(1) Only the holy travel upon it.

The character of the travelers gives the name to the way—"The Way of Holiness." There must be a radical change wrought by the Holy Spirit upon the moral nature of every individual who travels upon the highway. The desert of sinfulness must become the garden of holiness. (See Isa. lii, 1; Joel iii, 17; Ps. xxiv, 3; Heb. xii, 14; Matt. v, 8.)

(2) The travelers enjoy the benefits of divine companionship.

The indefinite expression, "But it shall be for those," is in the margin of text. "For he shall be with them." God will continually be with those who travel the way of holiness, and hence there is no danger from any lion or raveneus beast. "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." We are blissfully secure if Christ is near.

(3) The way is easily accessible.

"The wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein." The poorest or simplest man will not be denied a passport, nor will make any mistake in finding the way in which to travel.

(4) The travelers are joyous. (Ver. 10.)

The Christian's joy finds its expression in singing, and shines forth in the countenance. "With songs and everlasting joy upon their heads."

If you have not yet pledged something for the special foreign missionary fund, do so at once, notifying Miss Alma M. Sawtelle, corresponding secretary, 4812 Prytania street, New Orleans; and if you have not yet paid the amount of your pledge, please remit as soon as possible to Mr. E. H. Prescott, treasurer, 1030 Louisiana avenue, New Orleans.

Nothing additional has been reported since last notice in ADVOCATE.

FOR MOTHERS

O mothers, so weary, discouraged,
Worn out with the cares of the day,
You often grow cross and impatient,
Complain of the noise and the play;
For the day drags so many vexations,
So many things going amiss;
But, mothers, whatever may vex you,
Send the children to bed with a kiss.

The dear little feet wander often,
Perhaps, from the pathway of right,
The dear little hands find new mischief
To try you from morning till night;
But think of the desolate mothers
Who'd give all the world for your bliss,
And, as thanks for your manifold blessings,
Send the children to bed with a kiss.

For some day their noise will not vex you,
Their silence will hurt you far more.
You will long for the sweet children voices,
For a sweet childish face at the door;
And to press a child's face to your bosom—
You'd give all the world just for this!
For the comfort 'twill bring you in sorrow,
Send the children to bed with a kiss.

A New Cure for Drunkenness.

"I was out last night doing the town," said he, "and of all the rackets I ever had in my life it beat all of them!"

"Why, I thought you had sworn off drinking," remarked his friends, apparently surprised.

"So I have—and that's where the racket comes in. You see, I had never done such a thing when I was sober. It was a new sensation. And, incidentally, I have discovered a new cure for drunkenness. Keeley isn't in it—cure you in one night, see?"

"No; I can't say that I do."

"Well, I'll tell you. Just go out with the gang you have been used to traveling with, and stick to soft stuff and cigars yourself all night. Stay right with them all night; go where they go and see what they see and do, and listen to them talk. In other words, get their measure of fun and see what you would have called fun yourself if you had been drinking. You'll then understand what a fool you have been lots of times.

"I tell you that if I had had a stenographer and taken down everything that was said, writing in the action and background, and showed those fellows the plain truth, they would never touch another drop as long as they lived.

"Of all the drivel that passed for wit, and the lugubrious stuff that posed as humor!

"And they were smart fellows, too—sober. They laughed at everything—when one said anything. They went to a new bar every ten minutes till midnight, and the most brilliant thing uttered up to that time was 'cheer up!' This created such enthusiasm that he repeated it every now and then as they sat about the all-night places. Funniest thing I ever saw in my life! Fact. I'll never drink again. Not where I can be seen and heard—bet your life!" — New York Herald.

The Bases of Friendship.

Friendships are as diverse as the bases upon which they rest. Many of our friendships rest upon nothing more substantial than the fact that we happen to be thrown with certain persons. They live near us, or we meet them frequently in our daily work. In similar conditions we might have become equally attached to ten thousand other persons. There are others between whom and ourselves the first tie was equally fragile, but, as we came to know them better, we discovered an identity of tastes, and were constantly surprised by unexpected agreements. Thus the bond of deep sympathy was formed between us. There are still others to whom our moral admiration goes forth. The sweetness and strength of their character appeals to us. Their sympathy is precious. We count ourselves fortunate that we ever came to enjoy the confidence of their charming and inspiring fellowship. We talk lightly of love as though the word always meant one thing. There are many different kinds of love. Only one of the bonds of which we have spoken may subsist between people who are said to love each other, or all may subsist, but with varying degrees of strength in different cases. And beyond all this is there not a harmony of souls which the keenest analysis cannot precisely define? A look of another's eye, a gesture, the choice of a word, an accent, becomes an open door through which we discern a spirit to which we are drawn. Perhaps all of the deepest love is, in certain respects, love at first sight. We do not reason about it, we are moved by it.—Watchman.

The Things That Are Lovely.

Some very earnest young Christians make a mistake in putting too light a value upon those graces of manner and little courtesies of speech and conduct which might commend their excellent qualities to others, and thus give them the vantage ground of personal influence. If a merchant has diamonds to sell he does not shut them up in a drawer, nor display them in a rough box. He does not say: "Nothing can add to the value of a diamond, and I will not condescend to any tricks to catch admiration or draw customers. If a man really wishes to buy he will come to me."

What he does is to put his jewels upon beds of satin, in cases of velvet; to use every art to display their beauty. He knows very well that people who have never thought seriously of buying may be attracted by the beauty that catches the eye and arrests the attention.

Your Christian principles ought to be rendered so attractive by your personality that those who know you will associate goodness with graciousness.

Neatness and good taste in dress, a careful avoidance of all rude and disagreeable habits, conformity to the customs of good society, these are by no means trifles to be ignored by those who claim to belong to the highest court of honor. You do not properly represent your sovereign unless you are not only a patriot, but a gentleman.

The great majority of those with whom we come in contact must judge us by externals, and if we covet that most precious power of influence, we must see to it that we do not so repel them by the prickly outside that they never care to go any deeper. We are, indeed, to think upon the things that are true and pure, but not less upon "those that are lovely and of good report."—Emily Huntington Miller.

Life More Abundant.

The man who is not greater than his calling has mistaken his sphere in life. If we read aright the Creator's plan, it is to fit men out with talent and resources abundant for every demand in the calling he allots them, also to leave them a surplus to be used and further developed in fields and opportunities where they touch life and their fellow-men along other lines.

Hiram Golf, "shoemaker by the grace of God," had the skill and consecration to make shoes that did his humblest customer the best service. And at the same time he was the spiritual leader in the community, at whose feet even the village pastor was glad to sit and learn lessons of wisdom for himself and his people.

The man who is content to be simply a wheel in the shop, letting others plan and think for him, will not find his crown on that line. While he can not be too faithful to his trust, or too careful of the day's demands, he is bound to think of himself as one of the kings in this nineteenth century, having in his hand the sceptre which bears its sway for good or ill the wide world over.

Holding to this, he will not barter his manhood for wages, or sell his conscience for gain. As he takes up the day's routine he will find mind and heart feeding and expanding over the thought of his larger relationship and responsibility in life. And the thought of this will react upon the work in hand, glorify and shape it. He will not stoop to shoddy work, carve a crumbling stone, or build with rotten timbers. His work will be sought after. His daily sphere will widen. Because of the larger life his soul lives, glory and honor will crown the very work of his hands, however lowly.—Standard.

Keeping the Body Pure.

I see young men before me who are destined to great success in the fields of literature and of science, if they keep their bodies pure. I shall not have many occasions to appear before [illegible], but, if this were the last word that I were ever to speak to any audience, I should like to say that, after a long life, in which I have been acquainted with many men of science, many men of letters, many men whose business it was to work their brains, and to work them hard, even harshly, I can testify to you, as they would testify to you, that, if the brain is to do the work, if it is to be kept at work, if it is to produce the marvels of literature, the spirit and body must be kept pure, kept under subjection. You know how many instances there have been where the noblest promise has been flung away because the purity of life was not there. There was not that personal purity by which alone one sees the love of God. Especially is it the business of a body like this to build up the cause of personal purity, the cause of temperance. By whatever method you see, you should teach boys and girls, young men and women, how they are to keep their bodies pure, to make them living temples of the living God.—Edward Everett Hale, in an address before the Unitarian Temperance Society.

Little in Thine Own Sight.

In an English dock yard a great ship was to be launched. An immense crowd gathered to see it glide down the slides that were to carry it into the water. The blocks and wedges were knocked away; but the massive ship did not stir. Just then a little boy ran forward and began to push the ship with all his might. The crowd broke out into a loud laugh, but it so happened that the vessel was almost ready to move; the few pounds pushed by the boy were only needed to start it, and away it went into the water. Now, that was a little thing, but you see what it did.

Oftentimes the little things you do don't seem of much account. But they are. One Spring morning a little boy planted a single seed in a bank of earth. It grew, budded and blossomed into sweet blue violets unseen by the child planter. It also seeded, and the seed fell out upon the bank of earth, and next Spring more violets grew; and so for years, increasing every season. The boy, grown a man in a foreign land, desired to visit his childhood's home. When he saw the bank of violets he remembered how, years before, he had planted there a single seed. "Can it be," he said, "that all these have sprung from the single seed I planted?"

Religion in Education.

It is a difficult question to answer how the moral education of children can be carried on without religion. Certainly a school where religion is made the rule of life has always been most successful in producing the best types of human character. The first schools of the modern world were Christian schools. To these Christian schools and colleges the present day owes its best achievements, its highest advantages, the activities of its incessant progress. A school without religion is next door to a school of crime. And where the literature of history and of human life are studied as necessary parts of the course, by what argument can the literature of religion be excluded from the studies of children and youth? Morals are best based on religion, and the complete document of religion is found in the Bible. —Churchman.

Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D.: "I have long since ceased to pray, 'Lord Jesus, have compassion on a lost world!' I remember the day and the hour when I seemed to hear the Lord rebuking me for making such a prayer. He seemed to say to me, 'I have had compassion upon a lost world, and now it is for you to have compassion. I have left you to fill up that which is behind in mine afflictions in the flesh for the body's sake, which is the church. I have given my heart; give your hearts.'"

Spurgeon once observed to a friend, of a Methodist minister they had just heard preach: "Ah, that's the stuff of which martyrs are made!" "That stick!" exclaimed the friend. "Yes. He's so dry, he'd burn well!"—Exchange.

Education in the Home.

The place above all others where an educated Christian woman is needed is in the home, especially in the home of those in moderate circumstances, where the mother, with little help, does her own work and superintends her family. It may look to others as if her time and money had been wasted and education were useless, but she herself feels the advantage. It is probable that she did not have a special training for these duties, but her habits of systematic study, her interest in the advancement of the race, and her desire to do whatever she does with an enlightened conscience, led her to adopt the best methods in her housekeeping. When we think that perhaps nineteen-twentieths of the happiness we shall ever know we get at home, the influence of an educated Christian woman in the home can hardly be estimated.—The Gospel Messenger.

As a father in a garden stoops down to kiss a child, the shadow of his body falls upon it. So many of the dark misfortunes of our life are not God going away from us, but our heavenly Father stooping down to give us the kiss of his infinite and everlasting love.

HYGIENE.

Nervous Debility.

In a previous article on "Weak Nerves," we dwelt on the things to be taken into account from the conservative side. Recovery must not be expected too soon, or too easily; and when attained in part must not be considered an indestructible thing. Nervous strength or weakness was largely inherited, was seated in the brain; and the brain could be increased in power and resistance only very slowly, and by physiological instrumentalities. Now, a word is necessary as to special and general remedial agencies in nervous debility. Perhaps the most unfortunate course that can be taken is the abandonment of all active duties, and the lapse into a self-nursing, half-invalid habit. Not only does the body then run down, and give the nervous elements a still poorer soil in which to sustain themselves, but the nervous energies themselves take on idle, if not vicious habits. A tendency to erratic, trivial, or restless and changeable impulses is apt to set in. Hysteria, in female or male, is not then very far off. So, the person suffering from nervous debility needs to be rather more on his guard than does a well person. Regular and not-to-be-avoided tasks need to come to him with each day. Let them be specially selected, and made appropriate in amount to his strength. But be sure they come. The machinery is light and sensitive, it is true, but it needs a fixed weight to make it run steadily. Without it the average sufferer can not be comfortable or gain any ground.

Gardening, the care of animals, any outdoor mechanical work that is congenial—these are things to look to for real rest, and the chance for a recovery. As for temporary and immediate remedies, or tonics, find them if you can, only look out for stimulants that must leave the brain still weaker. The tonic applications to the skin seem to be the most natural and most efficient. Each case will here need special study. The reaction should be immediate and pleasurable. If not, no good is being done. Extreme measures will usually disappoint, though they may cause a temporary gain. The nervous system, even in its depression, is a very elastic thing. Take, in illustration, the fact that in an epileptic the fits can be suspended for a while by almost any strong drug as yet untried, by the passage of an electric current, even by a good switching. Only in one time they come back, just as before. So the summary of advice is to keep such a person fairly occupied, and look for improvement mainly to agencies that act continuously, pleasantly, and slowly. Among these, air, oil, and sun baths are likely to be found of the greatest utility. Diet should include fats as far as digestion warrants, and not very much meat. Tea, coffee, and alcoholics must be entirely laid aside, in favor of cocoa, hot salted milk, or simple water, as preferred.—Written for the Housewife's Club by Dr. C. W. Lyman.

Mrs. N. M. Harris.

Mrs. N. M. Harris, wife of Rev. H. J. Harris, died at the residence of her son-in-law, Dr. J. C. Robert, at Centreville, Wilkinson county, Miss. In the eighty-second year of her age, on the morning of Dec. 18, 1896, after an illness of about three weeks, our mother passed into eternity. She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South, from her childhood, enduring for years with patience and willingness the toils and sacrifices of the itinerancy, at last reaping the glorious reward of a home in heaven. Amid all her suffering the blessed promises of the Savior were still precious to her soul, and in the night of death she sang that sweet chorus, "Oh, how I love Jesus!"

Gentle, kind, ever thoughtful of those with whom she came in contact, she won all hearts. Trusting in God's Holy Word, she never faltered in her duty and devoutness as a Christian. No husband ever had a more faithful wife and helpmeet; no parents a more loving, obedient daughter. God never gave to children a better, sweeter mother, an ideal sister and friend. "None knew her but to love her."

When the Master called she was ready and willing to go. The years to come will be so desolate to those of us who still linger here, without her love, her wise counsel, her unselfish devotion; but she is gone, and even in our deep sorrow we would not call her back if we could. Heaven is nearer, dearer, because she is there.

She leaves an aged husband, six children, and many more relatives and friends, who will sadly miss her all along life's weary way.

May He who says, "I will not leave you comfortless," help us to bow in meek submission to His divine will in this dark hour!

Farewell, mother; thou art resting
In the Shepherd's peaceful fold.
By God's grace we all shall meet you
When we cross death's river cold.

Blessed Jesus, in our sorrow
Let her still our guardian be.
May we reach the shores eternal,
Guided by her prayers to thee!

Her daughter,

TAYLOR—Mrs. GREYSIE M. TAYLOR (nee Dorsey) was born in Geneva, Ga., Oct. 11, 1877; joined the M. E. Church, South, when but ten years of age, and lived a most beautiful Christian life until her death, which occurred in Poplarville, Miss., Nov. 30, 1896. About two years ago she was happily married to Mr. J. E. Taylor, of Enterprise, Miss., a most estimable Christian gentleman, and they twain, with hand in hand, hearts bound together in the most holy affection, began life anew in the service of their Master, and thus peacefully and happily wended their way up life's rugged hill until God said, "Greysie, I need thee in heaven. Thou art too pure to remain longer on earth." Like a beautiful lily her pure life sprang up and budded on earth to bloom in the eternal garden of God.

The loving husband and grandmother (the only members of her family near), physicians and many friends did all in their power to alleviate her suffering and stay her life; but God had willed it otherwise, and the beautiful, young and tender mother gave her life for her little babe, Greysie Dorsey Taylor. May this little darling grow up in the image and likeness of her mother!

It has not been our fortune to meet a more lovable character than Mrs. Taylor. She was a model Christian, a most constant reader of the Bible, devoted to her church and all of its ordinances, and always said she was ready to answer God's call at any time. She was unconscious of her last sufferings, and peacefully passed over the river without feeling its chill; but the sweet and heavenly smile that lit up her face showed she was conscious of meeting her Savior.

Dear bereaved ones, she is up yonder keeping watch over you, serving to make heaven nearer and dearer to you; with outstretched arms is bidding you follow on, and with her own dear hands will open the pearly gate for your entrance.

Though she was in our midst but one short year, we feel that we have known her from childhood; and since, by her pure and spotless character, her perfect devotion to God and his cause, her kind and gentle demeanor in her home, her sincerity as a friend, and the beauty and purity of her every-day life, she won our love and admiration; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we earnestly believe God sent her to us for an example, that we might see in her what it is possible for a Christian to be.

Resolved, That in her death our church and Sabbath-school have lost one of their best and most consecrated workers; our society one of its most loved and influential members.

Resolved, That her bereaved husband has lost a most loving, faithful and tender companion; her parents and grandmother a most dutiful, sacrificing and devoted daughter; her brothers and sisters a kind, solicitous and loving sister.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved ones our heartfelt sympathy and sincere prayers that God will sustain them in this, their darkest and most crushing hour of sorrow.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the sorrowing ones, and also to each of the NEW ORLEANS and Alabama Advocates.

Kindly submitted

MANGUM—Sister RACHEL MANGUM, companion of Arthur Mangum, was born in 1816, at Bennettsville, Marlborough district, S. C., and died at Silver Creek, Miss., Oct. 22, 1896, aged about eighty years. Her father moved to Rankin county, Miss., when she was ten years of age. At the age of eighteen she was married to Mr. Wm. Dixon. One child was given to her by this marriage—W. E. Dixon, in 1839. Mr. Wm. Dixon died in 1842. At his death she moved to Simpson county, Miss. She married the second time Mr. Hugh Allen, in 1847. He died in 1860. At his death she moved to Dabb's Creek, where she lived with her son until married to Mr. Arthur Mangum in 1867. They lived together happily for twenty-nine years, when, on the twenty-second of December, 1895, the angel of death bore him away, and ten months later she took her flight into the realms of glory. It was my happy privilege to have been her pastor for four years, and a more devout and consecrated Christian I have never known. All preachers were welcome to her home. Her place was seldom vacant in the church. She was a very devoted member of the M. E. Church, South. She raised a number of children, but only one of her own, and they all rise up and call her blessed. Children, be faithful, for some day we will find her in heaven.

M. L. WHITE.

Montrose, Miss.

BOWMAN—Mrs. NANCY COOPER BOWMAN, daughter of Upton and Mery Cooper Money, was born in the southern part of Tennessee on Dec. 7, 1833. At ten years of age her mother died, and her father brought her to Mississippi, where she was cared for by her uncle, Pierson Money. She was married to E. W. Bowman in Richland, Holmes county, March 27, 1851. She was the mother of ten children, six of whom are living. She first joined the Baptist Church before her marriage, and after her removal with her husband to the present home in now Lincoln county, in 1866. She united with the Methodist Church at New Hope in 1871. She was faithful to her trust. She was taken seriously ill the day she was sixty-three years old, and after a fearful struggle she died on Dec. 27, 1896. She told some of her children during her illness that she did not expect to recover, but that she was ready and prepared to go to rest. On the twenty-eighth of December, after the funeral services, the remains were buried at New Hope, to await the resurrection of the just. She was a good Christian, mother, and wife. May God comfort and save the bereaved husband, children, and sorrowing friends!

C. McDONALD.

Caseyville, Miss.

RUSSELL—Sister MARY A. RUSSELL was born May 4, 1839, and died at Mt. Pleasant, Miss., Oct. 26, 1896. She married Mr. Russell, of Calhoun county, in 1855. This union was blessed with ten children—seven sons and three daughters. The family lived in Calhoun, Webster, and Lafayette counties for the last fifteen years in that part of Lafayette known as Woodson's Ridge.

Sister Russell joined the church in early life, and was a consistent and devoted member till death. She was sorely bereft in the loss of three adult sons, and also of her companion two years before her death. With the self-denial of a true mother, she was working hard to complete the education of the younger children. Already in broken health, she left the old home and moved to Mt. Pleasant, to secure the advantages of a good school. After a few weeks she was taken with fever, and died in peace. The grief-stricken children brought her back to the home church, Mt. Zion, where, with the sympathies and tears of a host of sorrowful friends, she was laid to rest by her husband. Thus passed away a true friend, a kind neighbor, an affectionate mother, and a devout servant of God.

Catarrh Three Years.

A CURE IS FOUND AT LAST IN DR. HARTMAN'S FREE TREATMENT.

It reads like a novel. Every word of it, however, is personal history and exact truth. A young man has before him a brilliant career. Chronic catarrh has fastened itself upon him. He tried many remedies in vain. At college a room-mate persuaded him to try Pe-ru-na. Pe-ru-na cures him in a short time, and he goes on his way rejoicing. Without the Pe-ru-na the success in life would be impossible. Chronic catarrh has blasted many a career. It would have blasted this young man's career if it had not been for the kind suggestion of a friend. Read what A. F. Stern, Marine City, Mich., says:

"I was troubled with catarrh for three years and tried almost every catarrh medicine I heard of. I went down to Delaware, O., to attend college, where I got one of your almanacs, and saw another remedy for catarrh. I was almost discouraged with trying all kinds of medicine, but my room-mate told me that your medicine was all right, and so I tried it. After taking seven bottles according to directions, I was cured and felt like a new man. I recommend it to all who are suffering with this dreadful disease. It is the best medicine for catarrh. I owe my health to you."

All catarrh sufferers will be interested in a book written by Dr. Hartman. It is an instructively illustrated 64-page book, and treats of catarrh in all its stages and locations. It will be sent free for a short time by The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Japan wants American shipbuilders to construct her men-of-war, and she has already ordered two.

This month will witness the inauguration of twenty-seven governors, and thirty Legislatures will be in full blast.

McKinley will be the third Methodist president of the United States. Of the others, eight have been Episcopalians, six Presbyterians, two Unitarians, one Christian and one Free Thinker.

The boys' wing of the Buckner Orphans' Home, near Dallas, Texas, was destroyed by fire. Fourteen boys and five girls perished in the flames.

The Congressional Committee on Elections on Friday, by a unanimous vote, declared that Judge Taylor Beattie, the sugar Republican contestant for Congressman Price's seat for the Third District of Louisiana, was not entitled to the seat upon any claim.

A meeting of citizens was held at Ruston, in Lincoln parish, last Friday, to consider the condition of the people in the drought-stricken district of North Louisiana. It was set forth at the meeting that some 25,000 people require relief to keep them from starvation, and that the $65,000 devoted out of the State treasury for their succor had been expended and the supplies are about exhausted.

The Rev. William J. Brown, pastor of Wesley's Chapel in London, arrived in New York last Thursday. He comes to this country to collect money to restore Wesley's tomb and to complete the retoration of the chapel, which is the shrine of Methodists. England has contributed $79,000. Only $10 000 more is needed, and Dr. Brown will make a tour of the United States and Canada to raise this sum.

FOREIGN.

Dr. D M Bye, Indianapolis, Ind.:

DEAR FRIEND AND BROTHER—I write to thank you for saving my life. I am now seventy-six years old; have had cancer for over twenty years. For the last six years it has been very bad; it was on my nose and under my right eye. Many physicians treated me; I was treated last by an old doctor who claimed to cure cancer, but I got worse. My nose was eat nearly off. I was afraid to wipe my nose for fear I would wipe the end of it off. My nose and face had swollen so that I could not see; my sufferings were so intense that I was compelled to go to bed, as I thought, to die in despair. Some friend sent me the Religious Herald, published in Richmond, Va. Rev. H. H. Butler, who lives near me and who has visited me and given me much spiritual comfort during my sufferings, gave me your book, "The Message of Hope," saying while there was life there was hope. He wrote to you for me. You sent the oils and I used them and began to improve immediately, and it was not long before my nose began to heal nicely. The great sore under my eye healed up and I am now well. Glory—glory to God, I am now living and those terrible sores are gone. I can't find language to express my gratitude to you, dear Dr. Bye, for what you have done for me. I wish everybody suffering knew of your oil cure. God bless you.

Yours, in grateful remembrance,

JESSE BALLARD,

How to Make Money.

About a month ago I saw an advertisement in a religious paper where Dep't A 5 of the Iron City Dish Washer Co., of Sta. A, Pittsburg, Pa., wanted a few good agents to sell their latest improved dish washer. I wrote them and they sent me in particulars how to sell the household article. When the machine arrived I showed it to my neighbors, and I took orders in every home that I visited. It is the easiest thing to sell, and without any previous experience in selling anything, I sold a dozen the first five days. The firm gave me full particulars how to sell it, and I found that by following their instructions I did well. The machine washes and dries the dishes in less time than it takes to tell it. Then a woman don't have to put her hands in the greasy dish water, and everyone knows how disagreeable that is. I am making lots of money selling the dish washer, and any other energetic person can do the same. Write them for circulars. A COUNTRY WIDOW.

"THE ANGEL IN THE MARBLE."

BY J. BYINGTON SMITH.

The angel from the marble leaped
At touch of artist's hand,
And from its rocky prison walls
Came forth at his command.
Somewhere, perchance, at touch of thine
There may emerge some form divine.

The marble rude and rough may seem
No beauty to behold;
It may be cold and hard and dead,
With blemishes untold;
But if our eyes within could see,
An angel there might chance to be.

The possibilities within
We may not fully know;
But when another's good to serve
We 'neath the surface go,
With love of heart and light of mind,
An angel we may chance to find.

If hidden angel you disclose,
Or character reveal,
And where God's image seems effaced
Enshrine a true ideal,
Then will both God and men avow
An artist of the spirit, thou.

Korea, Kelley, and Cuba.

BY W. B. PALMORE.

In a recent issue of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE Dr. Kelley is squarely between Korea and Cuba. His view is comprehensive and very readable, entertaining and suggestive, but we are surprised at such an utterance from such an optimistic, enthusiastic missionary as the the Doctor has ever been. The breaking of banks, the crash of mercantile establishments, the stress and strain of publishers and religious newspapers has, doubtless, elicited undue alarm. Our present financial distress can hardly extend into the twentieth century or much beyond the next presidential election. Any intimation or suggestion of retreat from the Orient should not be entertained for a moment. The missionary conscience and hope of the world is in America, and to leave the evangelization of Asia and Africa to the church of the Old World would be to turn back the clock of progress at least a hundred, if not a thousand, years.

In the first place, Russia, even in the European dominion, will hardly extend her present religious intolerance much beyond the close of this century. If we admit the probability of Korea becoming a part of the Russian Empire, and also admit the possibility of Russia's continued religious intolerance, it is all the more incumbent upon all Protestant Christendom to bend every nerve and energy to the immediate evangelization of the twelve millions of the Hermit Kingdom. It will be about ten years before the completion of the 7,000 miles of railroad between Petersburg and Vladivostok. There is scarcely a probability of further conquests on the Pacific shores before this Herculean enterprise is accomplished. During the intervening decade, if all Protestantism would do its whole duty, Korea could be so thoroughly indoctrinated that it would remain so even under Slavic dominion.

In Petersburg there is now an English Church. In Warsaw there are German Catholic Churches and Jewish synagogues. In Moscow there are Lutheran and Armenian Churches, and in the city of Kazan are yet 10,000 Tartars worshiping in a Mohammedan mosque. These various faiths are already tolerated within the present dominion of Russia, but are not allowed to proselyte or make converts among the members or children of the Greco-Russian Church. If Korea could accept and adopt the Protestant faith and then come under the dominion of Russia's present intolerance, it could remain Protestant. Instead of abandoning the field and fleeing from a distant possibility of Korean subjugation, let all Protestantism in "double-quick" advance at once to its immediate conquest. Let us, also, be prayerfully preparing to open doors which may soon open to the very heart of Russia's present dominions. Before the clock strikes in of the next century this entire Empire will doubtless blaze like a sea on fire, with a glorious Protestant evangelism.

The argument for abandoning Korea in favor of a branch of Protestantism which has entered with a stronger force, applies with equal point to Cuba. This "Queen of the Antilles," a charming island of such immense agricultural possibilities, is a bagatelle compared even with little Korea. Before the fatal devastations of the present war, there were only 965,000 white native Cubans, 400,000 negroes, 100,000 Spaniards and 35,000 Chinese. Only 1,600,000 all told. In proportion to the number to be reached, the Southern Baptists have entered Cuba with a much stronger force than both Methodisms combined have entered Korea. Cuba, only ninety miles across the gulf stream from Key West, is so near to our point of view as to darken or endanger the general perspective. She has been making such a noise of late as to drown the cries and claims of distant Korea in the ears of our distinguished and brilliant friend, Dr. Kelley.

In a few months Cuba will doubtless be free or under home rule. In either event the barriers will be broken which have so long obstructed the progress of Protestantism. With the sentiment and sympathy engendered by her suffering and heroic struggle for liberty, there will be but little trouble to raise the men and the means to turn a gulf stream of redemptive light, love and life on the shores of our long-suffering and much-persecuted little neighbor. She speaks the same Castilian tongue as Mexico, and her evangelization is only a side issue, a left wing movement, in our march toward the Southern Cross; in our swing of spiritual conquest from the Rio Grande to Patagonia. Instead of relaxing our grasp or turning our eyes from Korea, we should be projecting a new mission in some Mohammodan lands, like Morocco or Tunis. And also into the heart of the Congo Valley of Africa. The intellectual stimulus and subjective, spiritual energy coming back to us from all mission fields is worth ten times the money we thus invest.

Though the kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together; though the heathen rage, the banks break and the money-changers imagine vain things, our God still lives and walketh upon the winds and the waves of the tumultuous evening of this eventful century. And his command is, "Go forward!"

The Writings of Sir Walter Scott.

"Of making many books there is no end," said the wise man, and no one who glances over the public library, the popular book store, or the catalogue of the cheap publisher, will be disposed to doubt the truth of his assertion. The charming "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table"—blessed be his memory!—professed to having the same love for books that "a stable-boy has for his horses;" and I am sure there is no genuine book lover who does not recognize the feeling. And yet, Mr. Editor, there are "books and books;" some to be taken in generous proportions, others that should be labeled like edged tools, "Handle with care," or like these bottles upon the druggists' shelves which bear the legend of the skull and cross-bones and the inscription, "Poison." There are books that act as a mental tonic, inspiring and invigorating the soul; others that leave a bad taste in the mouth and a moral taint in the blood.

It is next to impossible to prevent the character of our reading from leaving its impress upon our lives. I was surprised while DuMaurier's famous—or should I say infamous?—novel was at the height of its popularity to read of the formation of a "Trilby" club among the theological students of a church school in a leading Southern city! Had it been a "Susannah Wesley" club, or a "Lady Huntingdon," I should at once have argued as to the source from whence the young divines drew their mental pabulum, and with more hope I must confess that the congregations of the future were to be edified!

I have just been reading an attack upon Sir Walter Scott's writings, made by a critic whose name is of considerable weight in the literary world, and who is himself a writer of great ability. He thinks Sir Walter is stilted, old-fashioned, and absurdly romantic, and that he should be relegated to the book shelves to serve only as a landmark in the curious progress of men's tastes in fiction.

When "benny Sir Walter" lay a-dying, where he most wished to die, "within sound of the murmuring of the Tweed," he stretched out his hand to Lockhart, his son in law and future biographer, and said: "Be a good man, my dear. Nothing else will profit you when you come to die." During the latter part of life, after bankruptcy, disease and premature age had come upon him, he kept a diary, in which he recorded faithfully his reflections on, and recollections of, the age in which he lived.

Believing that there were personal allusions that might wound or embitter the feelings of persons then living, or their immediate descendants, he left directions, after keeping his journal under lock and key during his life-time, that its publication should be deferred until sixty years after his death, believing that length of time sufficient to obliterate all feelings of a personal nature.

These two little incidents give us the key to the inner life of the great writer whose fame will continue to increase after the names of his detractors have been buried in oblivion.

The biography of Scott, by John Gibson Lockhart, is one of the finest specimens of that style of writing extant, being second not even to "Boswell's Life of Johnson."

Mr. Andrew Lang has recently made a valuable contribution to current literature in the shape of a biography of Lockhart himself, in which he tells of the stanch and loyal affection displayed by Lockhart for his great father-in-law, showing also that Lockhart's fame as a writer rests mainly upon his "Life of Scott." This book was a labor of love, its profits being devoted towards helping to pay off Scott's debts, and it has won for its author not only lasting fame, but the gratitude of succeeding generations of readers. It has also made it possible for the modern world to realize that the loves of David and Jonathan, Damon and Pythias were but types of the lasting friendships that often exist between man and man.

It is an easy matter to realize what Scott has done for literature if we will once try to imagine what the world of letters would be without him. History itself has taken on a mere gorgeous coloring, a more splendid setting, since Scott made her province his own.

What were all the portraits of Richard I. worth compared to the splendid figure who marches with such stately tread through the magic pages of "Ivanhoe" and "The Talisman"? Where else do we find such a picture of the rapacity of the Jew—the injustice with which he is treated—as in Isaac of York? Such a portrait of beauty and goodness in adversity as in Rebekah? Shakespeare himself must yield to Scott in his presentation of the Hebrew character, the prejudices of the Englishman of that day having evidently drawn the picture of Shylock and his unnatural daughter, Jessica.

From whom else do we get such a picture of Louis the Eleventh of France? Both Victor Hugo and Bulwer have drawn a portrait of this royal Machiavel; but the world accepts Scott's portrait as the genuine one. Where else do we find such a picture of Mary Stuart, half woman, half queen, as on the lonely island in the midst of Lochleven? And where do we find the proud Elizabeth so well depicted as in the pages of Kenilworth? Of the host of minor characters who glide across his splendid stage, it would be impossible to speak. Dominie Samson, Meg Merrilies, Dandie Dinmont, and Roderick Dhu, live, move, and have their being, and have become a part of English literature.

Scott, in his diary, confesses to a lamentable weakness for his robust "villains," and says his heroes are "a shabby lot;" but there is no attempt on his part, as with some conspicuous modern novelists, to make vice attractive and virtue repellant. His heroines are mostly on the sentimental order. So were Shakespeare's, for that matter, and so have been all true women since the world was made. His sentiments are invariably pure, manly, and elevated; his delineations of character faithful, and his style inimitable.

It may be regarded as old-fashioned to profess such admiration for the genius of Scott; but in the times when romances of two worlds and all that dangerous breed of exciting and speculative novels are to be found in the hands of every boy and girl, it is assuring to realize that at least there is one author whose pages will prove to those whose tastes are not vitiated at once instructive and entertaining. Dr. Robins Not Whitewashed.

MR. EDITOR: The article copied in your columns from the Southwestern Presbyterian, in which the North Georgia Conference is charged with whitewashing Dr. Robins, hardly does the Conference justice. As I introduced the resolutions at which the staunch Calvinist sneers, I ought to know what was designed.

Dr. Robins is a man of very pure character. His integrity has never been impeached. He has tried to settle some questions which have been too mighty for men of far greater ability; and in trying to hold on to his Methodism, and yet reconcile Methodist theology with rationalism, he has expressed himself in somewhat questionable language. He holds to the entire sinlessness of Christ, and finds in it an argument for his statement that while all must be born again, it is not because all are sinful, but because all, Christ included, are human, and thus imperfect. He, of course, changes the definition of regeneration to suit his views, and adopts the course of the old transcendentalists, who were so mercilessly satirized by Henry Rogers in the "Eclipse of Faith," in using old terms with new meanings attached to them. He denied what no man among the Methodists ever held, the totality of depravity, or the entire absence of all power to do good, and the imputation of Adam's sin to helpless and innocent infants. While he said this was total depravity which he rejected, he said he fully believed in inherited tendencies to evil. When he was asked if he believed in the Articles of Religion as they were laid down in the Discipline, he said most positively he did. The utterances of his book did not seem to many to quadrate with this statement, and yet these utterances were so contradictory and confusing that it was impossible to say exactly where the good Doctor stood; and it was thought a wise thing to give him full credit for his disclaimers, and at the same time put the Conference right on the subjects at issue. I introduced the resolution and advocated its passage, and I think I am sufficiently orthodox for any demand. I am persuaded that the intolerance which will not allow any to differ with one's own interpretation of an article of religion, or a dogma, or a statute of the General Conference, can only do harm. There are men who are longing for martyrdom, and we can not gratify them more than by arraigning them for contumacy or heresy, and there are others who are so convinced of the correctness and vast value of their views that they feel that it is a duty they owe to the world to utter and defend them. A well-informed reader is sometimes amused at hearing as new some things orthodox theologians have known as old, and which have been repudiated for many years; but one is not disposed to charge as willful heresy errors which are, after all, the results of defective information. There are too many things which are radically wrong in this world for us to be strict in exacting a perfect accuracy of statement with reference to disputed questions. I must say I regard the book Dr. Robins has published as by no means a strong nor a safe book; but I do not think many are likely to be injured by reading it, for what they can understand is harmless, and what they can not understand will possibly be not injurious to them.

The Doctor, it seems to me, has been bewildered by the glitter of words, and really does not say exactly what he means; but no man who knows him doubts his perfect honesty of purpose and his sincere desire to do good to an unhappy world. That his church should come to his rescue, and should so unqualifiedly endorse him, is natural, and only shows how warm is their love for a very lovable man. That we have in our Conference very decided differences of some unsettled questions is very true; but the very large number of our preachers stand by the articles and by the interpretation given to them by our standard.

There is as little Broad Churchism among us as there is in any of the Conferences with which I am acquainted. If there are dangers—and there are—they do not come from heresies, but from the churchly ambition which prides itself in elegant churches, in wealthy members, and in large numbers, and lowers the standard until it can take in those who know nothing of vital godliness, and whose lives are a stigma upon the church which they join. Of course, heresy comes in the wake of this ungodly ambition; but oftentimes it is found where men boast of soundness of doctrinal view. We are in more danger of the clerical selfishness which intrigues for place and schemes for worldly reward than we are from any errors of doctrine. The men who are arraigned often for heresy or disregard of the Discipline are in all respects better men oftentime than those who arrest them. We strain at gnats and swallow camels. We must be patient and tolerant.

Snakes.

BY J. B. GAMBRELL.

The Bible suggests a natural antipathy on the part of the human race to snakes, and all men are witnesses to the truth of the teaching. We hate snakes. Some of them are entirely innocent, even very useful; but we want to kill them all.

When a boy, snake killing was a part of my business in snake season. There was that kind of horror about it that a fugitive boy would like, and danger enough to thoroughly spice it. Dogs were trained to hunt snakes. They were worth nothing for anything else and the snakes killed were worth nothing; but that figured nothing with me. Once the snake rage gets in the blood, questions of profit and loss disappear. With this frenzy on, every hole in the ground was a snake hole, and I was sure everyone I could not see the bottom of had a snake in it, maybe a whole nest of them.

The passion for snake killing made me inventive. I got me a long, tough pole, fixed a sharp piece of iron in one end of it, with which to pierce and mutilate serpents in their holes. Armed with this and followed by my dogs, I would have thought nothing of spending a whole day on a very cold track of a snake, even though the serpent had no fangs. Indeed, my idea was to clear out the snakes, if we lost a crop. The wiser counsel of my father always prevailed, however, and I was put in for a good deal besides snake killing.

All that was more than forty years ago. How different it all seems in the cool atmosphere of manhood and experience. Largely my dread of snakes has died out. One bit me when I was a boy, but that was when I was hunting them and one of them found me.

There are not anything like as many snakes as I once thought, and most of them are not dangerous. Lots of holes have no snakes in them. And as I see it now, hunting snakes is a poor business. I have never known anyone to make a living at it.

In politics and in religious work we have snake hunters. They are on the alert always for something bad. Everything they do not perfectly understand, they feel sure has in it something bad. They are dark minded, full of evil surmising, and ready all the time to strike at an imaginary evil. A boy's mind, inflamed with the snake frenzy, teems with snakes. It is the greatest snake den in the country. And in the mind of a man of evil spirit there is a limitless capacity to manufacture bad things among his brethren.

I have modified my views on snakes, but still believe them no akin to the angels that kept their first estate; yet, in my judgment, they are as angelic as that spirit which is ever on the hunt to find evil among God's people.

These religious snake hunters infest the churches. They are of both genders. Sometimes the pastor is of the tribe. Suspicion breathes through his public and his private utterances. He loves the morbid excitement of chasing rumors of evil. Some gloat on the fall or the slander of a brother preacher. Brethren in public places are viewed always as suspicious characters. Any evil report of any of them has ready reception. No greater calamity can befall a church than to have such a paster. He is sure to dry up all noble feeling in the church, diminish benevolence, and usually finds himself in the end starved out. He leaves the church dry and barren beyond measure with the evil effects of his malevolent influence.

There are sisters of this same perverse and satanic spirit. They gleat over a bad report and breathe moral pestilence through the church and community by dark suggestions issuing in whispers, reminding one of the hiss of the serpent.

As I understand the snake question now, wisdom suggests that the main business of life is work. Snake killing is only incidental. If a plowman comes on a vicious snake, his business is to mash his head and go on. There is no need to lose the day beating the wriggle out of his tail. That will go out when the sun goes down. A man who sends off after snakes for the glory of killing them, is a fool. The paster who introduces a heresy among his people or a false report to refute it, is another. One other point. Snake books are bad reading for children. They make bad dreams and might develop a lot of snake killers. By the same token literature full of suspicion-breeding matter is bad for a church. Mature, sound-minded people can read snake literature and be none the worse for it, and so can sound, active, Christly men and women read snakey religious papers without damage. The parallel holds further, and grown people do not want to read snake stories much and sound Christians abominate so called religious literature that is slimy with suspicion, and vocal with the hisses of unsanctified hate. The only people who enjoy such writings are the ones who most of all ought not to have them. Wise parents will supervise the reading of their families and wise pastors ought to do the same for their flocks, as far as practicable.—Baptist Standard.

UNANSWERED PRAYERS.

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Like some schoolmaster, kind in being stern,
Who hears the children crying o'er their slates
And does not help,
Since in his silence and refusal lies
Their self-development, so God abides
Unheeding many prayers. He is not deaf
To any cry sent up from earnest hearts;
He hears and strengthens when he must deny.

He sees us weeping over life's hard sums;
But should he dry our tears and give the key,
What would it profit us when school were done
And not one lesson mastered?

What a world
Were this if all our prayers were answered!
No!
In famed Pandora's box were such vast ills
As lie in human hearts. Should our desires,
Voiced one by one, in prayer ascend to God,
And come back as events, shaped to our wish,
What chaos would result!

In my fierce youth
I sighed out breath enough to move a fleet,
Voicing wild prayers to heaven for fancied boons
Which were denied; and that denial sends
My knee to prayers of gratitude each day
Of my maturer life; yet from these prayers
I rose always readied for the strife
And conscious of new strength

Pray on, sad heart!
That which thou pleadest for may not be given,
But in the lofty altitude where souls
Who supplicate God's grace are lifted, there
Thou shalt find help to bear thy future lot
Which is not elsewhere found.

Some Things I Do Like.

When I find a thing is growing monotonous I like to vary it a little, and when I can conveniently do so, I like to accommodate a brother or sister; therefore, I'm going to try to answer at least two questions asked by "C. M. P." in the last issue "of a paper which has long been a constant and valued visitor to our home." As "C. M. P." made the same omission "Aunt Betsy" did, "some of us are still wondering whether or not it is our 'C. M. P.'" If our good editor, who we all know is our Dr. Black, will allow me space, I'll answer though the same medium. First, he wants to know "what object the author had in view when writing it?" There is in human nature an indescribable something which causes us to wish to tell our woes to others. I once knew an old colored woman who used to sing:

"Sometimes I go to meeting, and wish I'd stayed at home; Sometimes I get religion, and then I'm glad I come."

I had been "to meeting," where I saw and heard some things I didn't like. The desire to "tell it" to others became so strong I yielded to the temptation "to write it up," which thing I did. My object? Why, to get sympathy, of course. Which object I am glad to say I accomplished. I was not so stupid, however, as to think I'd get sympathy from some without getting censure from others. If 'twill add any to the brother's comfort, I'd like to say that the "cornet, violin, and other instruments" were not included in our "side-show." If they had been, my article might have been "more voluminous than it was." So, brother, you justified yourself too soon. As you have "convinced 'Aunt Betsy' against her will" that she has failed to hear some things, I'd like to ask if you have heard them all. I, like you, believe most of us agree that the failure on the part of any given individual to know of the existence of a thing does not necessarily preclude the possibility of said thing's existence." Therefore, if some objectionable features do exist in some choirs, and you do not happen to know it, their existence is not thereby affected in the least measure. I am not going to fall into the same error and say because I do not have the notion "that an old tune is bound to be a good tune," said notion does not prevail, as you say. I have heard some old tunes—not in our hymn book, however—that I would not allow my dog to howl if he could. But I do say that the majority of our old hymns in common use, like "Solomon's Proverbs," have never been equaled. I haven't raised any objection to new tunes. It is the multiplication of words and books I object to. If I thought there was any danger of keeping our hymn book "up to date," I'd buy a supply of the present edition for my children and grandchildren to use; but I have no fears on the subject. There are too many loyal men and women in our church who would not agree to exclude all save "such pieces as Topladay, Bethany, Nettleton, and Martyr." It might come about that at the end of another four years some would object to those; then we would have none of our "Standard" left. I hope the committee who compiled the present edition will not be "utterly cast down" by your criticism, since there are so many who appreciate and praise their work still alive. "Let's suppose one case." Suppose we had a ball-room attached to our church, wouldn't that bring people to the church?

Indian Mission.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to report through the columns of the ADVOCATE that the debt on the Indian Mission in Mississippi has been paid, and the deed made to the Board of Missions of the Mississippi Conference, and I have about $13 left in the treasury to begin a new year with. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name." (Psalms.)

And now I want to thank all that have contributed or in any way helped toward this great work. I pray earnestly for a great and gracious blessing upon one and all. Brethren and sisters, we will never regret what we have done and paid for the conversion of these poor and much neglected people. If only a few are saved, our money will be drawing compound interest. If I can be instrumental in God's hands, by my humble efforts, in saving one poor Choctaw, I will be infinitely happy for ages. Some seem to think it a waste of means or an unlawful expenditure of money to carry on the work. Well, they will doubtless change their minds if they ever get to heaven and see some of these poor Choctaw Indians up near the throne praising God forever. O how happy I will be! Glory and honor to his name for allowing me to engage in so glorious work! I believe as much good has been done acording to amount expended, taking all the circumstances into consideration, as has been done in any other missionary field, and that we ought to continue the work with enlarged efforts. Some think they ought to go to the Territory; very well, but let's not send them heathens, but let us send them converted Indians and workers.

It would be a disgrace and sin to send them in their present condition; send missionaries to the Indian Territory to convert the Indians there and neglect the ones in our midst or make an effort to save them in a mission field, and admit that it is too expensive to save them here in our midst of churches and in the blaze of gospel light. Away with such an idea; be it far from us to thus reason or think, and let us go to work in good earnest for their conversion and final salvation, and then if they want to stay here all right, but if they want to go let's send them as missionaries, and not as heathens. Now, we have two missionaries for this year—Rev. J. H. Holland, the pastor of the Linwood circuit and Indian Mission, and James Johnston, Choctaw, the assistant on the Indian part of the work; and the Board of Missions appointed me again to act as agent for the Mission, and I want to say to the friends of the Mission that we want to buy some more land, but can't afford to buy on a credit, and so I am in the receptive mood.

I would like to raise $400 this year. Can I hope to do it? Why, yes; 80,000 Methodists in Mississippi ought to pay that amount before breakfast. I ought to have all I need in a week. I ought not to have to make another call, but all will not help, all are not interested for these poor, lost and friendless people; but surely there are 400 that will send me $1 each, and, if so, oh, how happy I would be! Send as before—postoffice money order on Hormanville, or registered letter to me at Hermanville. And, now, let me report the following amounts received since my last report, to wit: Bro. H. N. Harris, New Orleans, $1; Bro. R. R. Jayne, Jackson, $1; Bro. R. W. Millsaps, Jackson, $1; Bro. J. B. Lusk, Jackson, 50 cents; Bro. T. P. B., Jackson, 25 cents; Bro. T. McLoud, Jackson, 50 cents; Bro. A. K. Adkisson, Jackson, 25 cents; Bro. D. E., Jackson, 10 cents; Bros. Boyd and Buckly, Jackson, 50 cents; Bro. H. K. Hartly, Jackson, 50 cents; Bro. L. B. M., Jackson, $1; Bro. T. C., Jackson, 25 cents; Mr. Harris, Jackson, 15 cents; Rev. M. L. Burton, Wesson, $5; Dr. E. P. Partin, Hickory, $2.50; Rev. T. L. Mellen, Canton, $1; Mrs. A. S. Cook, Jackson, $1; Mrs. C. A. Alford, Jackson, $1; Mrs. A. C. Jones, Jackson, 35 cents; Mrs. E. T. Lacy, Jackson, 25 cents; Mrs. — — Enochs, Jackson, $1; Mrs. J. F. Price, Jackson, 25 cents; Mrs. A. M. Shields, Jackson, 50 cents; Mrs. — — Allen, Jackson, 25 cents; Mrs. — — Sharky, Jackson, 50 cents; Mrs. Matthew Harris, Oak Ridge, $3; Miss Mary Ford, Jackson, $1; Miss Addie Purnell, Jackson, $10; Miss Addie V. Marshall, Brookhaven, $2.50; Rev. W. J. Dawson, Williamsburg, $2.50.

Many thanks to all the above and all that have helped, and may God bless them all! When you lay down this paper send me $1 more, or less.

Yours in Christ,

A. D. MILLER.

Tchoupitoulas Mission.

MR. EDITOR: A lame hand has, for some time, delayed my making this acknowledgment. In response to the appeal you kindly published for us in behalf of the worthy poor around our Tchoupitoulas Mission, there came to me, on Christmas Eve, an envelope, containing ten dollars, accompanied by the following lines: "Please find inclosed ten dollars. Please use it for the poor, with God's blessing." No signature to the note. It was with feelings of deep emotion I read these simple words, and with a heart full of gratitude in behalf of the needy ones who were ministered to. I write this that the unknown donor may knew what a blessed mission that contribution accomplished in the Master's work. The same evening, after getting the amount in change, I went up a flight of stairs in one of the many old brick buildings near our mission, to a room where lived a most worthy poor family. The husband and father is partially paralyzed, and is slowly wasting away with consumption. The mother and wife, with the assistance of one daughter, washes and irons to earn bread for the family of six. How glad I was to leave a portion of the money there—in the Master's name, and as coming from him. And, with a real joy in my heart, I visited other homes the next morning—Christmas—and left a portion. One family who shared it consisted of an old woman seventy-five years old, her daughter, and five children. This family had almost suffered for bread before we found them. Oh, how much sunshine was carried into these old rooms called "homes" by this help for them in their time of great need! I know not the one, but He who said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me," hath taken notice, and a "book of remembrance was written before him" for that one.

Boarding Heme for Working Women.

A Boarding Home for Working Women, under the auspices of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society of this city, has been established at 1119 Melpomene, between Camp and Magazine streets, and is now open for occupants. This institution is to be self-supporting and unsectarian.

By an appropriation from the Central Committee, of three hundred dollars, the liberality of friends and the generosity of the managers, the building (consisting of twelve rooms) is neatly furnished and the rent secured for the present year. It is presided over by Mrs. Stafford—a courteous Christian lady—who enters on her work with deep interest in its success.

This Boarding Home is the result of patient effort on the part of the president of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society (Mrs. F. A. Lyons) and her co-workers. Its object is to provide a comfortable and suitable home for young girls coming to this city in search of employment, to surround them with refining influences, and to help them to spend their hours of recreation in a manner both pleasant and beneficial to themselves. This is to be done at a moderate cost so that something of their hard-earned wages can be "saved up" for a "rainy-day" or given to lift the burden of poverty from dear ones at home. But, "while the greatest comforts can be obtained at the least expense," this is, by no means, a "charitable institution," in the ordinary sense of the term. Its inmates are expected to render a fair equivalent for board and lodging.

Honest independence is a principle inseparable from true nobility of character, and among the ranks of these who labor are found the best women of our land; women whose culture and refinement would adorn a palace or grace a hovel. The only charity connected with this work is embraced in its true definition—love: that power—so gentle and yet so strong—that all the storms of persecution have been unable to quench it, and all the fires of martyrdom powerless to burn up.

A grand work has been accomplished and is still being done by our Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society, for "it has been touched by the finger of God, and is destined to live." It is especially woman's work, because it is her province to smooth by her gentle ministry the rough places of life—to encourage the despondent and whisper words of sympathy to the bereaved. It is her promise to keep the home-life sweet and pure by her love and prayers and to seek out those deprived of its blessed influence and surround them, as far as possible, with its protecting care.

With this object in view, and encouraged by the success of similar institutions in other cities, with no aim save the glory of God and the extension of his kingdom, this new work is launched forth consecrated by the prayers of Christian women.

At the last Annual Convention held in Little Rock, Ark., Miss Bennett, president of the Central Committee, spoke as follows: "Every organization owes its existence to certain causes or conditions which have created the need of it, and the strength or weakness of those conditions, and the force with which they appeal to the people directly or indirectly affected by them, determine the character and importance of the organization."

If this work is needed in our midst, the blessing of God will rest upon it, and its influence will live in the lives of others long after the loving hearts that planned it have ceased to beat.

Like a pebble thrown into the sea, causing wave after wave to rise and fall, as each recedes to the shore, so the loving influence of a Christian home shall impress itself upon successive characters until each in turn shall reach the shores of eternity.

E. R. KENNEDY,
Conf. Rec. Sec.

As the first fruit of the "Baby Roll," I have the pleasure of enrolling Miss Annie Lucillo Heath, born June 23, 1896, Shiloh Landing, Issaquena county, Miss.

The sweet letter from baby's mama, and the bright home-picture folded in with the crisp new dollar bill—membership fee—all combine to make a beautiful prophecy for this division of the P. and H. M. S.

Before the close of our Conference year we hope to enroll the name of every baby within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference. Hurry up, little tots.

We wish to draw special attention to the Parsonage and Home Mission number of the Nashville Christian Advocate, which devotes four pages to this work. All members, who possibly can, should procure a copy of this paper. Next week's issue.

Sisters, before you close the list of your New Year's resolutions, turn a search-light into the record of the old year, and see how little help you have given the editor of your P. and H. M. S. column; and before you enter upon the duties of the year now fully upon you, write her a full report of your auxiliary, and tell our readers of your thoughts and plans for this line of our beloved Methodism. Your editor needs your help, sympathy and prayers to make this column the medium of information, strength and support it should be in our work.

Proceedings of the fourth Annual Convention, held at Little Rock, Ark., show what a mighty hold this branch of woman's work has taken on the hearts of the Christian world, and how rapidly it is striding on into waiting fields of usefulness and power, but, at the same time, reveals the sad fact how much more such work is still needed, and how the gospel message is delayed to perishing millions of souls for lack of means to waft the gospel message.

Several letters have been received by the Executive Committee, P. and H. M. S., from homeless preachers in the Mississippi Conference. Think of a minister with a family of half a dozen serving a small charge, and without sufficient salary to rent a home. Think of another preacher with a parsonage supplied, and a large family, who is satisfied with the work accomplished by the Wesleyan Aid Society, without ever thinking of organizing a Parsonage and Home Mission Society, that will reach out a helping hand to the less fortunate brother.

Dr. Hoss, editor Nashville Christian Advocate, says of this work: "There is in the W. P. and H. M. S. a volume of power which the careless and unobservant little understand. It means a deeper piety in the home, a more thorough withdrawal from all these diversions that can not be taken in the name of the Lord Jesus, and a more vigorous and aggressive effort to bring the wicked and wandering back to Christ."

The Week of Prayer, from Feb. 1–7, has been set aside by our leaders with the view of the consecration of the workers. The programme arranged for the week's prayer service is "fitly chosen," and will be a means of grace to every auxiliary that uses it. The twenty-thousand-dollar decennial offering must be laid upon God's altar during this "waiting time." Let every member enter upon that stated time, realizing the responsibility of the occasion, and so spend each day, that when the week closes, she may feel in her heart, "She hath done what she could."

The crown-jewel of the Annual Convention at Little Rock was the establishment of the Lucinda B. Helm Loan Fund, and I want the Mississippi Conference to come to the front with a handsome pledge. Our dear little editor is a great favorite in this Conference!

China's New Woman.

The following letter is from the Woman's Missionary Friend. The clipping from the latest edition of the Nashville Christian Advocate, which follows it, confirms the statement of the young lady, and causes us a thrill of encouragement as we see that truly the day of China's redemption draweth nigh. Redemption from the physical and spiritual bondage of centuries. Let our women give and work and pray as never before, for whom China's women have become a Christian womanhood it will be a matter of great rejoicing to us that we helped to send the light. May the year upon which we are entering witness many triumphs of our Lord's gospel in the heathen nations!

Notes of Marguerite Whong's Journey.

Miss Marguerite Whong, the Chinese young lady who recently visited this country, and whose winsome manner and bright, pure Christian character endeared her to many hearts, sailed for her home Sept. 14, in company with Miss Hartford and other Foochow missionaries. His Excellency, Li Hung Chang, was a fellow-passenger as far as Japan. Miss Ruth Marie Sites has just received a long letter from her little friend, which she shares in part with us, as follows:

"S. S. Empress of China, Sept. 14, 1896.—Surely this is a delightful starting. The stateroom is large and very comfortable for two persons to occupy. What a long time it seems since I started from the dear Newton home, and how much has happened! At Vancouver we had the honor to walk under the beautiful arches made of palms and flowers, which the people had put up for His Excellency, Li Hung Chang. We also found our steamer bright with gay-colored flags. But I feel queer to be among so many Chinese men, and must again be a very proper Chinese lady.

"To-day such a wonderful thing has happened. How I wished for you when the great man Li walked past your little girl, and turned round and looked at her with a real grandpapa-ly expression. Immediately afterward he sent his interpreter to inquire who I am, where I came from, how long have I been abroad, what school I enter, etc. We talked in English, as he could not talk our dialect. Then he went and brought Mr. Lo, the Foochow secretary whom Dr. Baldwin told us. We had quite a little talk, for although I was a stranger and a Chinese man was so happy to meet one who could speak to me in my own dear native dialect.

"After many more questions he said he wished to appoint me to represent our dear China in the World's Congress of Representative Women to be held in London in 1898. Just think of it! Your little girl having something to do with the Chinese government!

"I tell you it will be a great change for China on account of Li's visit to America and England. Why should China send women to meet with representative women of the world? I thought the Chinese government shall never have anything to do with women, and now so soon this new way is opened for all the poor women and girls of my dear country to be accounted side by side with men.

"His Excellency commanded me to learn Mandarin thoroughly; and he is on with my English also, because he desires me to go to Peking and see him before starting to London in 1898; also when we come back we must carry the report to him ourselves, and then he will also present us to the Empress of our China. I trust 'Our Father' for all things, and for this also. Oh, in some way I must help me. I know our work is getting greater and greater; so must you and I together, must work to save this poor, lost nation, and, and by, when we are through in the world, we will go to see our heavenly Father, who is the Lord of lords and 'King of kings,' and, hand in hand, report our work before his throne. We are called to help save China, and so it is his will to make Li me and have something to say to "Your loving little girl,

"MARGUERITE WHONG."

Word comes from China, through missionary channels, that Li Hung Chang has appointed two Christian Chinese women delegates from China to a Woman's Congress to meet in London in 1898. This is a remarkable innovation for China; and it indicates the mental breadth of the Viceroy, which has, doubtless been increased by travel, it is a sign that the cause of womanhood is winning its way even against barriers of conservatism, which is nowhere more rigid in a social than among the Celestials.—Philadelphia Record.

Selections.

In some places, especially in America, it has become a custom for members of the congregation at the close of the week-evening service instead of hurrying away, to wait and converse together for some time before leaving when inclined to do so. Might not something like this take place with advantage at the close of all services of the church? Are not those who are brothren in Christ who gather round the same table of covenant love, and hope at last to meet and worship together in the eternal home above, salute one another, manifest their sympathy one for another before they leave the place where they have been privileged their united homage to their Father in heaven? We are satisfied there was something of this kind in the Apostolic church on the occasion when the members assembled for worship. What else is the meaning of the oft-repeated injunction of the Apostles Peter and Paul—"Salute one another with an holy kiss." According to the custom of our country it means "shake hands"—"Give me the other the right hand of fellowship." The Christian church is a great brotherhood of believers, and as such ought to be the appropriate manifestation of the fact on the part of all the members. If this social element were more cultivated in God's house and in connection with his worship membership in the church would be a greater means of grace than it often is. It would possess a greater attraction for the young; it would be a source of great strength to the weak and tempted; and it would be a source of solace to the aged and the suffering.—Rev. John McIlveen, in Christian Witness.

We never expect much of the man who is going to do great things for the church when the rush of business is off his hands. People who do nothing to do never do anything for the church worth mentioning.

Whom it May Concern:

About three years ago I received a ple bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had er heard of it before. I began g it, however, as occasion re- red, and soon found that it was that is claimed for it, and more, cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and kinds of cores, it is superior to remedy I have ever used. It is exceedingly efficacious in colic diarrhœa. For sore throat it is mparably better than anything ow of. I heartily recommend it medicine worthy of a place in ry household. W. C. BLACK,

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. R. A. Meek, Tupelo, s., writes: "We are pleased h the outlook in our new d of labor. Our reception cordial, and the kindness of people continues. My worthy decessors, Bros. Augustus, on, Honnoll and Sullivan, all ught well, and as a result our rch is in good condition. It tains many earnest, capable kers, and the League and all societies are flourishing. I nowhere seen a choicer or enthusiastic band of young tians than we have here. Board of Stewards is a fine of men—young, vigorous true. If we can keep in h with God and work to- er in love and patience, I no reason why we should not a pleasant and prosperous . Our presiding elder, Bro. nes, was with us last Sun- evening, and preached to a congregation with great tability."

Rev. B W. Lewis, Fair River, , Jan. 12, 1897: "Cor s mas r, and we are back to our f labor, ready for the bat- ainst the ruler of the dark- of this world. We trust all our people enjoyed them- s in commemorating the of our Lord and Savior Christ. We had quite a ant time with our sister and er at McComb City. Ev- ing with us passed off ly. Xmas morning found ppy and full of joy and e. Not one of us (out of een) were forgotten by Claus. We were reminded hose happy days of child- when we were all sheltered r the parental roof. There shouts of joy heard from one as to their plates they o find out what 'Santa' had ght them. And thus the day . We had music upon the n, the harp—but not of ten s—and singing. Eighteen , out of twenty-two, were her Xmas day, and a happy t was for us. We felt and feel like singing, 'Glory to in the highest, and on earth e, good-will toward men,' to us a Savior has come. d to God all of our people d spend Xmas in the right But there are so many who, ad of being filled with the t of God, are filled with the t of the evil one. Too many em act like the hog; when s comes they return to the h of sin. May the Lord them to get upon the rock, t Jesus, and when once to put on the whole armor od, that they may be able tand when the forces of n come against them. Dur- he afternoon I baptized my niece, Willie Henrietta a. God bless the ADVO with its readers!"

Rev. R. S. Gale, Meadville, , Jan. 15, 1897: "This, the lville, circuit is moving on y in some respects. We are entering our third year's among this people. We them for Jesus' sake and their own. Their kindness , in his name, has been and anifested in many ways. bless them, one and all s much as ye did it unto one of the least,' etc. We have six churches to serve, about 400 members to visit, and 30 miles from north to south to travel—not an easy task; yet love lightens labor, and we are content to do the Master's work. Financially, we have done very well the past two years, and expect better [illegible] is now out of debt. Have repaired it some, and are now paling in the yard with good sawed pine lumber. Expect to build a pastor's study, and add kitchen and dining-room to the main building. When this has been accomplished we will have a preacher's home comparatively among the best. Our churches are all in good repair except one, and that we expect to build new soon—in fact, are now engaged in the work and hope to complete by Summer. Sunday-schools, prayer meetings and attendance upon the preached Word have lagged since Conference, owing to bad weather and an epidemic of la grippe and pneumonia. Several have died, many are sick, and we know not the end. We ask the prayers of all. Pray God to sanctify it all to our good and his glory. We regret very much to part with Rev. L. S. Jones as presiding elder of this district. We love him dearly and tenderly as friend, brother and presiding elder. The Lord abundantly bless him and his in their new field of labor! We welcome with pleasure Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt as his successor—a very dear and true friend of days gone by. Success to you, my dear brother and friend. Expect to work some for the ADVOCATE soon. God bless you in and reward you for your labors upon the dear old paper! It is good, better, best."

Rev. S. H. Whatley, Rosedale, La., Jan. 11, 1897: "After two years work on the Prudhomme City circuit—where we built, or partially built, two churches and one parsonage, finishing a third church by ceiling, painting and furnishing with organ; baptizing 57 infants and 18 adults, and having 46 accessions to the church—we are moved to this Grosse Tete circuit. Thank God for our glorious itinerant system! Here I find myself in the footprints of such men as our beloved L. A. Reed, P. C; Dr. J. B Walker, P. E., and others who have followed on, and some gone before—workmen approved of God. On the Prudhomme City circuit, Nov. 24, last, I held a service and baptized six children in a house where sixty-one years before my father, Miah Whatley, preached regularly. The house is solid and sound; now owned by Mr. Brinkman. We are now quartered near Rosedale, La., among a first-class people. Yesterday was our first day at Rosedale. Bro. Wm. Schuhle wrought well in the erection of this beautiful chapel, which the people have named Schuhle Chapel. He will live long in their grateful memories. Wife and children still make pleasant remarks about our move, having met numerous true and loved friends on the route. Dr. Paul Foster and his most excellent wife entertained us royally, and with welcome Christmas gifts cheered the little ones on their way. At Big Cane we found many dear to our heart who added a joyous luster to our merry Christmas. Sister Mary Mixer and family, Dr. S P. Ward and wife, Bro. Scott Andrew and wife, with many others, gave us a welcome which was a stimulant to our energies and benediction to our journey. At Rosedale we found Bro. J. A. Matirne and his wife, who, though almost sick, met us at the depot, conveying us to their home, and making us feel that we were among loved ones and home folks indeed. Rosedale and Matirne (May-turn) have a euphonious significance for December-worn travelers. We find many friends to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE here. We wish you a 'bon voyage' through 1897."

A REVIVAL IN BELZONA, MISS.

At the solicitation of the pastor, Rev. J. A. Wilson, we began a revival at Belzona, Dec. 26.

Circumstances would have looked more favorable for anything else almost but a revival at that time in Belzona. All sorts of opposition in the way of sin and worldliness confronted us. It was the time of the visitation of the "show boat" and "big ball." But, thank God! the ball was almost a complete failure, and the second week of the meeting the old "show boat" was seen slipping silently down the river early one morning. The walls fell down, and, with few exceptions, we took the little town for Jesus Christ.

The majority of the noble-hearted young men and ladies of the place gave themselves to God and to the church. Twenty-three joined our church, and five the Baptist. Belzona is a new town. The people are well pleased with Bro. Wilson. I send one subscriber to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. God bless the editor! W. D. BASS.

THE SPIRIT OF GOD POURED OUT ON BELZONA.

Hallelujah! Standing on the promises of God, we began a meeting here at Belzona, Dec. 26, 1896, and closed it Jan. 10, 1897. Bro. W D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., conducted the meeting for me, his brother, W. W. Bass, doing the singing, and by the help of God we ousted the devil from every corner. The meeting is amazingly wonderful. I hunger for words to describe it, because I can not make it appear too good, or even half as good, as it really is. Twenty-eight persons were joyously rescued from sin, and, perhaps, many others that we know not of. We received twenty-three into the Methodist Church, and five into the Baptist Church.

On the day before the meeting began a theatrical boat landed here at Belzona to stay two weeks, but was soon seen quietly leaving for Silver City. Arrangements had been made for a big ball here in the time of the meeting, but was almost a complete failure. All the young men in this town and vicinity who were ball-goers are now members of the church save two, and one of them is a very clever Jew, and the other one a saloon man who won't take a drink of whisky at all.

We now have a clean town. There are two large saloons here; but during the latter part of the meeting Bro. Bass tested the public sentiment and found most everybody in favor of doing away with the saloons, and now all we have to do is to take legal steps and have them closed up. Thank God for the victory!

Brethren, those of you having charge of these little tough towns, give Bro. Bass a chance at them. He will make his own expenses. You need not be troubled about expenses. All you have to do is to open the door of your church and get him up a congregation to begin with. He is a fine preacher. There is no better in North Mississippi. Any man is fortunate to get him on his work. Pray for us. J. A. WILSON, P. C.

A famous painting shows the infant Napoleon in the chamber of his birth, and shows his mother watching over him. The mother of Napoleon was a strong, healthy, active woman. She brought into the world a family of smart, handsome, healthy children. Without health and strength Napoleon would never have risen above the position in which he was born. His mother could not give him wealth or high station in life, but she gave something better. She gave him the ability to secure these things for himself. She equipped him with a strong body and a clear intellect. Every mother may do as much for her son. The first step in this direction is perfect health for herself. Perfect health in a womanly way. She must take thought for the most important and delicate organs of the body. She must keep them strongly healthy for the performance of the greatest and most wonderful work in the world. Women do not sufficiently appreciate the importance of health and carefulness. This is shown by the dreadful prevalence of so-called "Female Complaint." Every woman may be strong and healthy by taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is not a cure-all. It is intended to cure just one kind of disease, and it cures it. It works directly on the female organs, cleanses, strengthens and makes them healthy. It makes weak women strong, and if it is taken during the period of gestation, it insures health for the child; and, at the time of parturition, comparative freedom from the pains and dangers erroneously believed to be unavoidable.

The physiology of women, in health and disease, is contained in Dr. Pierce's great work, the "Common Sense Medical Adviser." A copy of this book, paper-covered, free to anyone who will send 21 one-cent stamps, to cover cost of mailing only, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

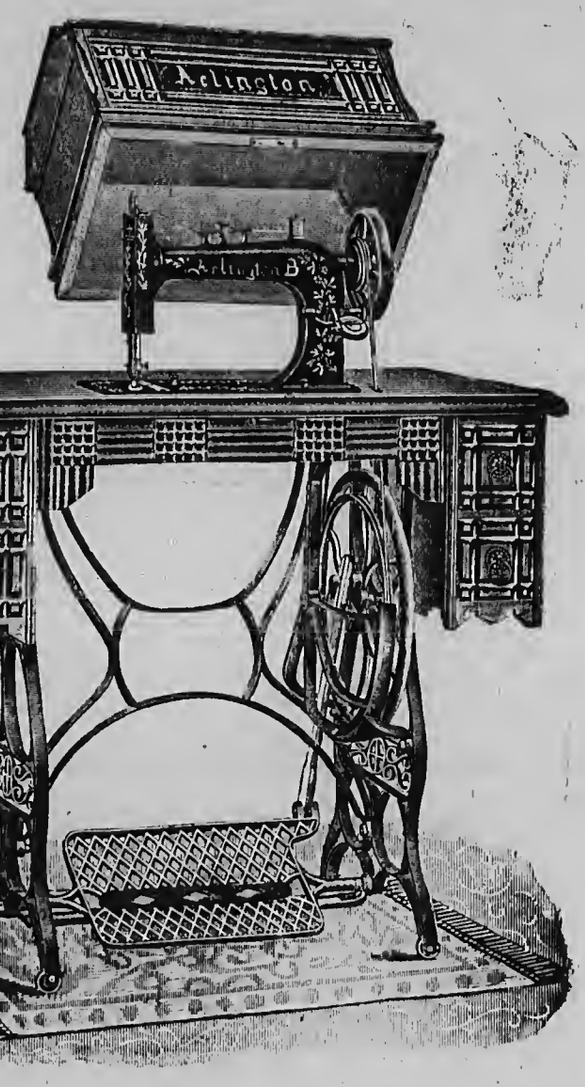
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.



A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $20 50, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '98, and send us $18.50 additional, and we will send you the machine.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

TO AGENTS:

We will send this machine free to any preacher or other person who will send us twenty new subscribers with the cash—$40.

And why not oftener on the living shed
The fragrance lavished on the naheeding dead?
Who needs not ministries of strength and cheer?

Out of the heart's abundance let some cheer
Be spoken while your friend hath ears to hear;
Deck, if you will, with flowers his place of rest,
But fix the sweetest on his living breast.
—O. E. Daggett.

Perhaps you can not always keep from hearing slander, but you can keep from repeating it.

As an expression of a pure, exalted friendship what is more appropriate than the gift of a Bible—God's Holy Book?

Have you subscribed anything for the extinguishment of our missionary debt? If not, why not? Send on your name at once.

Do to-day's duty, fight to day's temptation, and do not weaken and distract yourself by looking forward to things which you can not see, and could not understand if you saw them. —Charles Kingsley.

If some people believe the declaration of our Savior, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God," they have a very poor way of showing it. Who has not seen professing Christians fan the flames of strife?

One of the severest criticisms we have seen passed upon our Christianity is the observation of a Japanese visitor to the United States, that nothing among us so astonished him as to see so few Christians in a Christian land.—Presbyterian.

"Go ahead," is a most excellent motto, but it may be overworked. When you run against a Chinese Wall it is time to stop. It is a mistake to suppose that there is only one Chinese Wall. Such walls are numerous. The man who has not at some time in his life found one crossing his pathway is an exception to the rule.

If you stumble and fall, it will do no good to lie there crying. Get up and move on, keeping your eye open for stumbling-blocks. It is strange that this advice should be needed, but it is. We have known disciples to expend energy enough in grieving over a fall to have carried them a considerable distance along the King's highway.

You who pass a true and tried friend on the street without speaking because of some petty misunderstanding; you who cause intense heartache to one you love by your coldness, your apparent want of sympathy and appreciation, how would you feel if to-morrow morning's paper should announce the death of that friend? Would your conscience be at ease? Such experiences many have had, and have repented bitterly when it was too late.

What of the Night?

Rev. J. J. Tigert, D. D., our book editor, in accordance with his previous record, visited last Fall a number of Annual Conferences. In the last issue of the Review he gives his impressions concerning the status of our Zion as gathered from these travels. We quote as follows.

"The editorial journeyings this Autumn have extended from Hannibal, Mo., on the north, to Abbeville, S. C., on the east, and New Fountain, Texas, six hundred and fifty miles west of New Orleans on the Southern Pacific railway, on the southwest." .... "In the judgment of this editor the machinery of the church was never working more smoothly or efficiently. The omnipresence and omnipotence of the law codified in that little book known as "the Discipline" were everywhere evident. Methodism is still the incarnation of order. Moreover, generally speaking, the state of the church is one of profound peace and of silent, but steady growth." .... "The controversial tone of much recent writing in the press of the church has not reflected, this editor ventures to think, the calm and steady peace of the church itself. Brethren of independence and conviction are differing, in some cases widely, as to policies and measures and opinions, but it is with a very high degree of mutual respect and unity. At more than one Conference an ominous cloud on the horizon has seemed to be sighted, and the vision has been whisperingly reported by an alarmed brother; but the weather prophet has invariably proved to be mistaken as to the magnitude of the cloud or the direction of its movement. Much good sense and practical religion have been manifested in the councils of the elders and brethren. Militant editors and doughty correspondents have been known to dream dreams." .... "Everywhere the vast connection is pervaded by the spirit of connectionalism. Never has greater respect been accorded the General Superintendents; never have they labored more diligently and successfully in discharge of the onerous duties of their high office."

We commend these utterances of our book editor to those of our readers who have been listening to the gabble of alarmists and demagogues about "the disruption of the church." Dr. Tigert is a man who keeps his eyes and ears wide open. If the vaticination of these lugubrious prophets had any foundation to rest upon, his keen eye would have discovered the fact, and he would never have penned such a message to the church.

His message closes thus: "If his readers inquire, Watchman, what of the night? this editor answers, without hesitation, All is well."

Cheering Words.

Never since we ascended the tripod have we received so many cheering words from subscribers as within the last few months, and especially within the last few weeks. Now, almost every mail brings these encouraging missives. One day not long since we received five highly commendatory letters by one mail. One good sister —a woman of vigorous intellect and fine Christian character—writes that she has been a reader of the ADVOCATE since its first issue forty-four years ago, and that she has never enjoyed it more than now. She says that she reads a great deal of the matter of the editorial page. Some write thanking us for the help we have afforded them in their spiritual life. These words of commendation strengthen our hands for the work we have to do. That we may be increasingly useful in our daily prayer.

Found Wanting.

Many men assign as a reason why they do not join the church that the church has inconsistent members. That there are many persons in the church whose lives are inconsistent with their professions must be admitted. Does this absolve anyone from his obligations to love God and keep his commandments? Every man is accountable for himself. The fact that some other man fails to meet his obligations is no excuse for my delinquencies. God has founded the church as an agency for the evangelization of the world. He has made it my duty to unite with that church and co-operate with it in its heaven-appointed work. If other men unite with it, and then so conduct themselves as to be a hindrance instead of a help, does this release me from my divinely imposed obligations? More arrant nonsense was never uttered outside the walls of a lunatic asylum. Men urge such claims nowhere else than in the realm of religion. How is it in politics? Will any man claim that every adherent of his political party is just what he ought to be? And where is the man who refuses to belong to a lodge, or a business organization of any sort, because it has a few members who do not measure up to the highest ethical standard? It will be time enough to give respectful consideration to this plea when men show their faith in it by acting upon it elsewhere than in the realm of religion.

The Bishop of Arizona.

Rev. W. E. Vaughan, of the Los Angeles Conference, spent last Wednesday in the Crescent City, the guest of the editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. He was on his way home from a visit of several weeks to relatives in Mississippi and Georgia. He is a Mississippian, but joined the South Georgia Conference immediately after his graduation at Emory College in '88. He was transferred to the far West four years ago. With a single exception, he is the only one of Bishop Haygood's score of Georgia recruits who remained in the West. He is presiding elder of the Arizona district, which includes the whole territory of Arizona, a region more than twice as large as the State of Louisiana. We were much interested in his account of what is going on in those occidental regions. There, as well as in other parts of the West, there is need of greatly increased revenues from our missionary treasury in order that we may meet the exigencies of the situation.

A Gentle Hint.

Many thanks to the brethren who are so industriously pushing the canvass for the ADVOCATE. If all the preachers of the patronizing Conferences would work for the paper as diligently as some are doing, our subscription list would soon be doubled. And why should not all do it? The ADVOCATE is one of the institutions of the church; and it is a helper to every other institution. No pastor can render a more valuable service to his people than by placing the ADVOCATE into their homes. The value of a good church paper in the home we have never heard questioned by a Methodist preacher. Yet many preachers for one reason or another make no effort to promote the circulation of their Conference organ. How are the people who do not take the ADVOCATE to be induced to do so otherwise than through the efforts of their pastor?

Our Review.

The January-February number of our Review is, in our judgment, the equal, if not the superior, of any previous number. Besides about forty pages of editorial matter, it has ten contributed articles. There are three biographical sketches, viz.: Lovick Pierce, by Walker Lewis, D. D.; W. E. Munsey, by E. E. Hoss, D. D.; and Wm. McKendree, by W. P. Lovejoy, D. D.—all of which are good. Dr. H. M. Dubose has just such an article as one would expect from his able and scholarly pen on the "Value of Scientific Knowledge in Religious Teaching." Professor A. M. Muckenfuss, of Millsaps College, writes interestingly on "The Scientific Spirit."

Dr. R. N. Sledd has a very excellent article entitled "Methodism and the Young People." The able editor of the Arkansas Methodist, Dr. J. E. Godbey, writes characteristically of "The Temptation and the Agony." Prof. Gross Alexander, of Vanderbilt University, makes a contribution to the educational history of Methodism under the caption, "Earliest Western Schools of Methodism." Other articles are: "Poetry and the Spiritual Life," by Edwin Mimms, Cornell University, and "The Two Episcopal Methodisms in the South," by Rev. J. T. Daves, Jr., of the South Georgia Conference. This excellent periodical should be in the hands of all our preachers, traveling and local, and our leading laymen as well.

Dr. R. J. Bigham is magnifying his office as Corresponding Secretary of our General Board of Education. He is constantly on the move in the interest of his work, and is impressing the church with its importance as never before.—Nashville Advocate.

"Restored Friendships."

MR. EDITOR: I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your editorial on "Restored Friendships." That article touched my heart and my conscience as they have rarely been touched. For some time past I have not been on speaking terms with one who was formerly a very dear friend.

I have always felt that I was not entirely blameless in the matter, but I have excused myself from making any effort towards reconciliation on the ground that the other party was the greater offender. I have felt that I was under no obligations to make the slightest advance in the direction of amity until he should ask my pardon and make amends. But when I read your article I saw my duty in a new light. I saw that if God had pursued towards me the course that I have been pursuing towards my old friend, I would have died impenitent and unforgiven. The conviction fastened itself upon me with irresistible power that it was my imperative duty to make advances with a view of bringing about a reconciliation. When I saw this, a mighty conflict ensued. My pride was involved. How could I go to my foe holding out an olive branch, not knowing how he would receive me? Never did I have such a struggle. I wept and prayed and wrestled with the tempter for hours at a season when I am usually in the land of dreams. But, thank God, I got the victory. Through God's abounding grace I was enabled to resolve that if the amicable relations of other years were not restored, it should not be my fault. When I had formed this resolution, I wept again—this time for joy. A sweet peace such as I had not known for years came into my soul. After a time I fell asleep praising God. The next evening I sought and obtained an interview with my old friend. But I did not say what I intended to say. The little speech I had prepared for the occasion did not materialize. I was so conscience-stricken for my own offending that I said nothing about any apology being due me. I simply, with unconcealable emotion, confessed my wrong against him and asked pardon. The scene that followed I do not doubt was watched with tenderest interest by our guardian angels. Both asked pardon; both forgave; tears fell like rain.

For hours we enjoyed each other's society, and parted, I verily believe, with the ties of friendship between us stronger than ever before. I praise God for the new light which I have received and for the grace that enabled me to gain the victory over my own evil heart. JONATHAN.

What Is the Church Doing?

With a clearer conception of the possibilities of the church, there is apt to come a feeling of impatience that more is not done. Our missionary and benevolent societies of every kind are subject to the closest examination, and to tests which a century ago would never have been thought of. A check in any direction is too often looked upon not as an obstacle to be overcome by the same patient devotion that has proved successful in the past, but as a crisis which endangers the very life of that particular phase of work. We become ambitious not for the greater, but the greatest. We want to convert the world by wholesale, do in a decade more than a millennium has accomplished in the past. Under such circumstances it is well to look a little more closely at what is being done, and as we realize how the greatness grows, how each decade, indeed each year, shows its advance, to call to mind the words of the Savior and remember that we have cause for devout gratitude that our generation is so privileged, rather than for complaint that still greater things are not done.—Independent.

A New Book.

WHAT SHALL WE TELL THE CHILDREN? OBJECT-SERMONS AND TEACHINGS. By the Rev. George Y. Baichel.

The material in this volume is now, freshly gathered from truth-proven sources, and has been tested by the author in his own parish with good results. A title is suggested at the beginning of each chapter. The "object used" is given after such title, then the "Scripture basis," which is a more flexible designation than text, follows. The author then gives, in simple language, suggestive and helpful, a description of the object. The chapter headings are varied and cover many subjects. The pastor will here find suggestions for his "five-minute sermon" previous to the regular service, or his talk to the Junior Epworth League or Christian Endeavor meetings. The volume is tastefully bound in cloth, 12 mo, 304 pages. Price, $1.50 postpaid. Wilbur B. Ketcham, Publisher, 2 Cooper Union, New York.

The Arbitration Treaty.

Two nations, only a year ago shaken by menace of war, now thrill with joy over a mutual achievement which crowns the civilization of the nineteenth century with glory. England and the United States are about to engage in an attempt to make war between them henceforth morally impossible. They are about to agree that all their controversies which diplomacy fails to settle, shall be decided by English American tribunals of arbitration. All that remains is to ratify the treaty which has been so promptly negotiated and skilfully drawn, and which is hailed with such glad approval by a hundred and twenty millions of people united by common ties of language, kinship, sympathy and aspiration. Never were these millions, holding sway over more than one-fourth of the land area of the entire globe, so near in thought and feeling and understanding, despite their geographical and natural lines of separation. To President Cleveland and Secretary Olney our nation owes a debt of gratitude, and whether this generation pays it or not, the next will not fail.—New York Independent.

Perhaps the greatest difference between men is to be found in the varying degrees of their capacity for growth. Some men attain their full growth early and never seem to expand afterwards; others are constantly developing up to the very last hour of life. If the power of growth in a man could be measured, his career could be predicted to a nicety; but this power never can be measured, and is therefore the uncertain element in every man's life. There are many young men of promise who never fulfill the pledges of their youth for the reason that they lack this capacity; there are other men who give slight promise of great powers, but who come at last to great influence and position because they possess this capacity. Capacity for growth is not only the measure of a man's essential power, but it also lends a supreme interest to life. The growing man learns something from everything that he sees, does or hears. Nothing can touch him which does not teach him.—Great Thoughts.

If the fifty-one-inch lens planned as one of the chief attractions to the Paris Exposition of 1900 is constructed and mounted in season, it is estimated that the tube will be 180 feet long, that 600 persons will be able to view the heavens simultaneously by its means, and that the moon will be brought within one mile of the gazer's vision. It is expected that M. Camille Flammarion, the widely-known astronomer, will supervise the details of construction and have charge of this wonderful instrument.—Zion's Herald.

The East Mississippi Female College has received several new boarders and quite a number of day resident pupils since Christmas. This speaks well for this institution. The growth is phenomenal. The college is doing a very high grade of work. President Beeson has secured Dr. Featherstun to deliver a course of lectures to his senior class on "Psychology." Dr. Rosa Wiss is still carrying on her course of lectures in "Practical Physiology." Besides these, the students have access to a course of ten lectures under the auspices of the Lecture Bureau.

The religious side of the student life is well cared for in this school. There have been quite a number of conversions among the boarders this session. Nearly all the young ladies in the boarding department are Christians, and many are excellent Christian workers.

This college is doing a great work for Southern Methodism.

We are indebted to our gifted and genial friend, Mrs. R. R. Pegues, Jackson, Miss., for a copy of a booklet which she has recently published, bearing the title, "Missionary Entertainment." It consists of four original poems and a concluding address in prose. The first piece is an acrostic based on the word, "Welcome." Each letter of the word is represented by a little girl who recites an eight-line verse, after which all repeat a verse in concert. The other pieces are as follows: The Rosebud of Richmond, The Rainbow of God's Promises, The Alabaster Box. Appropriate hymns are interspersed. We invite especial attention to it on the part of our good women who are interested in missionary work. It will enable them to give an attractive entertainment at a small cost, the price of the leaflets being only one cent each. Orders should be sent—not to Mrs. Parker—but to Mrs. S. C. Trueheart, Nashville, Tenn.

From a Stranger.

A stranger in a strange land knocks at the door of your sanctum, and begs the privilege of saying a few things. I am in North Mississippi on acconnt of health demands of members of my family, and not because I had any desire to leave Keutucky, and, thanks to Bishop Galloway, the lines have fallen to ns in pleasant places.

The good people of Columbus knew nothing of me, and I knew nothing of them; but, with the true spirit of loyalty to the church, we came together in the sacred relation of pastor and people. They gave us a hearty welcomc, and the prospect for profitable labor is before us; while the people have provided liberally for the pastor, and shall liberally receive snch as he can give them in both pulpit and pastoral labor. The Snnday-school is growing in numbers, the congregations are large, and the spirit of the people is one of hopefnlness. The Epworth League has been reorganized, and promises to be of great assistance to the pastor along every line of work. We are soon to have a beautifni new ceiling in the church, and when it is finished we will have as handsome an anditorinm as there is in the connection. Then the material side will be complete, and the chief thing—the winning of souls—be the aim of all. We often realize but little in our work, and yet I have thought it is ever fully equal to our real expectation, and the failure has been in the littleness of our faith. "Lord, I believe; help thon my unbelief," must be the prayer of many of ns in order to the realisation of greater resnlts, and this prayer is going up from onr heart while there are many unsaved in Columbns, both in and ont of the churches.

Like Elijah on Carmel, we see the little cloud and hear the sonnd of abundance of rain, and are looking for the time of refreshing. Godly men and women are praying for this, and God is a prayer-answering God.

I would like to say to the brethren in the North Mississippi Conference that I am not among you for the purpose of satisfying any ambition, or for any personal gain, but came as a common field hand to take my row, and to be enabled to rejoice with you when the harvest time comes.

The Week of Prayer.

I desire to call attention to the Week of Prayer, Feb. 1–7, 1897, and urge all places where Our Homes is not taken to secure at once at least one snbscription that they may have a copy of the February nnmber, which will contain answers to the qnestions in the programme of Week of Prayer. It is a very instrnctive nnmber, and will explain the work to all who will read it. Our desire is to get the whole church as near as possible to join us in prayer that week—nse the programme and February number of Our Homes, and so learn of the work. I trust that all auxiliaries of the twin sisters, W. F. M. S. and P. and H. M. S., will observe this week.

Mississippi Conference.

To the Presiding Elders and the Preachers of the Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: According to the plan under which we are trying to work, the presiding elders are missionary secretaries of their respective districts. They will make their quarterly reports on the blanks furnished them for that purpose. The preachers will, of conrse, cordially co-operate with them in getting the desired items.

Leaflets have been sent to every pastor for perusal and enconragement to an aggressive campaign in behalf of missions. Let our motto be: EARLY COLLECTIONS — A CONTRIBUTION FROM EVERY MEMBER—AND EVERY SUNDAY-SCHOOL ORGANIZED INTO A MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Let us try to pnt The World for Christ into every home in our respective charges, and persuade every intelligent official member to subscribe for The Methodist Review of Missions. Let our brethren in the ministry, traveling and local, who are not subscribers at once become snch. Let us preach a missionary sermon at least once a quarter, and hold monthly missionary prayer meetings. Let us get all the light we can and reflect as mnch as possible. Let us determine, by God's help, to bring up full collections, or let ns quit repeating the Lord's Prayer or singing the long-metre Doxology. Let ns not only vote as we pray, but pray as we preach. Let ns not vex onrselves by snch questions as, "Korea or Cnba?" but determine it shall be Corea and Cuba, as well as China, Japan, Brazil and Mexico.

Yours faithfully,

T. L. MELLEN,
Miss'y Sec'y of the Miss. Conf

Hazlehurst Church.

The Minutes do not give full credit, and no one is to blame bnt the pastor. We paid $240 on chnrch debt, leaving a balance against the chnrch of only $425. Two of the members agree to give a tenth each of this amount when the entire debt is paid. The pastor received $705. Several dollars were paid after Conference. The Methodists of Hazlehurst have paid nearly $7000 on church and parsonage in the last seven years. They now have a most excellent church property. Six years ago when we went to Hazlehurst the membership was 371. Althongh 100 were added during the six years, yet by removal and death the membership has been redneed to 230. We were shown mnch kindness by the people, especialiy by the elect ladies. Bro. Adams was graciously received, and has made a fine impression. We heard his first sermon, which for thought and spiritnality was a rare treat. We predict for the church a forward movement on all lines under the ministry of the present able and consecrated minister. A tender farewell to dear friends.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

BY REV. ROBERT H. WYNN.

Prayer Meeting Topic for January.

THE GOSPEL IN ISAIAH.

JAN. 31—THE TEMPORAL BLESSINGS THAT FOLLOW CHRISTIANITY. (Isa. lx, 17–22.)

The prophet dwells upon the futnre glory of Christianity, or the final glory of Israel, under the figure of a city that is wealthy, righteous, peaceful, strong and populous—a city that is called "The city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel."

Our reference above makes mention of various material and spiritual blessings that God shall bestow upon this city, or blessings which shall be the fruit of Christianity, and which shall be enjoyed by all God's true Israel.

I.—WEALTH. (Ver. 17, a.)

So marked shall be the increase of the city's wealth that in the materials nsed in its building the precious metals shall substitute the base metals, and throughout materials of greater value shall be used in place of those of less value. Everything pertaining to the church, under the dispensation of the Holy Ghost, is of more value than before (See II. Cor. iii, 7–11). "Gold in place of brass, silver in place of iron, etc., signify evergrowing prcciousness in all that pertains to the temple of holy Zion." (Whedon.) (Read description of the heaveuly Jerusalem in Rev. xxi, 10–21.)

God blesses his church with great material wealth also in fulfillment of the promise, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you". (Matt. vi, 33), and he has a right to expect that it be consecrated to holy uses.

II.—PEACE (Ver. 17, b, and ver. 18.)

The progress of the Christian religion means the progress of liberty security and justice—the trinmph of Peace and the dethronement of War. The recently signed arbitration treaty between England and the United States is a fruit of Christianity, an enlargement of the wall "Salvation" and the gate "Praise." (Luke ii, 14.)

Let ns earnestly pray for the spirit of peace in the borders of our beloved Zion, and for that peace of sonl "which passeth all understanding."

III.—LIGHT. (Ver. 19, and 20, a.)

The city is lighted by God himself. His truth shines in "the face of Jesns Christ," and shines in the hearts of his children, showing them the way they should go, so that they need not fear the darkness of sin. The city of the Lord is not dependent npon artificial lighting, nor upon the light which natnre freely gives, but is bathed in a flood of divine light.

What a beautiful city does Isaiah show thus far! Builded of precions stones, frce from the clamor of strife, and lighted by God himself. Exactly typical of the heavenly city, as well as the earthly church.

IV.—JOY. (Ver. 20, b.)

"And the days of thy monrning shall be ended."

Joy will dwell in the hearts of the citizens of the holy city—a joy that is divinely implanted, and that is superior to every clond of trial and temptation that may arise.

(See reference of last week—Isa. xxxv, 10, also John xv, 11.)

V.—RIGHTEOUSNESS. (Ver. 21, a.)

Purity of character will characterize the inhabitants of the holy city (or nation, as the figure of city seems to expand into the figure of nation); and this is also parallel to the thought in topic of last week, where God's people are represented as traveling upon a "way of holiness."

VI.—PERMANENT INHERITANCE. (Ver. 21, b.)

The temporal blessings of Christianity are eternal blessings. God's people shall never be disinherited.

VII—RAPID INCREASE. (Ver. 22.)

Great results from small beginnings. (See Matt. xiii, 31, 32.) The righteous "remnant" of Israel shall be mightily enlarged through the ingathering of the Gentile world into the church. The population of the city shall continnally increase. "Thy gates shall be open coutinually; they shall not be shut day nor night, that men may bring nnto thee the forces of the Gentiles." (Verse 11.)

Rev. Frederic R. Marvin, long time pastor of the First Congregational Church, of Great Barrington, Mass., and at one time a practicing physician, a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, says of Ripans Tabules: "The formula has long been in favor with medical men, and the method of preparation in the present form is modern and a great convenience. I always keep a vial of the Tabules upon my dressing table, and use them with confidence whenever occasion arises. After a disturbed condition of the digestive organs I know of nothing so good, and for an 'all-round' family remedy I do not believe there is anything better to be had."

Dr. Rosa Wiss.

Dr. Rosa Wiss, of Mississippi, is a striking example of what determined young womanhood can achieve. She was born in South Carolina, and brought by her parents at the age of seven to this State, where she was reared on a farm near Meridian. From her earliest years she was possessed of a great love for natural science, and was filled with an ambition to be a physician. But she was poor, and the future looked shadowy and forbidding. It was not so dark, however, as not to be overcome by a restless energy. At one time her little brother gave her the large sum of five cents. With this a yard of calico was bought, out of which she made a sun-bonnet and sold it for forty cents That amount was invested in more calico, and a dress was made and sold; then reinvestments followed until $12 was realized. She persuaded her father to let her have an acre of ground to cultivate for a year; her request was granted, and from her own labor and the help of the $12 capital a bale of cotton was produced, on the proceeds of which she entered the Industrial Institute and College for Young Women at Columbus, Miss. During the six years spent there she paid her own bills by doing whatever work she could secure, such as washing dishes, and sweeping halls and recitation-rooms. In 1891 she graduated with the degree of B. A. The next year was passed in Meridian studying medicine under one of the leading physicians. In the fall of '92 she entered the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania, paying her way through that institution by giving private lessons in physiology and chemistry to the students, for which she received $2 an hour, and, at odd times, working as a waitress in a restaurant. During the Summers she stayed in Philadelphia nurs-ing, thus making her expenses and gaining much practical knowledge. In 1895 she graduated from the Woman's Medical College, and returned at once to Meridian. Very soon she was requested by two Mission Boards to go to China and take charge of hospital work there, but she said she felt called to practice medicine in the South, in her own State and among her own people. Six months after her graduation as a physician, she took the State medical examination and was granted a license to practice—the first woman in Mississippi who had gained such a distinction. Her reception by the physicians of her State has been cordial and courteous in the extreme. Dr. Wiss has been plying her profession only two years, but she has supported herself from the start, and has established a splendid practice. The influence of this noble young woman's life will be limitless. —Belle Kearney, in Woman's Journal.

Onward.

"And still the tide heaves onward."

A great impetus has been given to coednoation in the South during the present month by the gift of $100,000 by Mr. Washington Duke, of Durham, N. C., to Trinity College, on condition that women be admitted on the same basis as men. The munificent donation was made through President Kilgo, who at the time was attending the Methodist Conference at Kingston. He immediately telegraphed the glad message to the students, who were wild with delight. Going at once to the chapel, they sang: "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," then speeches of the most glowing character were made by their best orators, expressive of their gratification, after which a committee of three was appointed to call on Mr. Duke and present the thanks of the student body for his generosity.

In his letter to President Kilgo, adding one hundred thousand dollars to the endowment of Trinity, he expressly stated that it would only be done with the understanding "that such changes in the laws, rules and regulations governing the college shall be made by those having authority to do so before the close of 1897 as will open its doors to women, placing them in the future on an equal footing with men, enabling them to enjoy all of the rights, privileges and advantages of the college now enjoyed or to be hereafter enjoyed by men."

The admission of girls to Trinity College is being hailed with joy by the women of North Carolina, and they are writing articles urging the girls to take advantage of the opportunity offered of gaining an education equal to that of their brothers, and advising those not prepared to enter college to begin at once to study with that end in view.

The day for higher education for women in the South has not only dawned, but has crept widely up the horizon of intellectual progression. Our girls are thinking independently and are shaping their lives according to their thought. Hundreds are following mechanical pursuits, and one by one they are entering the professions and making superb successes.

HOME CIRCLE.

MY LITTLE LAD.

BY OUSSIE PICKARD DUBOIS.

How fares it with thee in that heavenly land, my boy?
If I could have thee back again but for one hour,
I should know more of heaven's wonders than this world
Has ever dreamed. How strange it seems that thou shouldst know
The heavenly secrets, while I wait and know them not.
My little lad, who learned of me life's love, and now
He knows what heaven is, and face to face has seen
The loving Christ. Through all the weight of loneliness
That sometimes threatens this frail mortal clay to crush,
My heart is glad, with all a mother's depth of love,
To know that thou, dear one, canst ne'er be lonely there;
That close within his sheltering arm the tender Christ,
Who loves with more than mother's love (how can that be?),
Enfolds thee, and thou art content without my arms.
So much my love had planned for thee in future days;
With eyes of sense I can not see how even heaven
Can compensate for all that sweet companionship
That I have lost forever from my earthly life.
But some time, when the evening shadows fall, I, too,
Shall hear the welcome summons to that better land.
O Savior, while thy loving arm dost clasp my boy
Reach down thy hand to me, that, though as yet this earth
Entangle me, my heart may feel the heavenly thrill,
And I may know that I am standing close to thee
Upon the earth-side, while upon the heavenly side
My boy in thy safe keeping waits my coming home.

Be Gracious.

It is reported that one of the most spiritually-minded and charitable ministers of the last generation said aloud, as he left the house of an uncouth and somewhat rough parishioner: "Well, it is clear that the good Lord has some very singular children; grace may live in that family, but I am sure I never could." There are Christian parvenus and Christian boors even in a church communion. You and I have met men and women to whom the strictest of old Scotch rules would not refuse the customary copper tokens for a seat at the Lord's table, who, after all this, we yet know to be such uncomfortable companions; so morose in the usual intercourse of men with men; so harsh in criticism, so peevish under trial, so perverse in views and obstinate in opinions, so rude and clashing in their boisterous conversation, so unmindful of the every-day civilities of society, that we can hardly endure to go near them. To send Paul to put up with a family of this character would seem like a sarcasm. We should rather be would not know we had such creatures in our neighborhood. It would be a mortification to us and a woeful embarrassment to him.

All this is inconsistent with gospel charity, and indicates want of growth in grace. "Worldly politeness," wrote the excellent Doctor Witherspoon, "is no more than an imitation or imperfect copy of Christian charity, being the pretense or outward appearance of that defense to the judgment, and attention to the interest, of others, which a true Christian has as a rule of his life and the disposition of his heart."—C. S. Robinson, D. D.

Boys That Succeed.

"A new boy came into our office to-day," said a wholesale grocery merchant to his wife at the supper table. "He was hired by the firm at the request of the senior member, who thought the boy gave promise of good things. But I feel sure that the boy will be out of the office in less than a week."

"What makes you think so?"

"Because, the first thing he wanted to know just exactly how much he was expected to do."

"Perhaps you will change your mind about him?"

"Perhaps I shall," replied the merchant; "but I don't think so."

Three days later the business man said to his wife: "About that boy you remember I mentioned three or four days ago. Well, he is the best boy that ever entered the store."

"How did you find that out?"

"In the easiest way in the world. The first morning after the boy began work he performed faithfully and systematically the exact duties assigned which he had been so careful to have explained to him. When he had finished he came to me and said: 'Mr. H.. I have finished all that work. Now, what can I do?'"

"I was a little surprised, but I gave him a little job of work and forgot all about him until he came into my room with the question, 'What next?' That settled him for me. He was the first boy that ever entered our office who was willing and volunteered to do more than was assigned him. I predict a successful career for that boy as a business man."

Business men know capacity when they see it, and they make a note of it. Willingness to do more than the assigned task is one of the chief stepping-stones to commercial success.—Selected.

The Railroads and the Saloon.

One by one the railroads of the country are assuming, so far as their own employees are concerned, an attitude of uncompromising opposition to the saloon. Last week the Chicago and Northwestern railroad promulgated an order providing that if an employee is seen entering or coming out of a saloon, or if liquor is detected on his breath, he will be liable to dismissal, and that no grievance committee will be heard in behalf of a man thus discharged. This trend of the times is full of encouragement, and none the less so because the action of the railroads in this matter is not based upon sentimental or moral grounds, but upon self-interest. The greatest business of the world is from the very necessity of the case—because it is entrusted with tremendous responsibilities—compelled to take a firm stand in behalf of temperance.

A Model Member.

Henry Ward Beecher was a great lover of a fine horse. He was sometimes disposed to compare the faithfulness of man's dumb servant with his master, to the disadvantage of the latter. A good story is told that once when about to take a ride behind a horse hired at a livery-stable, Mr. Beecher regarded the horse admiringly, and remarked: "That is a fine looking animal. Is he as good as he looks?" The owner replied: "Mr. Beecher, that horse will work in any place you put him, and do all that any horse can do." The preacher eyed the horse still more admiringly, and then humorously remarked: "I wish to goodness that he was a member of our church."

Bishop Keane, of Washington, uses these tender words concerning his early home: "I was reared in a humble home, but it was sweet and happy. In that home I never heard an oath or an unkind word." How many men can not bear such testimony. There are ungodly and wayward men now traveling with cheerless steps the broad road whose lives and hopes would have been different if they had been blessed with such a home. In some families the demeanor and speech of to-day are making it impossible for the children of those homes to treasure such memories as this Bishop carries in his soul. Fathers and mothers, we urge you to look to your homes.—Exchange.

40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

A distinguished Methodist preacher once said: "But for the interest and devotion of the women of our churches, one-half of them would die the first year, and the other half the second." The same remark is largely applicable to our Presbyterian churches. A considerable proportion of the Sabbath congregations consists of the women. And as for the week-night prayer meeting, it would have to be given up in a good many of our churches were it not for the women.—Presbyterian Exchange.

Be sure your sin will find you out. Though penalties are long delayed, wrong doing is certain to meet its appropriate punishment. When the whirlwind sweeps through the forest at its first breath the giant tree falls crashing to the ground. But it was twenty years preparing for this fall. Twenty years before it received a gash. Twenty years before water settled at some crotch and sent decay to the heart of the tree. The work of death progressed till it stood all rottenness and fell in the first gale.—Beecher.

That is not the richest church which has the best furnished theological seminaries, but which has the most Hannahs who devote and prepare the Samuels for the Lord's service. The home is the best place for the preparatory work of the ministry. It will be a sad day for the church when gifted sons are not laid upon God's altar by Christian parents, and trained for this high and noble purpose.—Presbyterian.

Once upon a time, a young man was being examined preparatory to uniting with the church. Among other things he was asked, "Under whose preaching were you converted?" "Under nobody's preaching," was the reply; "I was converted under my mother's practicing."

HYGIENE.

Maxims Relating to Health.

It is observed by more than one clever doctor that "the more a man follows nature and is obedient to her laws, the longer he will live; the farther he deviates from these, the shorter will be his existence."

Dr. Wainewright says: "A man in perfect health ought always to rise from the table with some appetite," and that "if either the body or mind be less fit for action after eating than before; that is, if the man be less fit either for labor or study, he hath exceeded in the quantity."

Dr. Arbuthnot asserts that "all the intentions pursued by medicines may be obtained by enforced diet." And Dr. Buchan says "that there is no doubt but the whole constitution of the body may be changed by diet"

"It may be laid down," says Dr. Hufeland, "as a fundamental principle, that the more compounded any kind of food is the more difficult it will be of digestion; and what is still worse, the more corrupt will be the juices which are prepared from it."

It is observed by an ingenious writer that "they who least consult their appetite, who least give way to its wantonness or voracious-ness, attain generally to years far exceeding theirs who deny themselves nothing they can relish and conveniently procure." And it has been remarked, in favor of temperance, that "misers, who eat and drink but little, always live long."

Cheyne observes that "water is the most natural and wholesome of all drinks, quickens the appetite, and strengthens the digestion most."

Volney says: "Cleanliness has a powerful influence on the health and preservation of the body.

"Cleanliness, as well in our garments as in our dwellings, prevents the pernicious effects of dampness, of bad smells, and of contagious vapors arising from substances abandoned to purity. Cleanliness keeps up a free perspiration, renews the air, refreshes the blood, and even animates and enlivens the mind.

"Whence we see that persons attentive to the cleanliness of their persons and their habitation are in general more healthy and less exposed to diseases than those who live in unclean homes."

HICKS—Died near Cayuga, Miss., after a brief illness, KATIE LUM, wife of Claude Hicks, in the twenty-first year of her age. She was the daughter and eldest child of Gadi E. and Laura McCay Lum, of Rocky Springs, Miss., where she was reared and educated, and beloved of all who knew her.

Very sad were the circumstances connected with the death of sweet Katie Lum, so suddenly and unexpectedly taken from the home where only joy had thought to enter before.

In November, 1895, her marriage with Mr. Claude Hicks was solemnized on a beautiful Sabbath day, her pastor, Rev. Wm. M. Stevens, officiating, and surely no future ever promised more of happiness than was vouchsafed to these devoted young people in the beginning of their wedded life. A bright, cheery home had been prepared for the young bride's reception, friends rejoiced in their happiness, and the prospect was radiant with hope. But death's angel threw his shadow across their pathway, and called with him the young wife, thus desolating the sweet home, and bringing anguish to those who loved her best.

On another Sabbath day, July 26, 1896, she was borne to her last resting-place amid the sorrowing friends of her early childhood, the weeping comrades of her school days, and the later, but most kind neighbors of her brief married life. A beautiful hymn was tenderly sung while the sad procession moved slowly to the church, and her pastor, who had performed the marriage ceremony, now read the burial service for her, praying fervently that God might comfort the broken-hearted ones, offering the only consolation known to human hope—that of the blessed reunion of those who die in the faith.

Little did anyone think that sorrowful day that another very near to her, whom they mourned, would be called hence very soon. But a few short months afterward her father "passed over the river," and the family were a second time sorely bereaved. A memorial of him has already appeared in these columns.

We have no last messages from Katie, for the bright mind was obscured before death came; yet her gentle life is before us, and we know the record is fair.

In the Summer of 1891, under the pastorate of Bro. V. D. Skipper, she was converted and united with the Methodist Church, and ever remained a loyal and devoted member.

Katie was one whose actions, measured by the Golden Rule, commended her to her friends as a young woman of rare and excellent qualities. Industrious, gentle and obliging in her manners; kind-hearted and strictly conscientious—qualities which could but render her a general favorite among her associates. A former pastor, and one who loved her very much, once said to me: "Katie is thoroughly conscientious. I have tested her fidelity to truth, and could never persuade her to jest about anything, for she regarded even that to be wrong."

Her self-sacrifice and devotion to her parents was always beautiful. She never grew weary of helping to bear mama's burdens, and was ever ready, with sweet, sunny nature and willing hands, to help others outside the home circle.

She loved the Master's work, but her timid disposition kept her from making public demonstration. While fond of the sweet songs of the gospel, she did not often join in singing them audibly; yet we know she must have sung many times "of the joy in her soul" when only Jesus was listener. Once, when I sang for her that beautiful hyme, "O happy day, that fixed my choice," she said, "Cousin J., that is my favorite song." I have loved it more since knowing it was precious to her, and the memory of those words will be to me an inspiration to live nearer to God.

How sweet to have known so beautiful a character, as has been the writer's privilege since her childhood. When learning of her critical illness, we prayed, "Oh, God, if it be thy will, let this cup pass from us." But, ah! the heart-breaking message, "Katie is at rest," was very tenderly whispered me by a friend, and we knew she was safe on the other side, where all the ransomed and angels be."

We miss you, darling, more than words could ever express, and our tears fall thick and fast while we contemplate the immeasurable loss we have sustained; yet we know you have gone to that clime "where the sun never sets, and the leaves never fade, in that beautiful city of gold."

To the bereaved husband and grief-stricken loved ones we are only able to offer our tenderest sympathy and love, remembering that "earth hath no sorrow that heaven can not cure."

May divine compassion help them to realize that "the everlasting arms are underneath!"

J. H. DAVIS.

PARNELL—Miss MARY ROSALIND PARNELL, daughter of Hon. H. H. Parnell and Mrs. E. E. Parnell, was born March 7, 1879, and died Jan. 3, 1897, aged seventeen years ten months and four days.

Rose, as she was so commonly called, was more than an ordinary young lady—intelligent, bright, and industrious. She impressed everybody who knew her as a sweet-spirited girl, who had love and good wishes for all. She had been battling with affliction for more than two years. This very much interfered with her studies in school, though well advanced for her age; yet it gave her great pain that she could not complete her education, for she had a burning desire to do good in the world. She so much desired to live, that she might be of service in the church and kingdom of Christ. Having professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, here at Pleasant Grove under the ministry of our sainted T. B. Hargrove in the year 1889, her experience deepened with her years, and for two years past she gave evidence of deep spiritual piety, and in her last sickness she expressed a willingness to go. Not a cloud, no fear of the dark billows of death whatever, but a perfect calm pervaded her mind on the subject of death, and when the time drew near she called for the different members of the family, and for the kindred and friends who were there, and gave such messages of love for others not present as she wished; then called her pastor and asked him to preach her funeral, and gave directions as to the services, selecting Philippians as the epistle out of which she wanted the lesson read, and selected some of the songs. All this with perfect composure, never showing the least agitation; but she said to me a short while before the last breath that she was so happy.

We would here extend our sincere sympathy to the bereaved family, kindred and friends, and insist that we all so live that we may meet the loved one in the spirit land by and by. W. M. YOUNG.

FORD—In Fayette, Jefferson county, Miss., Dec. 4, 1828, a daughter was born unto James Love and wife, whom they named MARY ANN. Nine years later the family moved to Alabama, where the daughter grew to early womanhood, and May 21, 1844, married Dr. Wm. G. Ford. Eleven years later Dr. Ford and wife moved to Mississippi, and settled in or near Beauregard, where in 1857 the wife was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South. To them a number of children were born, of whom three daughters, and the children and children's children of two of them, with the aged husband, survive. She entered into rest eternal from the home in Wesson, Miss., Dec. 23, 1896, having completed the sixty-eighth year of her pilgrimage.

As a neighbor, none was better; as a friend, none was sincerer; as a wife and mother, none was ever more unselfish. She was given to hospitality, and everyone sheltered at any time beneath her roof was made to feel at home, and every unostentatious kindness was shown. She was a friend to the poor and needy, and delighted in ministering to the sick, and helping those in trouble. She was a prudent counselor. To her pastor she was always helpful, and loyal in his support, not only in contributing of her means, but in attendance on public worship, and in attention when there, and also in defending him when assailed by unjust critics. How she will be missed in her church and community! But how much more will she be missed by her children and grandchildren, and by the husband whose cares and sorrows and troubles and joys she shared for more than fifty years! And how much more like home is heaven now since she is there!

A daughter writes me: "About two hours before she died she called us all and asked us to read the fourteenth chapter of the gospel according to John, pray with her, and sing, 'Nearer, my God, to thee.' When we had finished, she clapped her hands and said, 'I am so happy; I feel like shouting!'....She could not bear to hear us weep. I sat by her and she held my hand. If she heard me cry, she would press my hand, and if I went away for a moment, she would call for me. She was conscious until death, although she could not talk. Father came and took my seat by her about ten minutes before she breathed her last. She heard him sorrowing, looked at him, shook her head, then closed her eyes and fell asleep in the arms of our blessed Savior without a struggle."

A fitting close to a life of unselfish usefulness and of simple, child-like faith in Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God. Will her husband, whom she loved so well, or any of her family, fail to meet her in our Father's house? God help and save them all!

T. L. MELLEN.

Canton, Miss.

KILLEBREW—Mrs. JENNIE KILLEBREW, daughter of James R. and Martha S. Robertson, was born Oct. 14, 1852, and died Jan. 11, 1897.

Sister Killebrew professed faith in Christ and joined the M. E. Church, South, when quite young, and lived a consistent member till the day of her death.

She was married to Mr. D. B. Killebrew, Dec. 11, 1872, and was the mother of eight children. Her husband and two of her children had preceded her to the spirit world. She was self-denying in her devotion to her children. She was a good manager, and provided well for her family. She was a good neighbor, and had many friends.

Sister Killebrew impressed me very much by her personal interest in the house of God. I have been her pastor three years, and she has given marked attention to God's house, seeing after the lamps, and any furnishing necessary. She always gave the pastor sympathy and help. I saw her and prayed with her a few days before she died, and she expressed herself as perfectly resigned.

We extend our sincere sympathy to the bereaved family and friends, and exhort the children to so live that they may meet their mother in heaven. W. M. YOUNG.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

If it's a matter of rough skin, redness or sunburn, use HEISKELL'S Soap. It whitens and softens the skin. If it's eczema, tetter or pimples use the ointment—HEISKELL'S Ointment. It will cure any disease of the skin.

Soap 25c., Ointment 50c. At druggists or by mail. HEISKELL, HOLLOWAY & CO., 431 Commerce St., Philada.

Who pays for all the clothes, etc., that are worn out and torn to pieces in the wash? Whoever it is, he or she ought to insist that the washing shall be done with Pearline, and with Pearline only. Then that ruinous, expensive rub, rub, rub, over the wash-board, which makes all the trouble, will be done away with.

It isn't a little matter, either, this needless wear and tear. It's big enough to pay any man to look after it, and stop it. Pearline saves not only hard work, but hard-earned money.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 490 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Bible

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

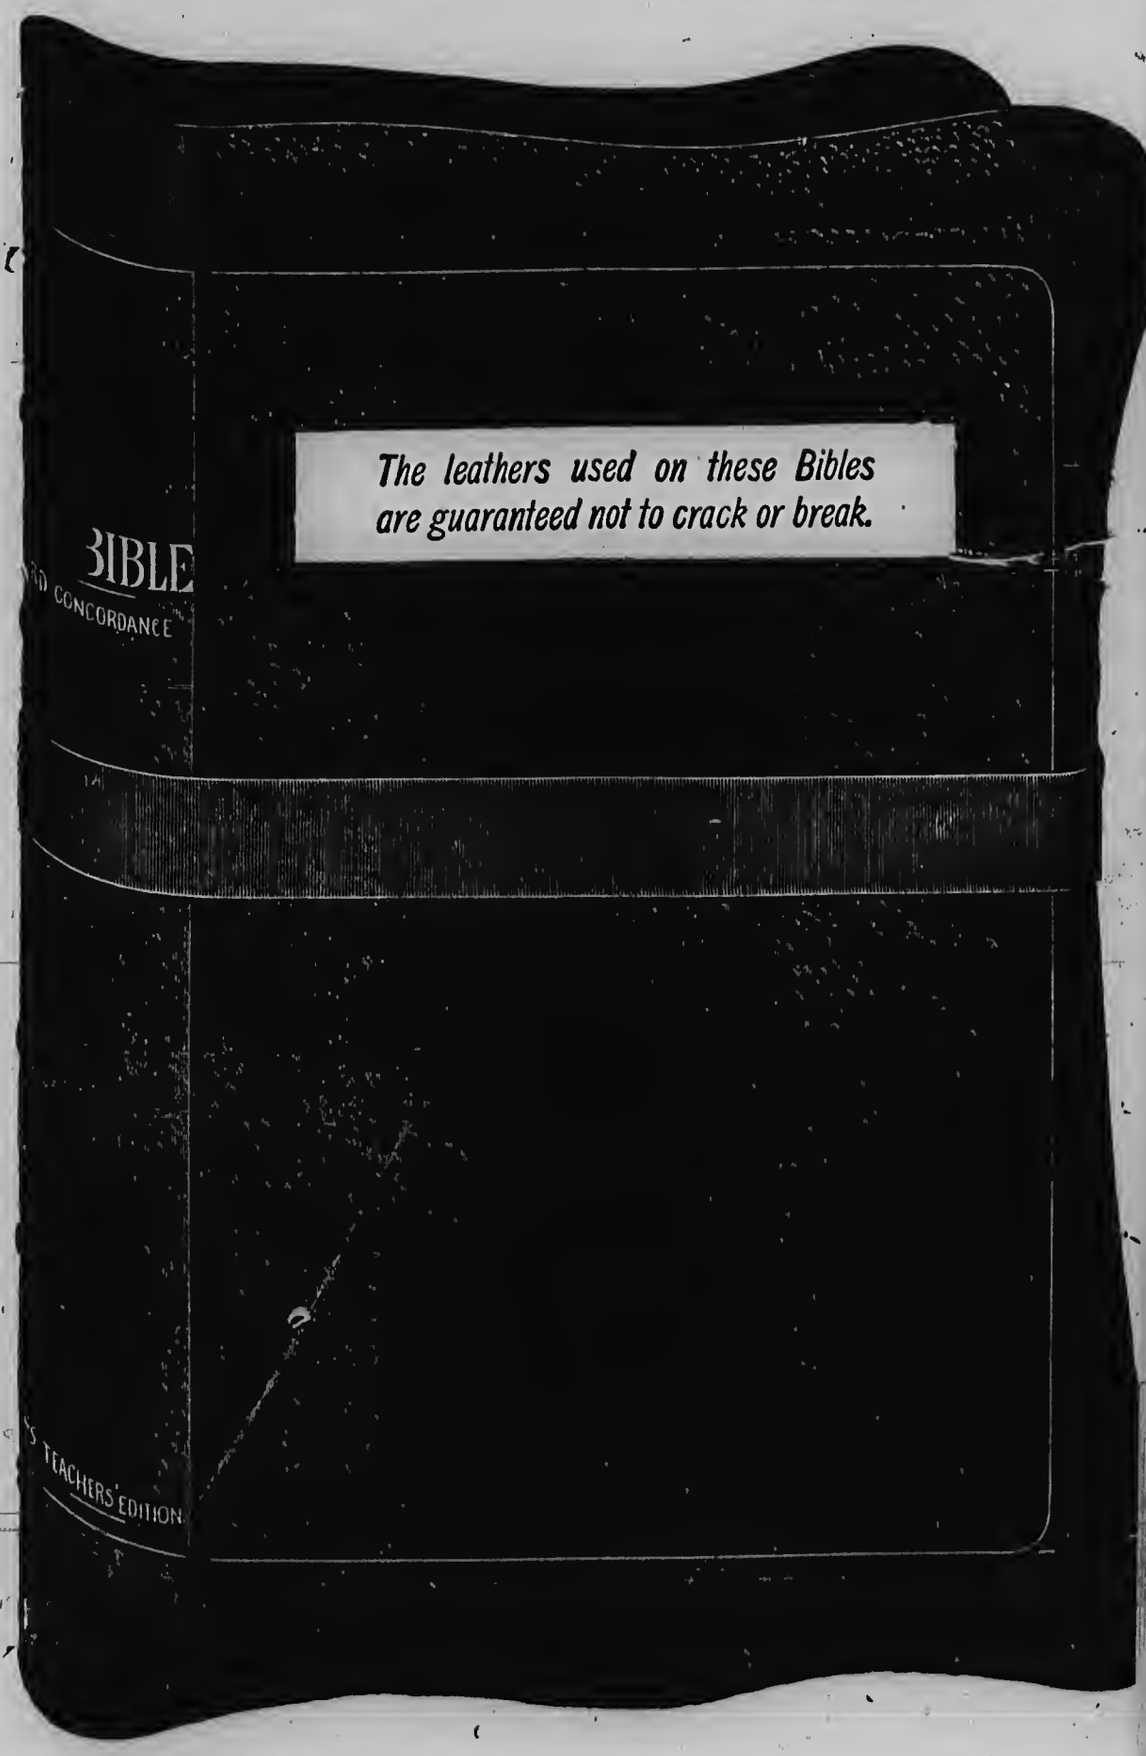
Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"



The leathers used on these Bibles are guaranteed not to crack or break.

The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2 35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3 15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1 15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to February, '98 (A little later it will be March, '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

A Straight Course

POINTED OUT TO THOSE WHO HAVE CATARRH IN ANY FORM.

You have got chronic catarrh, have you? You have had it some time? And could not find a cure? Well, there are thousands more like you in this country. If the slightest vestago of the catarrh remain over during the hot weather it will begin to make itself felt now. If you want to really get cured this is the way to do it. Get a bottle of Pe-ru-na and take a tablespoonful before each meal and at bedtime. When you have continued this for thirty days sit down and write a letter to Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio. Tell him exactly your symptoms; how long you have had catarrh; what effect the medicine has had on you. He will answer your letter promptly, telling you what to do further. He will make no charge. And if you will continue to write to the Doctor, following faithfully the advice he will give you, you are sure to get cured. Some cases take longer than others. Perhaps the average length of time it takes to cure a genuine case of catarrh is three months. Some get cured much quicker than this. Stubborn cases may require longer treatment. Time or trouble ought to be no barrier to one afflicted with this dreadful disease.

All people who are interested in knowing about catarrh can get an instructively illustrated 64-page book on chronic catarrh in all stages and location, free of charge. The book was written by Dr. Hartman and will be sent for a short time to any address by The Peruna Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A storm of sleet and snow took possession of this city on Tuesday.

Since the Fisk Free and Public Library has been established in this city, the number of callers increase every day.

Alabama has achieved the distinction of being the first Southern State to admit women to practice in her courts.

David R. Francis, just confirmed as Secretary of the Interior, is reputed to be a millionaire. He laid the foundations of his fortune by trading in wheat.

An expedition to Cuba left the gulf coast of Mississippi last week, in charge of an insurgent officer, accompanied by a number of Americans. The cargo of arms and ammunition was towed from Handsboro to Cat Island, where it was transferred to a nameless ship, which got off safely.

The convention which was held at Tampa, Fla., during the past week, for the purpose of considering the defenseless condition of the coasts and ports and devising means for their protection, was not only numerously attended, but included quite a number of distinguished men among the delegates.

There is a hitch in the report of the Senate committee which has in charge the bill providing for the closing of Pass-a Loutre crevasse, at the mouth of the Mississippi river. The hitch comes from a provision inserted, it is said, by Senator Caffery, asserting the liability of the Eads heirs, contractors, for this work, and demanding that they be required to pay for it. Senator Vest, who takes the part of the Eads heirs, refuses to support the bill unless the contractors shall be declared free from responsibility.

FOREIGN.

England's iron and steel trade is improving. The imports of foreign metal in 1896 were $20,000 000 higher than in either of the two preceding years.

The arbitration treaty with England is paving the way for a new international holiday, to be known in the calendar as "Peace Day." Several European nations are said to favor the idea.

Negus Menelik has received as a present from the Czar of Russia a complete set of wind instruments, a piano and an organ. Several Russian musicians have been sent with the instruments to teach the Abyssinian to play on them.

On Tuesday last the British Parliament, after a recess extending over several months, again assembled and listened to a speech from the throne, which, aside from brief references to the Venezuela and arbitration treaties with this country, contained very little of interest.

The effect of the representations made by Senor Rodriguez, representing the Greater Republic of Central America, concerning the attitude of Nicaragua towards the canal bill now under discussion in the Senate, will probably prove disastrous to that measure unless it should be amended to meet the objection raised in Rodriguez's communication to Secretary Olney.

A Woman's Experience in Making Money.

Every man dislikes to see a woman (especially his wife) with coarse, red hands. But as every family can not afford a servant, the housewife or her daughters are compelled to wash dishes at least three times a day, and than it is impossible to keep the hands nice and white. This unpleasantness has at last been overcome by a concern in Pennsylvania, who are manufacturing a patent dish washer which is meeting with ready sale. It is a tip top household article and every woman that sees it work immediately orders one. I am the wife of a farmer, and have been selling dish washers for this firm for some time. I find no trouble in making $25 a week, and at the same time attend to my housework. I am inexperienced in selling goods, but think that anyone with experience can make at least $150 a month. If you want to go to work, write Dep't A 5 of the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Sta. A, Pittsburg, Pa., and they will send full particulars. A FARMER'S WIFE

ALONE WITH GOD.

When courting slumber
The hours I number,
And sad cares cumber
My weary mind,
This thought shall cheer me:
Thou art near me,
Whose ear to hear me
Is still inclined.

My soul Thou keepest
Who never sleepest;
Mid gloom the deepest
There's light above.
Thine eyes behold me,
Thine arms enfold me,
Thy Word has told me
That God is love.

Painful and Pitiful.

BY R. J. HIGHAM,
Corresponding Secretary General Board of Education.

Paine Institute was projected by the General Conference in 1882. In their quadrennial address to the church, at this Conference, the Bishops called attention to the necesity of providing suitable pastors and teachers for the colored race, and urged the church to supply them. The Committee on Education urged that the recommendation of the Bishops, in their quadrennial address, should be heeded and acted upon. Paine Institute was finally located at Augusta, Ga., and Rev. James E. Evans was appointed its first commissioner. The Institute was opened in rented rooms, January, 1884. Mr. C. G. Goodrich, one of the foremost laymen of our church, and the treasurer of Paine Institute, in writing to me some time ago about the school, said that its struggle to maintain existence at the beginning was "painful and pitiful." If that struggle has been anything else from its beginning to this present writing it does not so appear in its history. The next General Conference (1886), through its Committee on Education, declared that this enterprise deserved and needed the fostering care of the church, and recommended that the commissioner be kept in the field. The General Conference of 1890 kept an eye on the young school, and adopted a paper which emphasize again the utterances of our Bishops in their quadrennial address of 1882, and declared the movement to be of great importance in the present aspect of social affairs, and to the future of our country. It further declared that Paine Institute represented our attitude upon the question of the relations between ourselves and the colored people; that our church could not disregard the claims of the colored people upon us, or fail to aid in providing a sound ministry for them, and that we should undertake their elevation, by all Christian means, to a higher life in this world, and the fellowship of the kingdom of God. What has been the result of General Conference action since 1882? We raised for Paine Institute in

This is not the best we could have done for Paine Institute since 1882. The negro will never get into "a higher life," nor into the "fellowship of the kingdom of God," at this poor starving rate. It would seem that there is but one of two things to do—either to go into this business seriously or to go out of it; to put our hands to it, or to wash our hands of it. But we have not the advantage of a dilemma in this matter. We can not go out of it without being chargeable in the sight of God and man. The high and binding obligations imposed of God upon us have been acknowledged and accepted by us, and in the light of what we have said about Paine Institute, our own consciences must need condemn us if we undertake to desist from the work. We ought to redeem the pledges we have made. It is the only safe, as it is the only open, course for us to take. Our fundamental obligation is a religious one, and grows out of our opportunity and ability to help the negro. We are face to face with him, and most of us have come to see and agree that our ways will never part. It is useless, on religious ground, to talk about the taxes we have paid, and which have gone into his education (one estimate is $37,000,000, another is $50,000,000). The taxes we have paid have been, in their last analysis, our social and political necessity, and not our Christian philanthropy. The figures which I have given above are the figures with which we have, as a church, to deal. I believe that no fair-minded and intelligent Southern Methodist will say that these figures represent the full measure of our ability; $83,906.66 is not the best we could have done for Paine Institute since 1884.

The above amount is as small as it is because we have never given our hearty, serious attention as a church to Paine Institute. Our attitude has been, as to the majority of our ministry and membership, rather one of indifference and neglect than opposition; but this indifference, if continued, will result in the death of an institution which we set up, and which we promised to support; to which we have sent our brethren, whom we have promised to stand by. It is to be doubted whether, throughout the entire Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a half-dozen sermons were delivered last year in the single interest of Paine Institute. I do not believe that six hours were devoted to it last year in the pulpit by our 6,000 traveling preachers. I will not affirm this awful thing. I may be mistaken. I hope I am. I believe I am not. If God's church keep not faith, will not faith perish from off the face of the earth? We shall not be guiltless, my brethren, if we keep not faith with Paine Institute and the noble men who have stood for us in the poor halls of our poor college for the education of preachers and teachers for the colored people. We have paid so little attention to the negro that he is coming to believe that we do not intend to do anything for him.

The last General Conference committed this work to the General Board of Education. So far as money goes, only a little more has been raised the past year for this institution than was ever contributed by our church before, except in 1886. But the General Board of Education has not been unmindful of this part of its work, and trusts that it has projected some things which are better than money, and which will raise enough money for the present needs of Paine Institute. At the last annual session of the Board steps were taken looking to the raising of $25,000 for this institution, the following resolution being passed:

"Resolved, That we call for $25,000, to be raised for Paine Institute, same to be used for buildings, equipment, and endowment; and that we recognize our duty as a church in this matter, and call on our people to contribute this amount, and urge our pastors to lend their efforts by public appeals and private solicitations to its collection."

Now will not some of those men in our church who watch her destinies and duties, and are anxious that she shall keep her premises and shall prosper in everything she undertakes for God and man, assist me in raising this money? If the presiding elders throughout our connection will find time to emphasize our obligation to support Paine Institute, which stands for the obligation we feel as a church to do our duty by our negro neighbor, the institution will be immediately benefited. If a half-dozen men in each Annual Conference will take only an hour, and will make one honest, earnest effort to focus before the eyes of their congregations the importance of the work for which Paine Institute stands, our promises to Paine Institute, and the needs of Paine Institute, there will be immediate and happy results. Are there not these half-dozen men in at least a majority of our Annual Conferences who, for love of God and for the poor, needy, and black children of God, will heartily and seriously undertake at once to do something which shall be measurably the discharge of duty? Will not the pastors of our largest and ablest churches in Baltimore, Richmond, Lynchburg, Roanoke, Wilmington, Charleston, Augusta, Atlanta, Montgomery, New Orleans, St. Louis, Louisville, Nashville, Chattanooga, Little Rock, Kansas City, Fort Worth, Dallas, Tyler, San Francisco, and elsewhere, preach a sermon outlining the history of Paine Institute, and urging upon the conscience and liberality of their people the claims of this institution? My dear brethren, let me beseech you to preach at once such a sermon, and to follow it with a collection so that we may have in hand at once a part of the $25,000 called for in the above resolution. Stand this call on its own feet; take the collection on its own merits, and report your success to me, that I may move others by your interest and example.

Millsaps College.

We are now near the close of the first term of our fifth session. The semi-annual examinations began Wednesday, the twentieth of January. The second term opens Feb. 1, and new students who think of coming this session should be on hand at that time. Twenty dollars will pay the college fees from the beginning of the second term to the close of the session in June. Students who come at this time should be prepared to enter one of our regular classes half advanced. We can not organize new classes in the midst of a session.

Our college work is progressing most satisfactorily. Indeed, a review of the brief history of the institution reveals gratifying progress in all directions. From the beginning of its existence there has been a constant enlargement of facilities, and a steady and healthy growth in the development of departments of instruction. While we are necessarily hampered in the scope of our work by meagre resources, our organization enables us to secure the greatest possible efficiency under existing conditions. There is no waste or misapplication of our forces in any direction, but every element of our resources is directed with the utmost care and economy to the accomplishment of the work for which the college was established. The wisdom of the Board of Trustees in adhering rigidly to the policy of keeping the institution free from all financial embarrassment, and in supplying thoroughly competent teachers for the different departments, merits the highest commendation. The conduct of our students has been conspicuously exemplary. A most admirable college spirit pervades the institution. Indeed, at no time in the history of the college have the students displayed such devotion to its welfare, or been so enthusiastic in their efforts to promote its interests.

COLLEGE ATHLETICS

have given us no trouble, nor do we apprehend any. The ado made in some sections would be amusing if our friends did not appear so serious. Even our dignified Review has taken up the cudgel, and is coming down on football with its ponderous blows. But it will do no good to berate a particular game. President Eliot, of Harvard, with his unequalled genius for managing college problems, had to retire discomfited before the football champions. Let Hoss, Tigert and Candler beware! Our college authorities will come to see after awhile that the real source of the evil is in the policy that allows and encourages inter-collegiate contests in athletics. The fierce rivalries engendered must lead inevitably to the consequences against which the widespread and loud protests are directed. We believe strongly in athletics at Millsaps College. The gymnasium and field sports have their rightful place in all progressive systems of education. They must not be discounted. But the inter-collegiate contests are a perversion of college life. Let our colleges vie with one another if they will, but let it be on the arena of intellectual combat.

It gives us very great pleasure to announce to our friends that has been turned over to us without a dollar of indebtedness—the generous gift of Major R. W. Millsaps. We are now fitting up the interior of the building, and hope to have it ready soon for dedication by Bishop Galloway. Let all our friends take notice that we are ready to receive everything they can send us in the way of valuable books, and specimens for the museum and cabinets. We have ample room. Send by freight rather than express, and we will pay the cost of transportation on all donations of real value.

The Preacher Himself.

Some time ago a preacher younger than myself wrote, asking my advice about how to prepare a sermon, how to deliver it, how to visit—in short, how to do all the work of a pastor; and, after giving him the best answer I could, he asked me to send it to the ADVOCATE for publication. Here it is:

DEAR BROTHER: In answer to your letter, I would suggest some general rules:

1. Get ready to preach. Make as thorough preparation as possible. It is the preaching of the gospel that is to save men, and if we want sensible men to hear us, we must make the most thorough preparation. Some preachers lament the empty pews which stare them in the face when they rise in the pulpit to preach on Sunday, when, in fact, they are largely to blame for it. An empty head in the pulpit will make empty places in the pew. Have something to say. Don't depend upon the enthusiasm of the occasion to furnish you sermon material, for it may be absent, and you will be left with nothing to say. Don't talk to fill up the time. If you have a sleepy congregation, fling a real thought at them, and it will wake them up. Oh, it saddens my heart to think of the mental indolence of some preachers! Can we expect returns from the people when we have not given them good measure? Give, and it shall be given you. Work, study, read, mark, and inwardly digest the great works of the masters. Write much. My plan is to write out my morning sermon in full, and my night sermon in part. Writing will give you language, system, and brevity. Bishop Wilson is said to preach without writing a word, but he is the exception to the rule. You and I are plain, ordinary men, and we must be ourselves and do our best. I have heard preachers complain of bad treatment from the Conference. They never get an appointment commensurate with their ability, but the fact is, the preacher himself largely makes his own appointment. Have your hours for study, and stick to your plan, unless the heavens fall or the house is on fire. Never stand before your people at prayer meeting or on Sunday without a well-prepared message for them.

2. Do your best in delivery. A good sermon may be spoiled by a bad delivery. Don't scream at the people. Make your voice as soft as the notes of a flute. If you were courting a beautiful maiden, she would fly from you if you bawled at her. Don't let your voice become monotonous. Don't drawl, but try to modulate your voice so it will express the feeling you have in your heart. Think and feel all you say. Don't bawl; it will hurt your throat and ruin your voice, and drive the people from you. Persuade them. Let there be the tenderness of Christ in your tones, and men will give heed to your words. Do you know why some good people go to the theatre? Because the actor makes fiction appear as truth. To him the scenes are real, and we must make every word and thought of the gospel real. A lawyer will put a great deal of energy in a case for the fee of $10, but some of us preach the gospel as if the message was worthless. Put fire, force and feeling in your sermons. Some preachers are so slow and pokey in their preaching that I don't wonder that the people grow tired of them. When you get through your sermon, quit. Don't go on one minute after you have said all you had to say. Some dear, good brethren will say, "And, lastly," and go on for ten minutes; "And now, in conclusion," and go on for five minutes more; "And a word more," and then quit in about three minutes. It takes them eighteen minutes to round to, when five minutes was long enough. Don't preach over thirty minutes except on special occasions. Your people hear preaching frequently, and in the course of the year you will likely go over the whole field of theology; so you had better save part till next time. My trouble is, I am afraid I won't have enough to last thirty minutes. If you have any announcements to make, be brief, explicit, and to the point. I heard an old preacher, a college graduate and sometime college professor, try to make some simple announcements about six months ago. He had one extra announcement that day, and I am sure he spent ten minutes on them all.

3. Look after your pastoral work. You say you have no taste for visiting? It is not a question of taste; it is a question of duty to God and the church. You say you have no tact for it? Cultivate it. While some men seem to have more natural gifts in this direction than others, yet all may succeed if they will only try. You can't be a success in this age unless you are a preacher and pastor. This is a day of specialists, but not in our vocation. We are all preachers, pastors, soul-savers, and missionaries to the poor. Study your people. Don't talk too much about money, especially your own salary, and don't talk about that except to your stewards. If I have had any success at all, it is in observing these suggestions. And now, my brother, live close to Jesus and study hard, and God will bless you. Avoid all eccentricities, all oddities, and strive to be a plain, humble, loyable, and loving servant of the blessed Christ, and all will love you, and the children will cling to you. Seek the power of God on you, especially when you stand up to deliver the King's message. ISWEL.

Selections.

Rev. F. B. Meyer.

Boston and New York are to be honored with four days each of preaching by the renowned pastor of Christ Church, London—Rev. F. B. Meyer. Mr. Meyer is best known in this country as an author, several of his delightful booklets published by Fleming H. Revel & Co., of Chicago, having had a most marvelous sale. In England, however, his work as a preacher overshadows his fame as an author. We clip the following brief account of his interesting career from the Christian Herald:

"His first charge was at Liverpool as co-pastor of Rev. C. M. Burrel, of Pembroke Baptist Church. Thence he went to York, where he assisted Messrs. Moody and Sankey in one of their most remarkable seasons of blessing. But it was in 1874, when Mr. Meyer settled at Leicester, that the great work of his life began. Leicester is a town of hard-headed, studious workingmen. Their condition weighed heavily on the young pastor's heart. They would not come to church, and the church was too conservative to approach them, or hold out a hand cordially to them. Mr. Meyer wanted to win them, and to do so he resigned his pastorate, quitted the sheep in the sheep-fold to go after the straying ones. The pile of buildings known as Melbourne Hall was erected for him when the Christian employers of the town discovered what he was trying to do. Sunday and week-nights the men and women who knew that Mr. Meyer had given himself to them crowded it to suffocation. In a few years eight hundred of them made profession of faith. They confessed that until Mr. Meyer preached to them they had misunderstood Christianity, and had opposed it in ignorance of its value. Twenty-three hundred children were gathered in the Sunday-school of which Mr. Meyer himself was superintendent. Lectures and classes were held in the adjoining building every night of the week, and a library and reading-room and restaurant occupied another adjunct. Then Mr. Meyer carried the war into the enemy's country by opening services in other parts of the town, by mission visitors and other agencies, and these, too, were much blessed. Another novel feature of the work was the 'prison breakfasts.' The pastor was a daily visitor at the prison, and he was always there in the early morning when the prisoners who had served their terms were discharged. They were invited to breakfast at Melbourne Hall, and after the meal Mr. Meyer gained their confidence in his happy, genial way, and offered to help them to lead honest lives. The number of men rescued from criminal lives by these means is astonishing.

"At the present time Mr. Meyer is pastor of Christ Church, London, where he is continuing his aggressive spiritual work.

"His preaching is earnest and practical, and he has that peculiarly winning, persuasive manner which has led so many hesitating souls to decide for Christ. His success in his London pastorate, where he succeeded Dr. Newman Hall, has been phenomenal."

Some inconsiderate people are still smiling at the curfew idea in a derisive manner; but so far the few American cities that have tried it find nothing therein to wax derisive about. On the other hand, they find much to commend in it, and there are those accustomed to think beneath the surface of things who have begun to believe that this very curfew idea may have much to do with solving the problem that needs solving. Crime is increasing at a frightful rate, and police officials admit that all experience shows that the hoodlum element is recruited from the ranks of the night prowlers, and from hoodlumism to the graver crimes is but a step. The streets of every city, town and hamlet teem with youngsters who are doing nothing but taking the first steps in crime. Segregate them in their homes or anywhere else than on the streets, and they are removed from the danger. Breed one generation of hoodlums and you create a fecund stock of crooks. That is the belief, and it is worth thinking about.—Exchange.

LIVE IT DOWN.

If an error you have made,
Courage! do not be dismayed.
Right about; press up and on
Until you reach a fairer dawn.
Heed not shafts of scorning cast
For an error of the past.
Live it down!

If beneath of bitter blame
Throws its shadow on your name,
Courage; cling to faith and hope,
Make them rule your horoscope.
Face the world with smiling lips.
Drive dishonor to eclipse.
Live it down!

If you fix your fondest love
On some friends that faithless prove,
Weep a little, tears are good,
Though perchance they're tears of blood,
Yet remembering God is there,
Rise superior to despair.
Live it down!

Fuel for the Furnace in the Skull.

BY REV. JOHN J. LAFFERTY, LITT. D., EDITOR RICHMOND CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Letters gain interest by chatty egotisms. Paul gave zest by self-disclosures. The reader shall come into my confidences.

The coming Christianity will concern itself more and more with the well-being of man. Booth, of the Salvation Army, has taught Methodists a lesson along that line—doughnuts, then doctrine. I aspire in a minor way to serve somewhat the soul through the stomach. On this wise I began the task:

One day watching the squirrels in our city park I noticed they cut out the "heart" of the corn grain, ate it, let fall the balance. I recalled that no miller's pig would thrive on rat-eaten corn—"heart" gone. Instinct is science and certainty. I found the modern wheat mills reversing the wisdom of the little animal—discarding the "heart," the germ from their flours—the phosphate, the fuel for the furnace in the skull. The brain burns seventy-five grains of phosphate a day. For thirty years we have fed on "patent" pulverized starch, without that priceless element, denuded in the milling. The hungry brain gnawed itself. We are fast becoming a nation of frayed nerves. Phosphoric acid energizes the forces of digestion. It is stored up in the wheat kernel. There is scarce a trace of it in our fashionable flours. The deranged digestion evokes the furies of dyspepsia to punish our folly.

The chemists conjured up substitutes for the brain food filched from the wheat in grinding. The mantelpieces of our bed-rooms become show shelves for wines and elixirs, of phosphates—mere stopgaps, for man can make a medicine. God only can grow a food.

The people in fright fled from the pauperized patent flours to the other extreme. They began to bolt down an "all" "entire" "whole" grain, in ignorance that the outer coating of the wheat berry is a shining sheath of silica, and the next covering is a ligneous envelope. In a word, they were eating powdered flint and pulverized wood pulp, "indigestible by man or beast."

In wild dread of the elaborated starch flours, they lacerated the delicate lining of the alimentary canal, even with horse rations—oats! They knew enough to do damage. A little learning is a dangerous thing.

A lens and the slightest acquaintance with the anatomy of the wheat kernel would check the craze for "cracked" foods and dingy loaves.

I was fetched up to medicine. And for twenty years have served the Virginia Medical College as a State Curator. It was plain enough that between starch dust, quartz powder and wood detritus, we mortals were running amuck. I had some scientific training and a little mill in the wheat region of the Blue Ridge. The story of the research has been told in an illustrated booklet—"The History of a Wheat Kernel"—which, by the bye, is welcome "without money" to every person who will send me an address on a postal—a homespun tale without technical terms.

The outcome of the experiments covering a couple of years was (I ordered the first sack to my own kitchen, and the second sack to the first analystic chemist in my acquaintance), a loaf "white as snow," richer in brain food by three hundred per cent. than any high-grade flour, rising to the rim of the baking pan, retaining the nutty flavor of the wheat berry, soft, silky, elastic as a surgeon's sponge.

It seemed a scientific success. In Virginia (for the test among home folks was of prime concern to me) physicians, divines, bankers, railroad officials in Richmond, gave it use and good will. Methodist preachers in my State and Maryland reported brain fatigue, dyspepsia, impaired digestion relieved. Their names are at the command of any reader. It did indeed stray off to Michigan, for Rev. Dr. Potts, editor of Detroit, saw it and said: "Have been using it a year. Consider it indispensable. I wish all Methodist preachers could know about it. Its riches in brain food would contribute to the wealth of the pulpit. Push it to the front."

I may add that the brilliant Dr. Sturt, of Richmond, Va., printed an opinion: "I found out that more sermons and better ones could be made out of one barrel than any other brand. No wonder Beckham and Rawlings (also Richmond preachers) are using it."

I leased the making and marketing to a Methodist who had given a mint of money to our church—even "built a synagogue in this city for our nation." I arranged to utilize my revenue in behalf of each preacher who might care to enlist so that he could get it at a nominal price, and possibly for the freight charge only at a future day. The social economy of Pentecost, "things in common," may be revived and risked at least among preachers, without offense to the "dismal science" of "every man for himself and the devil take the hindermost." At any rate, there is no odor of "trade" in this service.

It remains to say that request for the illustrated essay ("The History of a Wheat Kernel") or inquiry as to the method of enrolling the name of the brethren or any pertinent query will command my attention.

A Question.

MR. EDITOR: Believing that you have an intelligent class of readers as can be found in our Southland, and being perplexed on what seems to me a great question of personal right and social obligation, I come to you and them for its settlement.

It was at an annual business meeting of a very popular society. One who had been a member of the body, and, for reasons known to himself, had honorably withdrawn at a previous meeting, asked to be reinstalled. In the discussion which the matter provoked it was stated that he held opinions antagonistic to the established thought and practice of the body; that he had stated them in strong terms in the presence of members of that body. It was argued by those who urged his reinstatement that he had never intended his utterance to become public, and that it was simply his private opinion. He was called before the body, and there acknowledged that he had spoken improperly; but left the impression, at least on my mind, that he still held to the thought as a private opinion. No one seemed to question his right to do so.

Now, the question is this: Has any one the right, personal or social, where he is absolutely free to choose, to be convinced of the ruinous effects of a principle, and yet in opposition to his convictions co-operate with those who are laboring to sustain that principle and extend its influence? Has one the right to think one way and act the opposite? Has he the right to allow his action to belie his thought? Has he a right to a private opinion which is the exact antithesis of his public profession? If so, where is the border line between private and public opinion?

How do you ministers answer these questions with relation to personal right and social and moral obligation.

Respectfully, P. H. C—.

A Reply.

C. M. P. asks, "Tell me who drove the Spirit away in this instance?" Since the former camp meetings appear to have been blessed, it would seem that those who were so persistent for the innovation were responsible. The aged saints, "on the brink of a blissful eternity," were entitled to deference, for it is written, "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honor the face of the aged." "God has chosen the foolishness of preaching" to save the world; some people prefer to substitute "silly singing;" and we are called on to believe that such songs as "Steer straight for the light-house," "Vote as you pray," and "I'll be there to vote," are more powerful than the Word of God. That no matter how faithfully this may be preached, no matter how willing and anxious the Holy Spirit may be to "convince the world of sin, of righteousness and of the judgment to come," without such songs, and a choir to sing them, he can do nothing. Truly, some people seem to exalt themselves above God and above his commandments.

Parsonage Cleaning.

Last Spring there appeared in the ADVOCATE a piece relative to cleaning dirty parsonages. I couldn't have explained my own case better than that sister did, and I guess there were many others who thought likewise. We have moved again, and 'tis the same old story. The walls and floor were a sight to behold, and the vermin looked like they had never heard of the efficacy of hot water. Even the stove, pots and pans were all left dirty. Old bottles, letters, papers, shoes, stockings, and a general mixture of old clothes, were found scattered round the house; and, wives, I would advise you to burn all the letters you get from your dear hubby. I wouldn't leave 'em scattered over the parsonage; and do at least clean up the dining-room and kitchen before you go. Imagine what a sickening sensation I had as I entered the house. Will some of our preachers' wives never learn to be tidy? I'm sure they present a nice personal appearance when they go out in company, and why, for suffering humanity's sake, can't they make their homes harmonize with their own trim appearance? Please, somebody, who can wield a pen more fluently and effectively than I can, write something on this subject, and let's see if our clerical folks can't be made to understand that "cleanliness is next to godliness."

Attention, Brethren!

Dr. E. A. Cheek, a prominent physician of this place, is collecting some statistics in order to compare the death rate of the Delta with that of the hills, which we think will result in great moral and educational benefit to this rich section. If it can be shown that the death rate is no greater here than in the hills, men who own property here will make this their home, and identify themselves with the moral and educational interests of the country, and, as a result, we will have better churches and schools. Will the pastors of the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences please answer the following questions on postal card and forward to me at once? Number of members for 1894; deaths, 1894; members, 1895; deaths, 1895; members, 1896; deaths, 1896.

City Missions.

Not very long ago we heard one of our most consecrated women say that she felt it a very great privilege to belong to the Foreign Missionary Society, but thought it the duty of every Christian woman to work for the Home Mission. Truly should the two societies, in sisterly love, go hand in hand together in this grand work for Christ—"love for Christ."

"'Tis the silver link, the silken tie,
That heart to heart, and mind to mind,
In body and in soul can bind."

We, of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society (only five years old), have been called the baby sister of the Foreign Missionary Society, and gladly would we learn of our elder and, we feel, wiser sister lessons of love and duty well done in this great work for the Master. We, of Holly Springs, are proud of our Annie Walter, who, in far away China, is doing such a grand and noble work in administering to body and soul of the heathen in darkness; and of Miss Blackburn, who has given her life, her time, her all to labor in the fields of Mexico. But we can not all go to China, to Japan, to Brazil, or even to Mexico. To us is assigned the work of "home builders;" and how easy it is for us all to labor in the field of "home missions!"

The city mission work appeals strongly to the heart of every Christian woman, it matters not what her church or creed may be. The importance of city missions can not be over-estimated, since it is the only organized body in our church doing this distinctive kind of work. Much and lasting good is being done by the city missions in St. Louis, Atlanta, Ga., Chattanooga, and Dallas, Texas; and we point with pride to the Misses Tucker and their noble work in Nashville, Tenn. Many poor ones enter their "Door of Hope" care-worn and sin-burdened, and almost ready to cast themselves in the suicide's grave; but under gentle Christian kindness and encouragement are influenced to see the error of their way. Asking God for pardon and help, they go back into the world and live a happy, useful Christian life. Will not the ransom of these redeemed souls be a gathering of precious gems for a starry crown in heaven? While we can not all do great things, or bring about grand results, yet, by small things and little deeds of kindness, we can show the "love of Christ"—visiting the sick, giving the tear of sympathy and word of encouragement to the sorrow-stricken. We all know the sweet comfort when in sorrow's dark hour for a friend to say, "I am praying for you." In no truer way can we show the "love of Christ" than in helping the fallen, feeding the hungry—if only a cup of cold water given in his name. Many are the calls here in our own midst from the poor and needy. If the blessed Savior should come into our home, would we not esteem it a great pleasure to minister unto him in any and every way? Has he not said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me"? Surely, in helping others is a good investment for ourselves, for the good deeds done for others return a thousand-fold in happiness to us; and it is in doing for others we learn the better to live on and endure our own heart-sorrows. But do we fully realize the duty and responsibilities resting upon each one of us in regard to home mission work? How many of us say, "What more can we do?" We have built our church, and made it as comfortable as possible. We have a fine organ and magnificent choir, and no one can listen to the able sermons of our talented preacher and not be convinced to do right. All this true; but many are there who never come to sit inside our attractive church, or hear the soul-stirring sermons, for they dwell out in the highways and byways, and know not the moaning of our blessed Sabbath day. Is it not our duty, as professed Christians, to go out into the hedges and "gather them in," and with kind words of encouragement induce them to come into the tender Shepherd's fold, where they will be lovingly cared for as one of his precious flock? There is power enough in the gospel of Christ to save the world; power enough to revolutionize every slum in every city on the continent. It only needs for us to band ourselves together under the banner of "love for Christ," and apply this blessed salvation to these sin-burdened ones in our own midst. There is work—yea, a general work—for every member of this Parsonage and Home Mission Society. We need not cross the sea to do missionary work; it is here at our door. The question we should each one ask is:

"What can I do to-day?
Not praise to win, or glory to attain;
Not ease, or power, or love to gain,
Or pleasure gay;
But to impart
Joy to some stricken heart;
To send a heaven-born ray
Of hope, some sad, despairing
Soul to cheer;
To lift some weighing doubt,
Make truth more clear;
Dispel some dwarfing care,
To lull some pain;
Bring to the fold again
Some lamb astray;
To brighten life for some one
Now and here;
This let me do to-day."

Lupelo's Bible Woman's Report for October, 1896.

I have visited 39 homes this month, and have been kindly received in all but one.

One day I wanted to enter a house and speak about Jesus and his doctrine to those within. The wife was kindly disposed, but her husband said, "We don't want to hear this doctrine." The man was advanced in years; so in terms of politeness I said: Although you don't want to hear, I certainly must speak a word. Do not be afraid. Do not think I'm a fortune teller wanting money to tell your fortune. I don't want any money. This is God's doctrine, not mine. I see, Siensang (Mr.), there is a tree in front of your door. Did you plant it and then care for it until it became a large tree? "No." No? This was God's thought for you. It came up, put forth leaves, thus making a shade from the glare of the Summer sun. This doctrine is likewise the heavenly Father's thought for your good. But I won't come in. So I passed on.

I went to visit an old lady, and was met by her son. I understand your mother likes to hear the doctrine, and have come to talk to her, I said. "My mother is not at home, but please come in; we like to hear, too." I went in and showed him a copy of the Ten Commandments. He read them and said: "This is true. Although our Confucius' teachings are good, he gave us no such careful instructions."

I have spoken 275 times to people about Jesus and the doctrine. This number includes those spoken to in their own homes, and those who have come to our meetings. Out of the 39 homes visited, but one refused me entrance.

Preaching the Certainties.

The strength and prevailing power of the early disciples were in their certainties. They went forth with decision upon their lips, with the fire of intense conviction in their hearts, and it made their testimony irresistible, and gave them their victory over the world. It was the age of the skeptic, a period of almost universal uncertainty. Agnosticism was bringing forth its inevitable fruit of pessimism and despair. The old religions had grown decrepit, and were regarded as hoary-headed imposters even by those whose business it was to defend them. The creeds were worn-out rags which barely covered the nakedness of atheism. The theater was ridiculing the gods, and philosophy contemptuously ignoring them. Thoughtful men were sneering at the very name of truth; priests hid themselves behind the temple screen to laugh at the credulity of the worshipers; soothsayers, augurs, oracles and sacrifices had become a system of charlatanry. Men were everywhere boastfully declaring or mournfully confessing that nothing was or could be known about the higher powers and a future life. They were often avowing their atheism with flippant lips, while their hearts were full of a sad weariness and longing, for there is no boasting so stagey and unreal as that of the human heart over its own religious darkness. The laughter of the cynic over his dreary negations is as hollow as his hysterical laughter at a funeral. Man hungers for the food which he has cast away. His soul has its dwelling among the tombs where his buried faith lies. He is impatient to know something about God, and the mystery of birth and suffering and death, and what comes after. It is terrible to be groping in damp mists and through labyrinths of darkness. He is forever sending forth the yearning, desperate cry: "Who will show us any good? Who will lead for us the everlasting riddle? Who will lift the veil for us?"

That was the secret sigh and groan of all the world in the days of the apostles. And then these men appeared, declaring in tones to which the world had long been unaccustomed that they had found the truth, and the eternal life, and the Conqueror of death, and an almighty Savior, and an everlasting Father, and the very life and light of men; that they had proved these things by touch and sight and reason, by evidence of sense and mind and spirit; that no arguments or ridicule or opposition could abate their confidence; and that they were ready to labor, suffer and die in witness thereof. "We testify that we do know, and bear witness of that we have seen." They went forth with triumphant certainty on their lips, holding in their hands the clew to all the great mysteries. It was like a rock on which the desperate swimmers in that sea of doubt could plant their feet; it was the one sure beacon left in a sea of darkness. No wonder that men gathered around them.—From a sermon by the Rev. J. G. Greenhough before the British Wesleyan Missionary Society.

Religious Joy.

The religion of Jesus is a joyful religion. One of the fruits of the Spirit is joy. Every Christian has this in some degree. It is a supernatural joy, and does not depend upon circumstances, for it comes from within. Worldlings rejoice when everything goes well from a worldly standpoint. Some professed Christians rejoice when prospered in worldly things, and sometimes even when in an enthusiastic religious service; but this may be but natural joy. Supernatural joy wells up from an unseen fountain when earthly joy has fled. It gushes out right in the midst of the desert, and if we looked at the desert for its source, we should not discover it. Habakkuk knew about this joy, for he says: "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls; yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."

Any worldling can rejoice when all goes well. Only a Christian can rejoice when things seem to go wrong. In the darkest day a Christian ever saw he can rejoice in God when he can not in anything else. Joy makes a Christian strong in his every-day life. "The joy of the Lord is your strength." He is a weak Christian who has spells of the blues or carries about a gloomy face. He is a discomfort to himself and repels others. It is the expression of joy that makes a telling impression upon the world. This poor, heart-broken world, staggering under its burdens, is attracted only by this kind of a religion. The shouts of redeemed saints and converted sinners have often sent more conviction into the hearts of sinners than tons of paper essays read from polished pulpits. The church of the future that is really to make inroads upon the kingdom of Satan will be the church that has a joyful religion, that buoys up the sinking soul.—Christian Witness.

"Pray without ceasing," "Instant in prayer." The small band upon whom the power of Pentecost broke had been waiting for it "with one accord in prayer and supplication." Do what you will, the fire in the church will burn down into grey ashes, the very look of which makes you shiver, if you neglect to pray. You may work hard and devise a thousand schemes of stimulating the church into activity. It will be piling fuel on the fire, but shutting from it the necessary oxygen. Prayer alone creates the atmosphere, ensures the temperature in which what is the church's real glory thrives.—Morlan Jones.

When a man begins to do wrong he can not answer for himself how far he may be carried on. He does not see beforehand; he can not know where he will find himself after the sin is committed. One false step forces him to another; one evil concession requires another.—Dr. Newman.

When you got into a tight place, and everything goes against you, till it seems as if you could not hold on a minute longer, never give up then, for that's just the place and time that the tide'll turn.—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

Fireflies shine only when in motion. It is only the active who can hope to shine. Doing nothing is an apprenticeship to doing wrong.—Rev. W. F. Crafts.

A profession calls attention to one's actions, and if the profession is not fully exemplified in the action, hypocrisy will be the verdict of the jury.

If you do not wish for the kingdom of Christ, do not pray for it; but if you do, you must do more than pray for it—you must work for it.

To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of cores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. C. Park, P. C., Kosciusko station, Jan. 26, 1897: "The church here enters upon its second year as a station with enthusiasm and high hope of a successful year. Preacher's salary has been increased, preacher's home has been visited by a large 'donation party,' and the preacher is glad to spend another year with such a loyal and enthusiastic Methodist people. The church roll still lengthens, the services are spiritual, and we confidently expect a revival."

Rev. H. Armstrong: "Have been at Opelousas one month, and have been fixing up, preaching and visiting. The preacher's home is very comfortable, and is newly and nicely furnished. Not only is the house furnished with plunder, etc., but the larder is kept supplied with fresh meats by our country parishioners. It is good to be here. The term 'poor preacher' is not applicable to us. We have all that we can eat and wear; have money in purse, we owe no man anything, and have glory in our soul. Bless the Lord!"

Rev. W. M. Stevens: "We have been cordially received by the good people on Harriston charge. A committee met us at the parsonage when we came, saw us comfortably domiciled, and greatly cheered our hearts. God bless these good Methodist people! We left a host of dear friends behind us, and shall ever pray God's choicest blessings upon them. As we form new acquaintances our prayer is that our acquaintance may develop into a confidential friendship, and ultimately ripen into glorious fruitage to God. God bless you and the ADVOCATE!"

Rev. W. S. Lagrone, West Point, Miss., Jan. 25, 1897: "We are delighted with West Point. Every day the good people are in some way bringing us under obligations to do our best, and we are trying to measure up. This year promises to be the best we have had. We have had eleven accessions to the church. Yesterday was a great day with us. We had a packed house. To be sure, we prophesied our best. Who would not? The Lord helped us. We saw from the signs of the times it was a good time to take a collection. We surprised them by asking for the collections ordered by the Conference. And in less than twenty-five minutes they surprised themselves by giving in cash and subscription $285. This puts us within a small amount of the assessment. The people and the preacher are happy."

Rev. J. N. Ware: "Ten years ago, at Port Gibson, Miss., I joined the Mississippi Conference. I was sent in the east of the State, and have been there until this year. Last year was a year of hard sickness in my family, and many things to try our faith. No one was more surprised to hear of the 200-mile move than we were. Wife and myself were just up out of a hard spell of sickness, with a little sick babe we had to carry on a pillow, and 200 miles to move with about $10 in money to move on. It was very trying on us. As soon as I received my appointment I took it to the Lord and made my wants known. God heard my prayer, and I got up and went out satisfied all my wants would be met. My work last year failed to pay me the salary they promised to pay. The Lord opened the hearts of others, and our wants were supplied. The dear people of Waynesboro opened their doors and supplied my family with clothes, and gave us all the money we needed to carry us to our new field of labor. Bro. Partridge, P. C., at Waynesboro, and Bro. D. M. Taylor, the M. and O. R. R attorney, made application to M. and O., Q. and C, and the Mississippi Valley railroads for reduced rates. They all sent my freight at half rates. The M. and O. and Q. and C. gave my family half rates over their line, which helped us very much. Many thanks to Bros. Partridge and Taylor for their kindness, also to all the railroads for reduced rates. We will never forget the dear people of Waynesboro for their kindness to us while we were so sick, and to Dr J. F. Por, who waited on us night and day. We will never forget the close attention he gave us without price or money. We left them with tearful eyes, and pray God's blessing upon them. Dec. 31, 1896, we reached Rocky Springs charge, our new field, in the rain. At the parsonage we found a good warm fire and a nice dinner to welcome us to our new home. The weather being so inclement, the committee of ladies, thinking we would not venture out such a day, had just left, but soon returned. We have never received such reception in all our rounds as here. We found sugar, coffee, rice, grits, meal, molasses, meat, potatoes, both sweet and Irish; butter, milk, flour, apples, cakes, candies, and many other things for the comfort of life. Since that time many other good things have come in. One thing I have noticed, which is very gratifying to us. The people speak well of all their former pastors, and love them all. We are here for the fight, and are expecting to make the Lord a good soldier. La grippe has had a good hold on us since we arrived, but all better now. Mr. Editor, I want to say that Buckatunna Church paid all its assessments, and Bro. B. B. Davis, one of the stewards, gave me ten dollars over. God bless the dear people of the east!"

After reaching this place I found that the ideal names for circuit appointments that dear Bro Parvin so often referred to originated here as a reality. I find my circuit lying between the following boundary lines: Arkansas on the north, Coon Bayou and Judah on the east, "Nip-and-Tuck" on the south, and the "Regions-beyond" on the west. The "Possum Walk" appointment has been left off, but I hope to resurrect it, and change the "walk" to "trot" to insure its permanence. For in grace it is as in other matters—that which "moves" lives. I have a Mt. Nebo, but have not yet found "Pisgah's lofty height" from which to view the land flowing with milk and honey. One brother said they could't give me much money, but would give me free tuition in "Brush-wood College." O her biblical mounts, viz.: Ararat (known by the people as "A'rat"), Zion, etc., abound, but as yet I have found no archæological material.

Among my predecessors please allow me to commend the zeal of W. J. Porter, that I hear so laudably spoken of by the people. Not only did he take the gospel to the four winds of the earth, but built an excellent parsonage and substantial barn, doing a great deal of the work with his own hands and paying a great deal of money out of his own pocket. Surely the man who would follow him and let these things go to ruin would be very careless indeed. If all our preachers would add a little to parsonages, gardens, churchhouses, etc., it does seem to me they could all have comfortable homes, and moving would be so much easier. But, alas! many must go where these practical things have been neglected. Sister Gaskins left the house so nice and clean that it makes a fellow want to occupy it; but this is the center of the drouth-stricken district.

I find all over the work the footprints of that saintly woman, Sister Tomkins. Many have been taught in the ways of and led into the experience of entire sanctification, and not a few are wanting the experience. Such work as hers will bear fruit when she is in glory.

My people are very good to me, and I pray God that I may prove myself a pastor in the full sense of the word. I have reopened two old appointments, and will open two others soon. Several have come to me as did the Macedonians in a vision to Paul, almost begging for the gospel. P. O. LOWREY

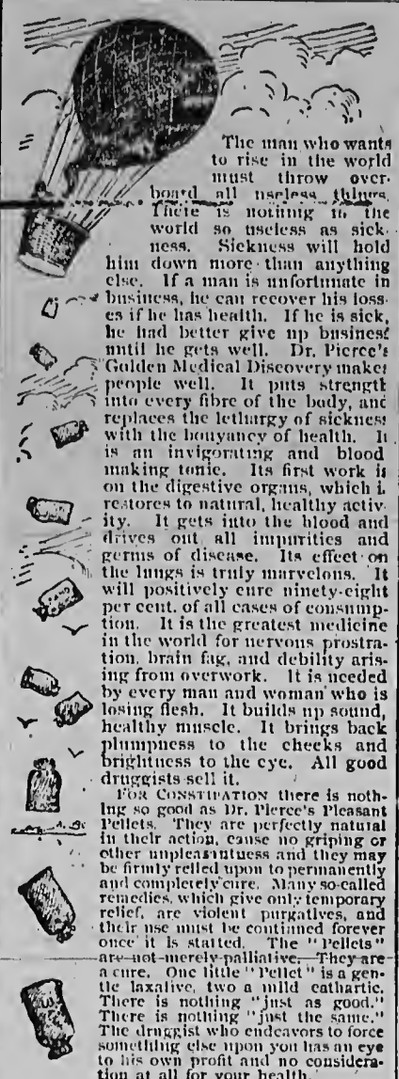
In remitting do not send us a check on your local bank. It is very expensive to us to collect these. Send by postoffice order, or express order, or registered letter, or by check on or draft on New Orleans.

W. C. BLACK, Publisher.



The man who wants to rise in the world must throw overboard all useless things. There is nothing in the world so useless as sickness. Sickness will hold him down more than anything else. If a man is unfortunate in business, he can recover his losses if he has health. If he is sick, he had better give up business until he gets well. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery makes people well. It puts strength into every fibre of the body, and replaces the lethargy of sickness with the buoyancy of health. It is an invigorating and blood making tonic. Its first work is on the digestive organs, which it restores to natural, healthy activity. It gets into the blood and drives out all impurities and germs of disease. Its effect on the lungs is truly marvelous. It will positively cure ninety-eight per cent. of all cases of consumption. It is the greatest medicine in the world for nervous prostration, brain fag, and debility arising from overwork. It is needed by every man and woman who is losing flesh. It builds up sound, healthy muscle. It brings back plumpness to the cheeks and brightness to the eye. All good druggists sell it.

FOR CONSTIPATION there is nothing so good as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They are perfectly natural in their action, cause no griping or other unpleasantness and they may be firmly relied upon to permanently and completely cure. Many so-called remedies, which give only temporary relief, are violent purgatives, and their use must be continued forever once it is started. The "Pellets" are not merely palliative. They are a cure. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative, two a mild cathartic. There is nothing "just as good." There is nothing "just the same." The druggist who endeavors to force something else upon you has an eye to his own profit and no consideration at all for your health.

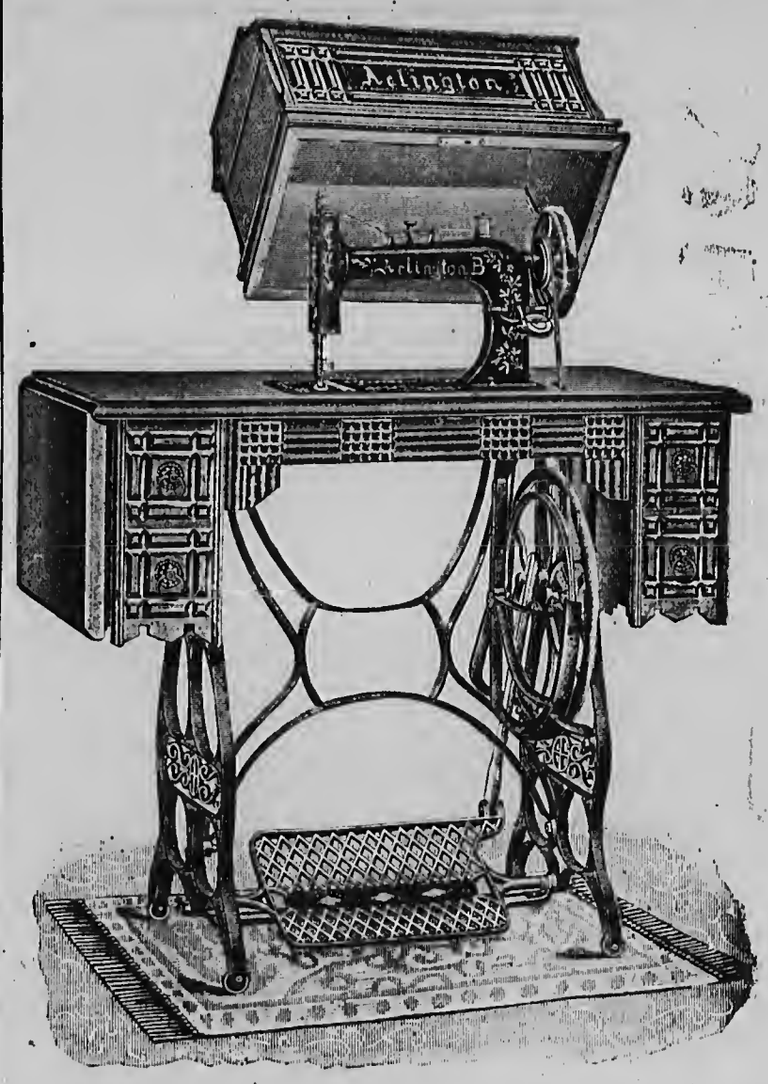
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.



A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachment free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, and gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the look stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength, finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts, runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension, can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $20 50, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '98, and send us $18.50 additional, and we will send you the machine.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

TO AGENTS:

We will send this machine free to any preacher or other person who will send us twenty new subscribers with the cash—$40.

Our lives are songs: God writes the words
And we set them to music at pleasure;
And the song grows glad or sweet or sad,
As we choose to fashion the measure.
We must write the music, whatever the song,
Whatever its rhyme or meter;
And if it is sad, we can make it glad,
Or if sweet, we can make it sweeter.
—Southern Churchman.

Silence is always gold when you have nothing to say; but some people have never found this out.

"You are always pretty and always sweet except when you lose your temper; then you are neither." So said a son of Adam to a fair friend, and in saying it he drew the portrait of more than one of Eve's daughters.

A man can not be said to want anything unless he makes an effort to get it. Hence, when you hear a man say that he wants to be religious, and yet you see that he is making no effort whatever in that direction, you can not resist the conclusion that he is walking in the footsteps of Ananias.

"The recompense of reward" does not lie altogether "beyond the flood." A part of it we may and should enjoy on these mundane shores. Entire consecration to the service of God, perfect submission to his will, implicit trust in his infinite love—these bring heaven to the soul even amid the shadows of time and mortality.

Harshness and gloom depicted on the countenance and manifested in the life of a Christian make religion seem a thing to be avoided, while a loving cheerfulness makes it exquisitely attractive. Therefore, if you want to draw men to Christ, be sweet, patient, gentle, loving. An ounce of sweetness is worth a ton of censoriousness for soul-saving. Of course, the necessity for repentance must be proclaimed, but this can be done not only without acerbity, but with a delightful sweetness, as our Savior's example shows.

A talent for appreciation is a thing to be coveted. He who has an eye to see, a heart to appreciate, and a tongue to commend the good which others are doing has an open sesame to a vast treasure-house of usefulness. Many weary toilers in the Lord's vineyard are sorely in need of encouragement. They feel that they are accomplishing nothing. These desponding souls are found through all the ecclesiastical ranks from the occupant of the pulpit down to the humblest doorkeeper in the house of the Lord. The man who has a keen eye and a ready tongue for the mistakes, the foibles, and the shortcomings of these people, but no word of appreciation for the good that is in them, is a curse to the church of God. This is a talent that can be cultivated. Would that all our readers might begin the good work at once. Watch for the good in others and be not slow to speak of it. So shall you brighten the lives of those about you.

"The Salt of the Earth."

Salt is so common an article that we think little of it until the supply becomes scant, or is exhausted. Though not as necessary to animal existence as air and water, it is essential to comfort and health, and is in great demand the world over. The comparison of Christians to salt, though seemingly a commonplace figure, is full of force and suggestiveness to the devout student of the Sacred Scriptures.

Everywhere salt is the emblem of that which purifies and preserves from decay. Suffering, disease, and discomfort without measure are unavoidable where there is not a sufficiency of this most useful article. Animals will travel long distances to obtain it. One writer tells us that on the gold coast of Africa a handful of salt is the most valuable thing on earth after gold.

The wonderful antiseptic, flavoring properties of salt, which cause it to be so highly esteemed, are a fit emblem of what Christians should be to the world. The savor of gospel influence and teaching is as much needed to purify the morals of mankind and arrest corruption as salt is for the preservation of flesh. Where there are no Christians there we find hopeless degeneracy and the lowest degradation. It is not a mere coincidence that progress and the highest form of civilization exist nowhere save in Christian lands. Civilization has in itself no conserving, purifying power. Its vitality and permanence are dependent upon the salt of Christian truth permeating society. Says that renowned historian, James A. Froude: "All that we call modern civilization in a sense which deserves the name is the visible expression of the transforming power of the gospel." All attempts to civilize without the aid of the gospel have proved signal failures.

Christian truth, however, like salt, is of little value except when applied. The best orthodoxy is that of right living. The disciples of Christ have never yet fully realized the potency of example, or how profound is the personal obligation resulting from participation in the priceless benefits of Christianity. The Bible has been called a "book of models as well as maxims," and, as Bishop Galloway forcefully remarks: "Christ's ministry was a ministry of works rather than of words." "Example," says Dr. Samuel Smiles, "is one of the most potent instructors, though it teaches without a tongue."

It is noticeable that Christ did not say, "My gospel is the salt of the earth," though in an important sense this is true. He puts the stress upon the "ye"—that is, those who keep his commandments. To use the words of another: "The simple doing of what is right, though we say nothing about it; the upright life of a father or mother in a household; the steady conduct of a soldier in his company; the stainless character of a workman among his comrades; or of a boy in his school, is bound to tell." Not long since a certain Hindoo is reported to have uttered the following striking comment upon the conduct of a missionary in his own land: "If all Englishmen lived such lives as Donald McLeod, India would soon be a Christian country."

The pungency so characteristic of salt typifies the positive force and activity that should distinguish the disciples of Jesus. Salt that has lost its sharpness, its permeative, penetrative power, is insipid and good for nothing. How much like such salt are many professed believers! A pastor never knows when to count on them, or how to utilize them. Having lost, or perhaps never having obtained the salt of grace, they are forceless and useless so far as the propagation of religion is concerned. Indifferent savorless disciples are the great stumbling blocks to advancement all over Christendom to-day. How can public morals be thoroughly and permanently purified, or the heathen world be brought to Christ, through the agency of saltless, lukewarm Christians? We must "have salt in ourselves," else our lives will be "a savor of death unto death." Says Dr. Joseph Parker: "You may give the right gift of time, or money, or influence—be what it may, but being unsalted with your heart's consent, it is not accepted in the treasury of heaven. You have the right creed, but if it be unaccompanied by sacrifice it is no faith, it is without the salt of real, genuine trust; it is a form of godliness, but without the power thereof." A godly man need not be obtrusive, but he must be devoted, firm, and zealous. The purity symbolized by salt must ever be active.

The grace of God, though as noiseless as salt, is none the less powerful in its operation. The persistent, permeative power of salt should remind us that, as Christians, we should ceaselessly strive to reform and regenerate the world, directing our efforts toward the righting of every wrong, the putting down of every evil, and the uplifting of all classes. The power of the gospel must be brought to bear upon all men, as well as upon the whole man. The savor of grace should purify and ennoble every relation and condition in life. Salt is no superficial agent; it penetrates the whole mass. Similarly Christian effort should not stop with partial reform or partial evangelization. Its aim should be nothing less than to "present every man perfect before Christ Jesus."

Salt is not only an antiseptic; it is also a condiment, and as such is almost a necessity, since without it much of our daily food would be unpalatable. Now, as salt renders our food wholesome and palatable, so Christians by their words and deeds make life pleasureable and worth living. The true disciples of Jesus not only exert a purifying and saving influence upon the world; they also bring brightness, peace and hope to despairing, sin-cursed humanity. How glorious for a fallen human being to be like unto salt—the emblem of purity, perpetuity and enjoyment!

Merrisen's Appeal and Continued Defiance.

The Rev. H. C. Morrison, a local preacher and second-blessing evangelist, has been expelled from the church and ministry by his Quarterly Conference at Lexington, Ky. He received notice of his suspension from his presiding elder pending the final adjudication of the case by the Quarterly Conference, and published to the world his purpose to ignore the suspension and defy the court. He even offered to surrender his credentials in view of this anticipated action of the Quarterly Conference, and suggested that he might be expelled for disregarding his suspension. The Conference has acted, the verdict rendered, and the sentence has been pronounced. As to the righteousness of this verdict we will not now inquire, but some questions of law must surely arise.

In an article in his paper entitled "My Trial," Mr. Morrison says: "I am in receipt of a letter from Rev. John Reeves, presiding elder of the Lexington district, Kentucky Conference, informing me that my trial has been held at Lexington, and that I have been expelled from the ministry and the church. I have written to Bro. Reeves, surrendering my credentials, and informing him that I appeal the case to the Annual Conference." In the same paper Mr. Morrison announces that he "shall go forward laboring night and day," and refers to engagements he has for evangelistic meetings—performing the functions of a ministry from which he has been expelled. Now, on this new aspect of this case, some observations may be made.

1. The right of appeal is a constitutional provision, guaranteed to every member and minister. As Bishop McTyeire expressed it—the right "of having the adverse sentence of a primary court reviewed by a higher one, and thus of obtaining relief by the conviction of errors in the officers or triers of the inferior tribunal."

2. The court appealed to decides whether or not the appellant has just grounds of appeal. And one of the grounds that go to make up this right before a superior court is the attitude of the accused to the inferior court. Appeal "is allowable only when judgment has been rendered and submitted to." If there is contemptuous defiance of the court pronouncing judgment, and a continued exercise of functions of which one has been legally deprived, the assertion of the right of appeal assumes the character of the ludicrous. The language of the Manual of the Discipline is explicit: "It would be an imposition for such a person to exercise the ministry upon the authority of a church that had no more control over him or connection with him." The exercise, therefore, of ministerial functions after one has been expelled by due process of law vitiates the right of appeal, and acts as an estoppal upon the Annual Conference in entertaining the same. Why ask for the restoration of functions that one has refused to surrender? The sending of license and ordination papers to a presiding elder, while at the same time continuing as before to preach, would be farcical, were it not a gross assault upon church authority. Mr. Morrison has said that he "could no more stop preaching than Daniel could stop praying," and that he proposes to "go forward laboring night and day," and all this while the church says he no longer has authority to preach among us.

So, apart from the questions at issue in the trial, and without discussing the lawfulness or righteousness of the verdict, the attitude of Mr. Morrison toward the courts of the church has forfeited his right of appeal. If error has been committed in the conduct of the trial, he has now rendered a correction of the same legally impossible.

Tuberculosis.

For several years past it has been the opinion of the leading lights of the medical world that pulmonary consumption is infectious. Recent research has converted this theory into an established fact. A recent report of the Board of Health of New York City makes this statement, and invokes the aid of the municipal authorities in preventing the spread of the infection. This does not imply, as some seem to suppose, that consumptive patients are to be isolated as in the case of small-pox and similar diseases. Consumption is an infectious, not a contagious disease. Persons may live in the same house with it for years, and not become infected, provided certain sanitary precautions be observed.

The chief medium through which the infection is spread is the sputum of the patient. When the spittle is dried by evaporation it is converted into a fine, dust-like substance, which, being very light, is carried hither and thither by currents of air, and finds its way into human lungs. Each particle of this dried sputum is laden with the bacilli which constitute the germ of the deadly disease. The greatest care should, therefore, be taken to destroy the sputum. The patient should spit on a cloth and then burn it. It can readily be seen that a consumptive traveling upon the street cars, and voiding his spittle here and there, may be a dangerous companion. It is also claimed that the disease is frequently spread by kissing.

The fundamental recommendation of the New York Board is that all cases of consumption shall be reported immediately to the authorities, in order that proper sanitary precautions may be observed. The number of cases of consumption in New York City at the present time is twenty thousand. The number of deaths from this disease during the year 1896 was six thousand. It is claimed that by proper sanitary regulations the ravages of this fearful malady can be immensely reduced. Leading physicians of this city are giving attention to this matter, and it is likely that our Board of Health will be heard from on the subject in the near future.

An Alarum.

It is stated on the authority of the Memphis Scimetar, as quoted by the New Orleans Picayune, that one thousand applications for divorce have been filed in the Second District Court of that city within the last eighteen months. A more alarming item of news we have not read in a long while. Let us estimate the population of Memphis at eighty thousand. Then, suppose this particular court has jurisdiction over one-half the population, viz., forty thousand people. Allow five persons to a family, and we have eight thousand families within the jurisdiction of that court. Of these one thousand—one-eighth of the whole—apply for a dissolution of the marital relation within the short space of eighteen months. This indicates a state of society that is absolutely appalling. It has not been stated, so far as we know, how many of these applications have been granted. If even the general average prevails, Chicago and Oklahoma should look to their laurels. Even ancient Pagan Rome may have cause in the near future to hide her diminished head. "O tempora! O mores!" The integrity of the home is the chief bulwark of society—the very palladium of national morality. Sap the foundations of the home, and the nation will totter to its fall. It is a matter of rejoicing, however, that our neighboring city is by no means a fair sample of American society.

"The Freedom of the Press."

Great excitement prevails among our Oriental neighbors, the Japanese, over the question of the "freedom of the press." A short time since the government suspended a Tokio paper and imprisoned one of its editors for publishing an article which reflected upon the royal household. This occasioned an outburst of popular indignation, which has already caused the resignation of one member of the Cabinet, and seems likely to bring about the downfall of the Imperial Ministry. Truly the world moves. Liberty is in the air. The time is near at hand when the press will be as entirely unfettered in Japan as in England or America.

"Doing Good."

Last week's issue of the Central Advocate, St. Louis, Mo., has this to say concerning the operations of the Woman's Christian Association of that city during the past year:

A matron is supported by the association who is on duty constantly at the Union Station. Twelve hundred and seventy women during 1896 came under her protection in various ways; some of these were innocent girls who had been lured from their country homes by specious advertisements, letters, or other instrumentalities, and were on the eve of being entrapped for vicious purposes. These devoted women have in charge a Christian Home, where women who are employed can find comfortable accommodations; a Memorial Home for Old People, a Woman's Training-school, with ten departments, which last year expended in its work sixteen thousand dollars; a Blind Girls' Home, and other growing branches.

It is one of the most gratifying features of the civilization of the day that so much systematic, well-organized benevolent work is being done by the womanhood of the church. Work as thoroughly Christ-like as that above referred to is being done in abundance in every city in the land. Truly the spirit of Him who "went about doing good" is still incarnate.

NOTES.

Bishop Galloway will dedicate the church at West Point, Feb. 21.

By inadvertence we omitted from our issue of last week a paragraph calling attention to the article of Dr. W. B. Palmore, editor of the St. Louis Advocate. We appreciate the kindness of our brother editor in writing so good an article for our columns. If any of our readers have not read it, let them do so.

This time it is the expected that has happened. The negroes who went to Liberia are desperately home sick, and those of them who can do so are coming back to Dixie. Terrible accounts are given of the ravages of "the coast fever" among the colonists. Of one colony of 165 from Arkansas it is said that only about a dozen survive.

The Brazilian government is making arrangements to remove the capital from Rio de Janeiro to some point in the interior. A commission to select the site has been appointed. The cause of the change is the high death rate in Rio de Janeiro. So far as we know, this is the first instance in which the site of a national capital was ever selected solely for sanitary reasons.

J. Pierrepont Morgan has donated to the New York Lying In Hospital one million dollars to be used in the construction of a fire-proof building, ten stories high, with a capacity for 250 patients. He stipulates that it shall be equipped with all the appliances known to modern medical science. The trustees expect to raise in the near future an endowment fund adequate for its maintenance. This is a much needed benefaction, there being, we believe, no maternity hospital in New York that is available to the poor.

Two years ago the city of Glasgow, Scotland, purchased all the car lines in the city, and immediately made a large reduction in fares, charging one, two, three and four cents according to distance. The success of the experiment has been remarkable. Notwithstanding the reduction in rates, the net profits for the second year were more than $400,000 above running expenses. After making a liberal allowance for interest on the investment, the profits were more than $200,000. This experiment will doubtless be tried by other cities.

Heretofore the kite has been simply a toy for the delectation of juveniles of the masculine gender. But the march of progress has changed all that. From henceforth the kite is to be an implement of warfare. Lieut. Hugh D. Wise, of the Ninth Infantry, U. S. A., after a long series of experiments, has succeeded in constructing a kite by means of which he ascended to a height of forty-two feet, remained at his pleasure, and then descended safely. It is claimed that kites of this description are safer and far better every way than balloons. For reconnoitering purposes it promises to be invaluable.

Eastward the star of progress makes its way. Palestine now has three railways. One of these connects Jerusalem with Jaffa, fifty-four miles distant. Another connects Damascus with Beyrout on the Mediterranean. The third has Damascus as its center. Two others centering at Damascus are in contemplation. So there seems to be truth in the remark that "Damascus promises to become again one of the great centers of the world." One of the best proofs of the truth of this is the fact that Jewish capital—always eagle-eyed—is making large investments in the city and its suburbs. In the mind of the Christian more than ordinary interest attaches to the varying fortunes of this city, which has survived since Abraham's day, and in which the great "Apostle of the Gentiles" had the scales removed from his eyes.

Important Notice.

1. The Board of Church Extension will hold its Annual Meeting at its office, 705 W. Chestnut St., Louisville, Ky., on April 29, 1897. Applications for aid must be made out on blanks which will be furnished for the purpose by the undersigned, and must be on file in the Board's office on or before April 1, in order to insure attention at the Annual Meeting.

2. We are particularly anxious that all who owe anything on account of Birthday Cards, or of subscriptions in aid of Cuban Churches in Florida, or for the building of churches in the Indian Mission Conference will remit the sums due as soon as they can do so. The money is greatly needed.

3. We wish to circulate our literature. We will send package containing copies of our last Annual and Quadrennial Reports, and of the Church Extension Bulletin, to anybody who will send us a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

4. We have a supply of pamphlets containing Dr. S. A. Steel's address on "Church Extension, in Relation to the Future South," and Dr. W. Briggs' address on "Church Extension on the Frontier;" both delivered at Montgomery, Ala. We will send these in any quantities desired upon receipt of ten cents per hundred, in stamps, to pay postage.

5. Copies of our handsomely illustrated little book, "Living Monuments," will be sent to any address on receipt of twenty-five cents.

All requests for parsonage plans and applications and all correspondence in connection with parsonage work should be addressed to Mrs. R. E. Hargrove, West Nashville, Tenn., who has entire charge of that department.

Teachers' Bureau.

The General Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has, under paragraph 413 of the Discipline, inaugurated a Teachers' Bureau, looking to the placing of graduates of our institutions, and other competent persons, in our schools and colleges.

All applicants should send to me, to be filed in my office, copies of testimonials; and should state what they desire to teach, their previous experience (if any), and other such information.

Presidents of our schools and colleges, and Board of Trustees seeking teachers, will do well to correspond with me. No fee is required.

I will be glad if the pastors throughout our connection will notify me of any vacancy in any school (secular or Christian), of any grade, so soon as it occurs.

Epworth League Echoes.

"Forward" is the watchword—"all for Christ" is our motto.

A young lady recently conducted a League prayer meeting and led the opening prayer who had only been a member of the church one month. The Epworth League proposes thus to train all our young people.

Good reports reach us from many portions of Mississippi, showing renewed interest in this department of the church.

Rev. Frank M. Keen writes that he has a League at Laurel with 90 members, and invites us to visit him and assist in organizing at Ellisville. We will help him in any way we possibly can.

Presiding Elder Burroughs, of the Columbus district, North Mississippi Conference, sends us a neatly printed programme of a District Epworth League Conference to be held at Macon, Miss., March 4–7. If not providentially hindered, we will fill our place at that time.

We hope that each presiding elder in the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences will endeavor to arrange some time during the year for a District Epworth League Conference. Those held heretofore have proved to be of great good. The Discipline provides for them.

Don't forget the State League Conference at Water Valley, Miss., April 29 to May 2, 1897. It will be a good religious gathering, and a mighty inspiration to all who attend. Full information will be sent out to every pastor and League president in the State at an early date.

Fellow-Leaguer, don't forget the sick and the poor in your community during this cold spell and season of much sickness. Your pastor is not ubiquitous; help him in every way you can.

Let the chairman of the Literary Department see to it that each Methodist family in the community takes the church paper. Especially circulate the Epworth Era and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

"Potash in Agriculture"

Is the title of a pamphlet, published by the German Kali Works, No. 93 Nassau street, New York, N. Y.

The contents embody a collection of results obtained with fertilizers at our Experiment Stations. It would appear from these conclusions that many brands of fertilizers now on the market do not contain as much potash as they should for the production of the best results. It would certainly pay every farmer to write for a copy of this book, which we understand is sent free.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

BY REV. ROBERT H. WYNN.

Prayer Meeting Topic for February.

THE CHRIST OF ISAIAH.

FEB. 7—IMMANUEL—GOD WITH US. (Isa. vii, 14, 15; ix, 6, 7.)

The prophet is ever able to turn away from the dark visions of national disaster which crowd upon his mind and heart, and to obtain a bright perspective of the Messianic kingdom.

In our study for this month we have personal references to the names, character, and work of Christ, and it may be seen, with what wonderful exactness, the Christ of Isaiah corresponds to the Christ of the Gospels.

In chap. vii, 14 15, we find the prediction that a child, Immanuel by name, should be born of a virgin mother, and that he should be fed upon the ordinary diet of Jewish children; i. e., the child should be a Divine Incarnation—God with us—and at the same time should be truly human, and subject to the same law of growth as other children. (Matt. i, 23, and Luke ii, 52.) This prediction was given by the prophet as a sign to the idolatrous king Ahaz, who feared that the kingdom of Judah, or the royal line of David, was about to be overthrown by the league of Israel and Syria. Isaiah uses the prophecy above referred to as a symbol, and tells Ahaz (ver. 16) that in a shorter time than will be required for the child Immanuel to come to the age of understanding, both the kings whom he fears will have been driven from their thrones.

In chap. ix the prophet makes a transition from the gloomy prediction of national suffering at the hand of the nation of Assyria, to a bright vision of Messianic dominion, and in verses 6 and 7 he again foretells the birth of the Christ-child, and assigns to him a series of names that involve the loftiest claims which Christ assumed for himself as the God-man—Immanuel. He shall hold the reins of government, "and his name shall be called:"

(1) "WONDERFUL." Christ will ever be the world's wonder. Now, more than ever before, do his wonderful words and works claim the attention and careful thought of the world.

(2) "COUNSELLOR." The teachings of Christ constitute the fiber of all free political government; they have been the inspiration of the best in literature and art; and thinking men are everywhere perceiving that their right application is the only remedy for the world's vexed social ills. The true follower of Christ regards him as the only source of spiritual wisdom, and gratefully realizes the fact of his continual presence through the Holy Spirit to guide and counsel.

(3) MIGHTY GOD. Christ is no other than the mighty Jehovah, tabernacling in the flesh.

(4) EVERLASTING FATHER, or, "Father of Eternity." This means that the Messiah is eternal. (John i, 1, 2.)

(5) PRINCE OF PEACE. (See last week's exposition.)

Verse 7 foretells the eternal enlargement of the kingdom of Christ through the "zeal of the Lord of hosts" himself.

Butter Made In Two Minutes.

A neighbor of mine several days ago sent for one of those Lightning churns, which are sold by a firm over in Pennsylvania. After it came we went over to see it work. We were all surprised, for it made butter in two minutes, just as they said it would, and the color was so nice, too. I sent for one, and since we have used it we would not be without it for three times its cost. The churn works so easy, and then we get more butter than we did the old way. I can appreciate the new invention, for I know how disagreeable it is to churn for an hour on a warm day. My son is making lots of money selling the churn in this township, and he never sold anything before in his life. Those who want to make money easy can get full particulars from Dep't A 5 of W. H. Baird & Co., Sta. A, Pittsburg, Pa. Anyone can make at least $100 a month selling them, as every farmer who sees it work orders one.

Meetings in Mississippi.

Quitman, county-seat of Jasper county, on the Mobile and Ohio railway, was opened to us by Bro. Bradford. God gave us ten days of victory here. About 190 found the Lord in pardon or entire sanctification. The people seemed by one consent to join in seeking the Lord. Judge S. H. Terrell, of the Supreme Court of Mississippi, lives here and is a devout man full of faith and good works. He stood by us, and with his devoted wife sought and confessed Christ as an uttermost Savior. Praise the Lord! The hand of God rests heavily on that home in the serious illness of their only daughter, wife of Rev. H. G. Hawkins, of the Mississippi Conference. We left many happy homes and rejoicing Christians.

McGowin's Chapel, on the Pachuta charge—Rev. W. J. Ferguson, P. C.—was in touch with other points where we had held successful meetings. Here about eighty found the Lord from Sunday to Friday night. Our Baptist friends took an active part, and many came into the blessed experience of entire sanctification.

Rose Hill, D. C. Langford P. C.—Here, after a hard battle, the Lord came in pentecostal power. More than fifty finding the Lord in some gracious experience at our last service. Many desired to have the meeting continue another week, but previous engagements would not permit.

In our meetings since last October we have seen more than one thousand souls converted and sanctified. The work has been in our own churches, and converts have been urged to join some church. At all these meetings members have been received; but the work has been mainly in the church. Scriptural regeneration and entire sanctification, as taught in the Methodist standard, have been pressed and God has owned the Word. Let us wait on God for a general revival in 1897.

HOME CIRCLE.

OUR TREASURE.

BY M. A.

Once a gem without a name
Into our lone household came.
Fair of face, with laughing eyes
Blue as are Italian skies.
O'er his head, in billows, rolled
Tangled threads of burnished gold.

Not a prince of wealth was he,
But was welcomed joyously.
Frail the little baby hands,
Yet with strength of iron bands
Held he, without thought of fear,
Captive every vassal near.

But the Boatman pale, one day,
Bore our treasure far away
Out upon the ocean wide—
With its still relentless tide—
And across its trackless main
Called our broken hearts in vain.

When we hear the final call—
See the darkening shadows fall—
Journey o'er the dark abyss
Shutting heaven's land from this,
Where is neither grief nor care,
We shall find our treasure there.

Purpose.

The two things are absolutely essential to every true life; one is to have an aim and the other is to have a high aim. Some purpose, some aim, usually fixes itself in a child's heart early in life. This aim may often be only a childish fancy which will again and again be changed and replaced; but whenever a worthy and high purpose fixes itself in the mind of a boy or a girl, when that purpose is cherished and followed, it almost invariably leads on to a high and useful career. Too many boys and young men look out into life with no aim or with a low and unworthy aim.

It is said that Saint Simon, the great social reformer, who did so much for the laboring classes in France, gave his valet orders to awake him every morning with the words, "Remember, monsieur le comte, that you have great things to do."

Remember, my young friend, that you have great things to do. Great things will certainly be done in the next fifty years; why should you not have the honor of doing some of them? To be great and do great things will require, first, a high aim, and then diligence, earnestness, hard work, definite and unremitting toil; but you can do what others have done and are doing, and win the prize which is waiting for some one to come and take it.

It is said that Cicero's life motto was, "Strive always to excel: be ever foremost in the race." What a splendid motto for everybody is this saying of the famous philosopher! Not that we should seek in a selfish way to outstrip others, but that we should never be satisfied to put into that which we do anything but the very best effort of which we are capable.

Do not ask, How can I make my life good, but how can I make it best? Do not ask, Will this profession or this work make me useful to my fellow-men, but will this course make me most useful to my fellow-men? Do not ask, Is this a high aim, is this a great thing to do? but Is this the highest aim, is this the best, the very best thing on earth that it is possible for me to do?

No course in life will ever prove satisfactory either to ourselves or to God save that only which follows the loftiest ideals, and which induces us to throw into the attainment of those ideals our whole selves, the very best and truest powers of our whole being. Anything short of this will end only in the more or less complete failure which waits always upon half-heartedness. —The Christian Work.

Be Attractive.

Study to be attractive, especially if you are a young Christian. I do not mean alone in the matter of dress, but in many other things. Make your face attractive by ever wearing a sunny smile. Let your hands do so many deeds of usefulness that they will not appear ungainly, even though bearing the marks of toil. Let your words be so full of gentleness and love that they too may attract others and reveal a spirit of sweetness.

If you would do great and good work for the Master, study the law of attractiveness, both in nature and social life. Discover the attractive principles in the sunlight, the fair springtime, and the blooming flowers that are so full of sweetness. Take the shy violet and the bright June rose and find out what there is about them that makes us love them at sight. What makes the attractiveness of the blue sky when full of sunlight or gemmed with its myriads of stars? What makes us love to hear the songs of the robin and the lark in the morning?

Study to be like the people that we sometimes meet, whose very faces seem to bestow a blessing as we look upon them. Learn the sweet secret of their attractiveness, and be like them.

Be attractive in the home. Ever let this sweet principle make home-life bright and beautiful. Be attractive in social life, and thus win souls for the Master. The gentle grace of a true attraction always comes from him, and reveals his spirit. Every soul that goes to him is first attracted by some means that he employs. That "means" are often sweet, loving human souls filled with his spirit.

There is always something attractive about the earnest young Christian. Just as we are drawn to the beautiful in nature, so are we toward the Christ-like spirit. Then be in earnest as you seek to attract others—not to exhibit your own personal charms, but the spirit that God gives you. Worldly people may strive to be attractive through pride, but if you are Christ's follower, you will have a holy motive in doing so.—Mrs. M. A. Holt, New Berlin, N. Y.

Hurry and Worry.

We frequently hear of Christian workers breaking down from overwork, but nine times out of ten it was hurry and worry which brought them to the state of enforced inaction which they regret. Hurry and worry, which usually go together, ruin more lives than any amount of regular systematic labor. Indeed, inconsiderate exertion is almost as bad in its effects as idleness. Why can not we bear in mind that there is always time enough to do well all that we are called upon to do? If we do more than this, we do injustice both to the work and to ourselves. On the other hand, if we waste the time entrusted to us, it is useless to attempt to get it back by extra haste.—Quiver.

The Meaning of Manners.

There are many people who are not hypocrites in any other direction, but who never live up to their manners. They are habitually polite, cordial, obliging and sympathetic to everyone that they meet. But practically, they have not the virtues of which these manners should be but the outward and visible sign. They have been taught, so to speak, to hang out the sign, and keep it in good order, with its letters bright and its legend clear, and there their idea of behavior ends. Not that they are vicious, or unkind—but simply that the high manners have no high living behind them, and are but a mask, beneath which we suspect, dimly, a very different face from the unvarying one that we see smiling upon us.

The sincere soul will never strive after a manner that is not the simple, outward expression of the inner man. We have no right to a fine manner unless we have the fine nature to which it belongs, any more than a beggar has the right to steal an embroidered cloak to cover his shabby rags. And the worst of it is that the delicate beauty of the cloak is, inevitably, smirched and degraded by the beggar's touch. What right has a fussy, egotistical person to a cordial, sympathetic manner? That belongs only to the warm, generous heart that it should express. What part has a selfish soul in obliging words and polite interest? None at all. And it is because of this appropriation, by unworthy persons, of the manners that do not belong to them, that good manners are so often discredited in the eyes of those who have been deceived by their false owners; while, on the other hand, sincerity often takes refuge, most unwisely, in a brusqueness that is not really native to it. The real truth lies between these two mistakes. Let us use just as much of high manners as we have attained to in our hearts, not resting, year after year, until we attain more, and yet more, of beautiful outward expression, yet always guarding against the assumption of more than we have truly conquered and possessed. So the manners and the nature will grow together, each reacting upon, and developing the other, until the gracious beauty of the one will be but the transparent glass through which the fine harmony of the other is manifest; and so we shall know, and show, the true meaning of manners.—The Interior.

Learn to Unload.

Of the many burdens men bear, the most intolerable is the burden of care. Labor seldom kills men; labor is a divine ordination which we escape only with damage to ourselves. The strongest men and women are those who have mastered the mysteries of work. What kills men is care. Many business men take it home with them. Worry disturbs their sleep and gives them no rest on Sunday. Care drinks up the spirits, destroys the elasticity of the mind, and crushes the energies of the soul. They are always jaded, nervous, unbalanced. Such a man is the pack-horse of his business. He lies down and rises with the burden closely buckled about him. He has not learned to unstrap and lay aside his load.

No man can remain uninjured by such a constant strain. The secret every man should learn is that of unloading. We can carry immense "weight in life" if only we have an occasional let up. Care seems to trouble those who have little as well as those who have much. Some who are concerned in much learn to drop it with the day. Napoleon had such command of his faculties that he could throw off the heaviest responsibilities at any moment, and Grant could sleep in the midst of a battle. If you would unload your cares, plan well and do your best while at work, and then learn to leave business in the shop or store. Unbend souls as well as body; let in the sunlight, and indulge in the best fellowships, especially those of the family and the church.—Zion's Herald

The Train Boy.

He had done several little errands for the gentleman in the Pullman car, and as the man got off he slipped a dollar into his hand.

"I like your looks, Jimmy," he said kindly. "Now remember that you can make yourself whatever you wish. I don't mean by that that you may become a Vanderbilt if you desire, or the President of the United States; but I do mean that you can be something better yet—a Christian man. Don't forget that."

It was ten years later before the two met again. Then Jimmy had just been made conductor on an important road, and in one of the passengers he recognized his old-time friend. The gentleman had changed but little in the ten years just passed, but it was hard to persuade him that the fine-looking young conductor was the ragged train boy of whom he still retained a faint remembrance.

"But I certainly am he," Jimmy asserted, energetically, "and I've always wanted to tell you how much your words and your kindness did for me. I'd been getting into low company and growing sort o' wild and reckless, but your words just haunted me, and I got to wondering if that kind of thing paid. I concluded that I'd rather grow up a Christian man, as you said, than a drunken loafer, so I just stopped short and commenced over in dead earnest."

"And that was all the result of a few sentences, forgotten as soon as uttered," said the gentleman, thoughtfully. "It just shows what a mighty power for weal or woe our chance words may be, and how we ought to guard them."—Classmate.

HYGIENE.

For a Hale Old Age.

Nine-tenths of the leading men and women in the world, those who are making history for the future, are over fifty years of age; but, as a rule, this may be taken as the age after which one is old; and it depends after that time how the person cares for himself or herself whether the span of old age may last forty, thirty, or less than twenty years. At fifty-five three-fourths of the people have passed beyond the river. Twenty-three out of a hundred of persons older than fifty left pass away before the age of eighty five, leaving only two per cent surviving at this age. From sixty five to seventy-five is the most fatal period of this last span. So that those who have reached the age of sixty-five have in their own hands, in a great measure, whether they shall survive to seventy-five, and then have a better chance than the average to live on to the next ten-year stage.

It is not saying too much, by any means, to assert that one who has reached sixty-five may easily survive to the next decennial period by the exercise of the right prudential means. These include the enjoyment of pure air; a well-balanced, easy mind, and freedom from cares and worry; good food of the right kind; a moderate climate; the sustenance of bodily warmth; personal cleanliness; avoiding every exhausting physical labor; yet the taking of such exercise as one has been used to, but never to the extent of painful weariness. Rest is indispensable. The sleep should be at least ten or twelve hours every day. To avoid sudden changes from hot to cold, dry to moist air, the constant wearing of sufficient woolen underclothing; the use of simple medicines to preserve all the bodily functions in an evenly, healthful condition, or to secure this by the use of the right foods, of which fruit should be the largest part; the avoidance of strong coffee, tobacco, or alcohol in anything like excess, even comparatively; to masticate the food perfectly, and, if the teeth have failed to prepare the food by thorough comminution of it, and to eat it slowly, that the supply of the saliva, the first of the digestive fluids, may be copious; to eat often, and a little at a time, of meat especially, for the protein is most needed, and the carbohydrates least, on account of the need to sustain all the vital organs in their most effective condition; for it is on these that the aged depends mostly, the wastes of the tissues that depend on the carbo-hydrates for their renewal being the least, as long as the body is kept warmly clothed and the breathing of very cold air is avoided.

The excretory organs are to be preserved in effective action, and the skin, which is the most important of these, if one may be so described, should be kept in the fullest action by frequent bathing in the evening and a dry rubbing in the morning. A little muscular exercise before retiring at night, and a tepid sponge bath, will greatly aid in procuring that rest which old persons need, but often fail to get as they would wish.

Violent exercise is to be avoided, and whatever increases the action of the heart. One has just as many heart-beats to count on; and if for some time these are increased in number, the time is shortened. The heart is often hampered by too great a load of fat around it, and on this account the use of starchy and oily foods is to be kept subject to the actual needs of the system, to be judged by each individual. Overeating is a grave fault at any time, but far worse in old age. The effect of it is to excite the heart to irregular action, and it is better to restrain the appetite than to let it run to excess in anything. Lean meat, chicken, fish, rather weak tea, with cream (cream is the very best form of fat that can be taken), and fruit, with bread (not the far too prevalent biscuit), and stale is the best condition of it; few vegetables; no pie; a few drops of some good preparation of phosphoric acid in a glass of water will be the best drink, or it may be taken an hour before eating with benefit. Lastly, moderate walks abroad, or any light work in the garden or in the fields, but never to the extent of weariness, will greatly conduce to longevity, along with all the preceding regulations for the sustenance of the best condition of health.—Country Gentleman.

THE ADVANCE AGENT OF HEALTH

Miniature Fac-Simile.

Prof. Wilmot H. Goodale.

The many friends of Prof. Goodale were greatly shocked to learn of his death, which occurred on Jan. 2, 1897, while still in his prime and in the active discharge of his professorial duties. His extensive acquaintance and estimable personal qualities render a brief memorial eminently appropriate.

Wilmot H. Goodale was born Sept. 9, 1839, at Goodale's Corner, Orrington, Maine. He remained there until about fourteen years of age. He then became a student at Philips Academy, Andover, where he prepared for college. Leaving Andover, he entered Yale, and pursued his studies there until in 1861 he was compelled to desist on account of the sudden, although temporary, failure of his eyesight. Unable to enter the army on account of the same trouble, he shortly after came South in the employ of The Christian Commission, and was largely engaged in that work in the vicinity of Port Hudson. After this he settled in the city of Baton Rouge, which place has been his home ever since. In 1866 Mr. Goodale was happily married to Miss Mary Read, of Baton Rouge.

For many years he was engaged in the practice of law in the city of his option; but in 1890 he gave up this work, accepting the chair of philosophy and civics in the Louisiana State University, which position he filled with ability, and in it found congenial employment for his marked intellectual gifts and attainments. He was also for many years on the Board of Managers of this institution; also on the Board of Trustees of Centenary College. In all these positions of trust his work was conscientiously done and with acceptability to those interested.

Prof. Goodale was a man of broad intellectual culture and finely developed mental resources. His information was extensive, and conversation with him revealed the presence of a well-equipped mind. Socially, his affability was easily felt, radiating unobtrusively in the various associations of life.

Early records of his life reveal the fact that his mind and heart soon sought to know the power and blessedness of Christ and his salvation. When a lad of ten or eleven years he united with the Congregational church, and during the time of his school-life at Andover he was actively engaged in Sunday-school work. In 1866 he united with the M. E. Church, South, under the pastorate of Dr. W. L. Linfield, the gifted pastor of our church in Baton Rouge at that time. He was active as a member of the local church, and served as delegate to the General Conference. The religious atmosphere of Methodism was more congenial to him than that in which his religious life had begun, and in this body of the church militant he remained until death.

He was a thoughtful man concerning the truths of our holy religion, and sought to conform his life to the precepts of the gospel. From a child he had maintained his confession of faith in Christ, our Lord and only Savior. Doubtless he has entered into the joy of his Lord. In this community he will be greatly missed, and many friends will mourn his departure both here and elsewhere. His sorrowing family have the blessed consolations of Christ, precious memories, and that supreme confidence which belongs to those whose hope is in Jesus and the resurrection.

NELSON—"There is no death; what seems so is transition. This life of mortal breath is but the suburb of the life elysian, whose portal we call Death."

This portal, Death, has opened and received the sweet spirit of our sainted friend, Mrs. C. E. NELSON, who has entered upon a grander, nobler life above.

The Winona Auxiliary of the W. F. M. S., of which Mrs. Nelson had been a member, recognizing in her death the loss of a grand Christian character and a faithful, consecrated worker, offers the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we recognize in this dispensation of God's wisdom that our beloved sister is only removed to a higher, nobler life; that the mortal has only put on immortality.

Resolved, That while we sustain the loss of a devoted Christian worker, we treasure her beautiful, Christ-like example, and rejoice that her sweet influence still lives, lifting many of us heavenward.

Resolved, That we ever strive to emulate her humble submission to God's will, her consecrated effort to do his service, her perfect faith in his Word.

Resolved, That we extend to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy in this sorrow, recommending them to seek comfort of the same God who sustained that sainted mother in every trial of life.

Resolved, That the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE be requested to publish these resolutions, and a copy be sent to Mrs. S. M. Thames. MRS. SWEATMAN, for Com.

FLOWERS—Mr. DAVIS FLOWERS died Dec. 30, 1896. He was born July 14, 1850; was married to Miss Fannie Sullivan in January, 1883; was converted and joined the M. E. Church in early life, in which he lived an humble Christian life until God called him home. He was a kind husband and most affectionate father. He leaves a wife and seven darling children, and a host of friends and relatives, to mourn his death; but "blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for they rest from their labor."

Dear wife and children, try to follow him. He is at the pearly gates awaiting you to come. Remember your father's dying words. His cheerful voice and pleasant face are gone from your midst. Desolate and sad is the home, and lonely the hearts that loved him; but there is the hope that o'er the dark river his pure spirit will no more cross we will meet him over there in the bright beyond, where parting shall be no more.

Weep no more, fond loved ones; thy loved one is not dead, but sleepeth; and when death calls you, may you be prepared to meet thy loved one on the bright shore of eternal deliverance.

SCARBROUGH—Mrs. MARGARETTE SCARBROUGH departed this life Jan. 7, 1897, aged eighty-nine years. She was a devout member of the M. E. Church, South, and had been for seventy-three years. She was the mother of several children, one of which is a local preacher in the M. E. Church, South, and at one time an honored member of the Mississippi Conference, but located in order to take care of his aged mother.

Sister Scarbrough was a loving mother and a true friend, and was loved by all who knew her. With her relatives she leaves a score of friends to mourn her death. We extend a hand of sympathy to all the bereaved ones, and would say: Weep not, dear ones, for you live with the assurance that you will soon meet again where parting will be no more. Many silent hours may pass away, and many thoughts of dear mother may come, but only be faithful unto death, and then you will meet mother on the other shore, to live and love forevermore. C. C. EVANS.

Sutartia, Miss.

McCARDLE—FANNIE MCCARDLE, daughter of W. and Jane McCardle, was killed near her home at Ashley, Miss., Dec. 7, 1896, aged six years and fourteen days.

Little Fannie was on her way from school, and very near her home, when she tried to shun a muddy place in the road by holding to a stump which fell and killed her instantly.

Fannie was a bright-faced, intelligent and affectionate child, full of life and joy. Her stay on earth was brief, but long enough to entwine all the heart-strings of her home and community.

Fare thee well, little Fannie. I hope to meet you in that beautiful city where you are now waiting and watching for papa and mama. Will they meet their darling there? God grant that they may.

"Your little darling, so tender and sweet,
Will be tenderly cared for till next we meet;
Pillowed an sweetly on Jesus' breast,
Fannie awaits the coming of the rest."

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Bible

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

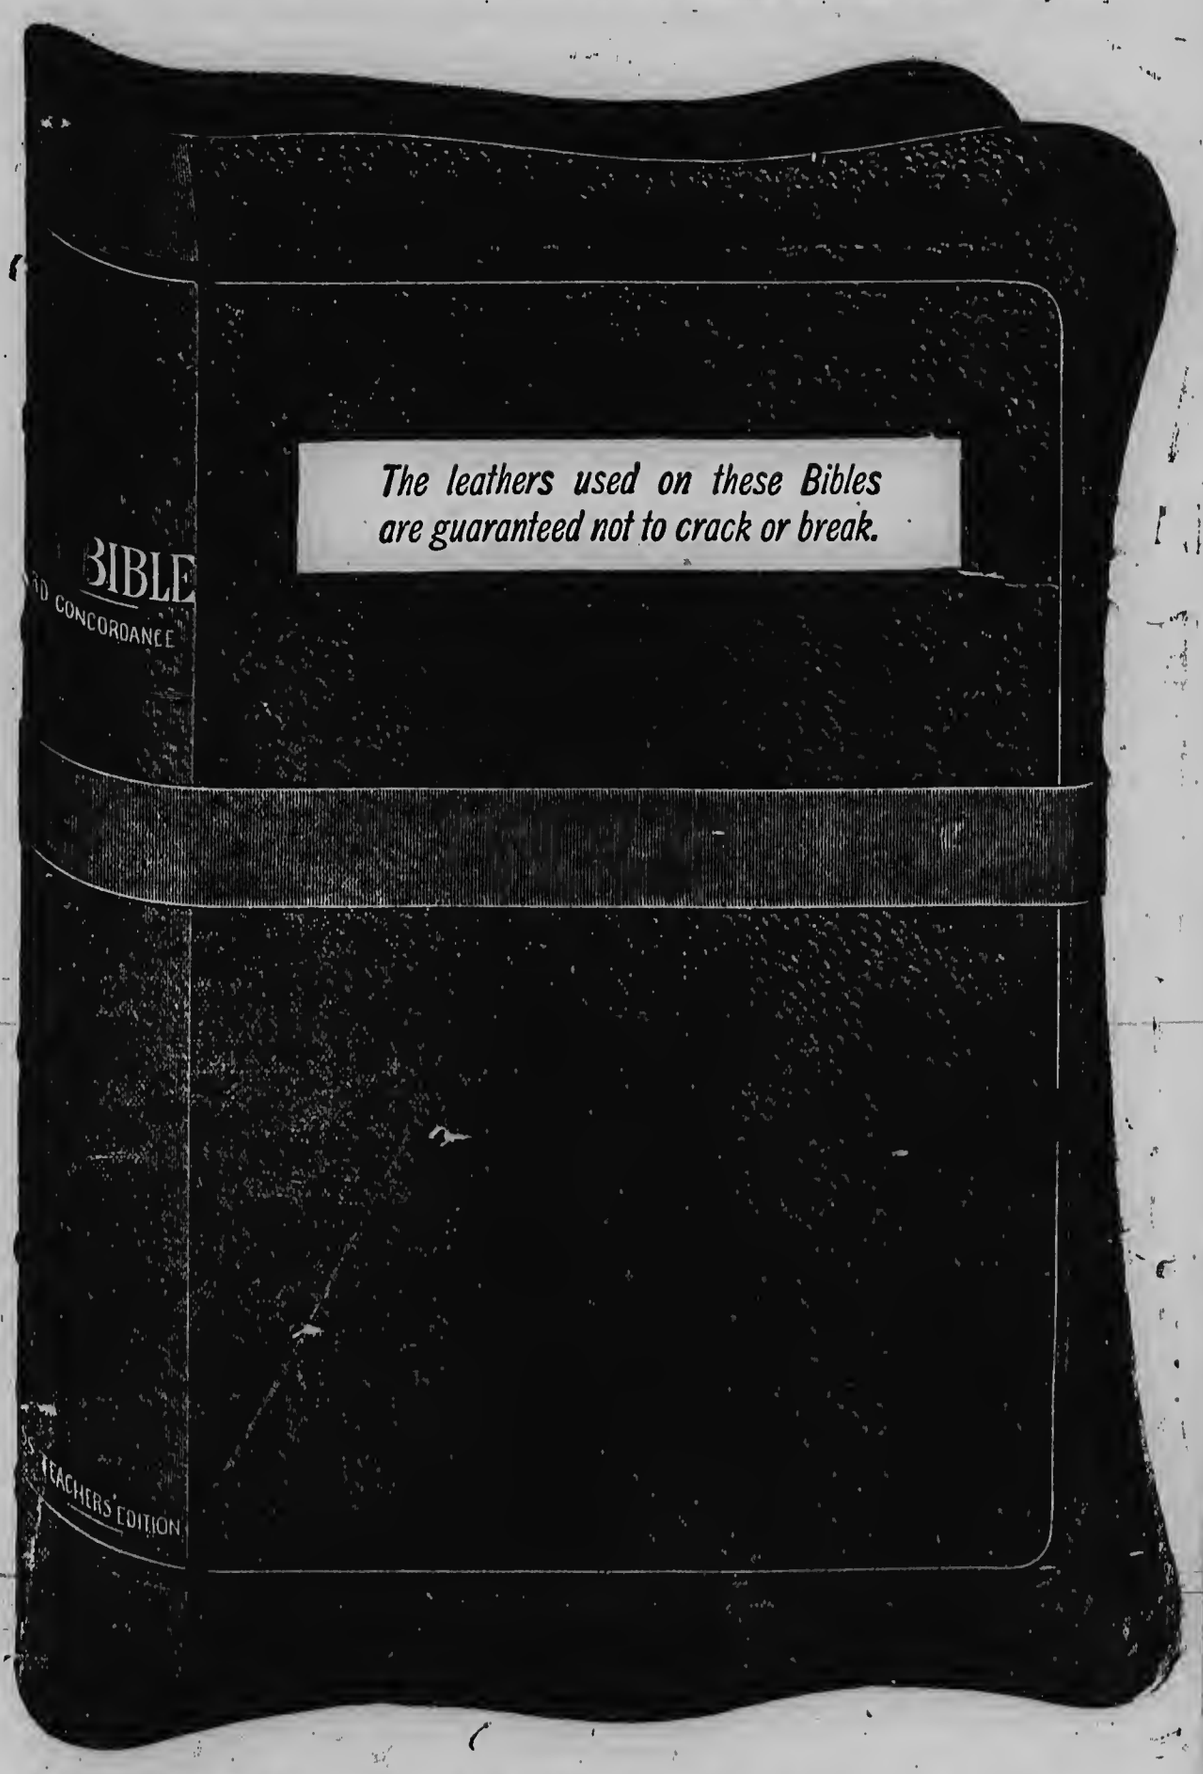
Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"



The leathers used on these Bibles are guaranteed not to crack or break.

The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2.35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3.15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1.15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to February, '98. (A little later it will be March, '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

Mothers, Give Heed!

A WORD OF COUNSEL FROM DR. HARTMAN, WHOSE NAME HAS BECOME KNOWN TO THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS.

Midwinter is here. The nights are long and cold. The days are short and changeable in temperature. Cold creeps in at every crevice and draughts occur in spite of the utmost vigilance. The tireless patience and sagacity of mother even fails to keep the household safe from climatic diseases. Colds soon develop into chronic catarrh. A cough rapidly becomes consumption. La grippe undermines the system dangerously. Influenza leaves injuries to head and throat, hard to remove. All these things the mother strives in vain to guard her household against. How can she best do it? First, get some Pe-ru-na. Second, send to The Peruna Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio, for a free copy of Dr. Hartman's latest book on the climatic diseases of winter. This book, in plain and direct language, informs the mother exactly what to do in all of the liabilities and emergencies resulting from wintry weather. Not only will she be able to prevent diseases, but she knows exactly how to cure them. In case she is doubtful on any point, if the book does not fully explain it, she has only to write a letter to Dr. Hartman at any time, and she will receive a free answer as quickly as possible. What untold misery this would save the world if every mother would heed this advice. Pe-ru-na cures a cold quicker than any medicine in the world. Pe-ru-na is a sure cough cure. Pe-ru-na is the best, if not the only, internal remedy for catarrh yet devised. Pe-ru-na cures la grippe and influenza. A book of testimonials sent free.

Every noble acquisition is attended with its risks; he who fears to encounter the one, must not expect to obtain the other.—Metastasio.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The South Carolina House has rejected a bill to license the carrying of concealed weapons.

Gen Russell A. Alger, of Michigan, has accepted the war portfolio tendered him by McKinley.

A resolution has passed the Arkansas Legislature providing each member with twenty daily papers at the State's expense.

Lyman J Gage, president of the First National Bank of Chicago, has accepted the position of Secretary of the Treasury in McKinley's Cabinet.

The Louisiana representatives are about to make an earnest effort to secure the payment to the sugar producers of the balance of the bounty money due on the crop of 1894.

The statement that Judge Goff has declined the attorney generalship is credited, and there is a great scramble among Southern Republicans for the Southern representation in the Cabinet.

Ex-Congressman James Wilson, of Iowa, will be Secretary of Agriculture in McKinley's Cabinet. Mr. Charles G Dawes will be the next Comptroller of the Currency.

The United States cruiser Brooklyn, the latest pride of a peerless navy, lies almost utterly helpless because of a narrow ledge of sunken rock in the Delaware river above Marcus Hook, Pa.

The cold which has prevailed in this latitude for a week past is extreme for the season, and its continuance is most unusual, and it has lasted longer than the frosty spell which attended the snow storm of Feb. 14, 1895.

In an expedition to the jetties, last week, two of the Daily Picayune's reporters were lost. The steam yacht in the service of the paper collided with another vessel and sank shortly after. The two members of the staff shared the fate of the craft. The rest of the passengers were saved.

One of the provisions of the greater New York charter, a provision existing in the present law, is that the walls and ceilings of every tenement house shall be whitewashed at least once a year. The definition of tenement house is so framed that it includes the most beautiful and expensive apartment houses in the city.

Steadily and surely the beet sugar industry is spreading in the far West. Within the past two years several new factories have been established in as many different States, and judging from the experiments being made in many sections of the West, it will not be very long before the industry will be firmly established in fully a dozen States.

It is a healthy sign of the times that the masses of the people have devoted more time of late to the subject of national defense, and as a result of a general examination and discussion of the subject Congress has been induced to make more liberal appropriations for both the construction of additional ships for the navy and for the providing of coast and harbor defenses.

The Alaskan treaty just signed between the United States and Great Britain does not apply to the boundary in the southern part of Alaska, but only to that of the 141st meridian, readily fixed by the astronomical observance in the northern part of Alaska. It is this southern branch of the controversy which presents serious difficulties, involving questions of territory between the United States and Great Britain.

WHO'LL BE THE FIRST TO GO?

I look around on the loved ones
By the fireside's ruddy glow,
And I ask my heart in a whisper
Solemn and soft and low,
When the angel shall come to grieve us,
And one must surely leave us,
Who'll be the first to go?

Across death's darkened portal
Some step must faltering go,
Some face must lie in its shadow,
Some pulse must flutter low.
When the angel shall come to grieve us,
And one must surely leave us,
Which one will have to go?

Of all that unseen glory
Some face will catch the glow,
Some heart find first the healing
Where the restful waters flow.
When the angel shall come to grieve us,
And one must surely leave us,
Who'll be the first to go?

A Statement from Bishop Key.

MR. EDITOR: I think you acted wisely in closing the discussion on the subject of holiness in the ADVOCATE several months ago. Some things were written on both sides of the question that were not "good to the use of edifying." Strange that any child of God, writing on the subject of holiness, would dip his pen in gall. Such a man should be ruled out of court, no matter who he is. Nothing ought ever to be admitted to the columns of the ADVOCATE, it matters not what the subject may be, if it is not in a perfectly good spirit. When the line was drawn here, then any subject might be discussed—any question of doctrine or discipline—to the edification of the readers of the ADVOCATE. So it seems to me.

Without any desire to reopen the discussion above alluded to, I enclose a letter from Bishop Key to the Tennessee Methodist, which I would be glad to see in our ADVOCATE. The letter explains itself. It is wise, conservative, irenic. It is from one of our chief pastors. It substantially accords with the Review article of Bishop Hendrix on "The Perfecting of the Saints," published months ago. Its publication may disabuse the minds of some as to what the "holiness brethren," so called, do really believe, profess, and teach. That they are misunderstood, and sometimes misrepresented, is too apparent to be denied by any fair-minded and unprejudiced man. It is unkind to identify them with the extreme views of a few specialists, or the vagaries of indiscreet novices. Will you, as an act of simple justice to many of our brethren, kindly publish the Bishop's letter? W. B. LEWIS.

DEAR BRO. HAYNES: Your letter of inquiry has just reached me and I hasten to reply. You enclose a clipping which contains the outline of a part of my address recently made to the class for reception into the Little Rock Conference, and ask if it be correct. The report, you notice, is quite verbal, but gives the impression made on the reporter's mind by what I said. Perhaps, therefore, what departure there may be in the published statement from literal accuracy, may be as much the fault of the speaker as of the writer.

I ought to impress carefully and clearly what I believe to be the Scriptural and consequently the Wesleyan teaching on the subject of perfect love, or entire sanctification. If, therefore, there was confusion and darkness in it, I am truly sorry, and did express my regret on account of the term "second blessing," while acknowledging at the same time that Mr. Wesley is its author. This I have done repeatedly before, and again here and now. My reasons are few and plain.

1. It is not a scriptural expression. This alone, of course, is not sufficient to reject it, for the truth is often more fully set forth in other forms of statement. But it is always safest to adhere to the letter of God's Word.

2. There must be a reason in the mind of the Spirit for the oft-repeated use of the terms "perfection," "sanctification," "holiness." Much as many good men may shrink from the use of these words, I prefer them because inspired revelation has given them. You can always and everywhere defend them and follow safely whithersoever they may lead.

It has always been a matter of regret with me that this expression, which Mr. Wesley first used so innocently and so honestly, should be diverted from its intended meaning and made a bone of contention—a term of derision—an epithet of reproach—a party line which surely divides the church and alienates brethren. The facts here referred to are well known.

In many quarters it has come to pass that to call a man "a second blessingist" is to brand him as ignorant, fanatical and dangerous! Could not this deplorable result have been avoided if we had followed strictly the scriptural terminology? Would reverent and God-fearing men ridicule the Bible words "sanctification" and "holiness?" Would they use them as clubs to assault and bruise their brethren who sincerely believe and try to follow them? I think not; and believing thus, I can but regret the adoption of a phrase which has been used for harm.

I furthermore believe that this form of speech is not the clearest expression of Mr. Wesley's view of scriptural sanctification. He believed and taught that sanctification began in conversion. He called it "initial sanctification," and drew a marked distinction between sanctification and entire sanctification. And so speak all our standards, and so Methodism has always expounded the teachings of our Lord and his apostles. Our church, in common with every other church in every age of Christendom, holds and teaches that men are not wholly sanctified at conversion. This universal consensus for centuries ought to be impressive upon even the boldest thinker. The carnal mind is not wholly removed by the heart renewings of regeneration. "Roots of bitterness springing up troubles us." The Scriptures dwell on this notable fact. Mr. Wesley's sermon on "Sin in Believers" gives the key-note to our church; our hymns and ritual respond to it. We behold it in our personal observation of others, and realize it in ourselves by a most painful consciousness.

Now, then, in this domain of remaining carnality, sanctification moves and works. That which begins with our birth into the kingdom goes on by the Spirit's gracious processes of enlightenment, quickening, reproving, striving and leading, until sooner or later we come to see our desperate needs and Christ's infinite provision. Then and there, at the end of our work, in self-despair and final surrender, grasping by faith the imminent readiness of Christ to "save to the uttermost," the heart believes unto righteousness, or sanctification.

This I would not call "the second blessing," but rather the culmination and finishing of the first. It is salvation completed. That which begins in the soul of the believer "the hour he first believes," goes forward in its consummation in the definite work of entire sanctification, and until this glorious end is reached grace has not wrought its perfect work in us.

With many of us this process is alas! too slow. Whereas we ought to be men we are too often but babes in Christ. Instead of strong meat we can only feed on milk. "Many are weak and sickly among us." We dwell in an unhealthy atmosphere, and drink in the poison of moral pestilence. Too often vitality declines most alarming, in some cases down to the last limit of life itself. In such we have all the evidences of spiritual morbidity—weakness, irritability, restlessness, fault-finding, etc. And yet these are God's children, his sick children, and on that account should make a most pathetic appeal for patience and nursing and treatment. This condition is serious and perplexing in the extreme. Why this mixed experience, this health and sickness, this retarded growth with all its abnormal manifestations? My answer would be, it is a result of the carnal mind which remains in the believer's heart, and which divides and weakens and hinders him. And so long as this condition continues the purposes of grace have not been accomplished in us. The one great work of salvation from sin—of salvation from all sin, "both original and actual"—has not been perfected in us. Now to present "a second blessing" as the remedy is (as I see it) to divert the mind from the real and vital facts of the situation. Let us rather urge these diseased, dwarfed and undeveloped children of God to "go on to perfection," "feeling confident of this very thing that he which hath begun a good work in them will perform it."

How, then, shall we present and urge the experience of sanctification to meet the condition just contemplated? I answer, present it as God's plan and God's work. It is part and parcel of the one great work of personal salvation. It is linked on to the Spirit work of regeneration and adoption. Distinct from each, yet inseparably joined to both, and without this final and full salvation, all will come to nought. It is God's work to sanctify, as it is his to regenerate and adopt. We can no more grow into the one than into the other. We may by growth and a devout use of the means go forward in the spiritual life, drawing nearer to the hour of complete deliverance. But let nothing mislead us here. There must come to every believer one supreme moment of infinite desire, and one transcendant act of faith in Christ for sanctification, to which the whole God-head responds, and in which there is assurance of a full salvation.

My heart's desire and prayer to God for my church, that I love better than I love my life, is that the God of peace may sanctify us wholly, and I pray God that our whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. JOSEPH S. KEY.

Choctaw Mission.

MR. EDITOR: Most heartily do I indorse Bro. A. D. Miller's appeal in behalf of our work among the Choctaw Indians in Mississippi. Too long did we delay beginning the work, and it would be sinful in the extreme for us to abandon it now. I am glad that the little tract of land is at length paid for, after so many appeals from Bro. Miller and Bro. Cammack. We need at least a thousand more acres of land. "For what?" asks some one with tremendous emphasis. In order to gather the Choctaws into a mission settlement, where they can be watched over and properly cared for by the missionary. The very land we now own was once allotted by the United States government agent to a Choctaw, from whose hands it passed for a trifle years ago. To-day some one is needed to stand between them and shrewd white people. The lands belonging to the Board of Missions, no mortgage or trust deed made by a tenant can bind the land or the buildings, and so homes will be ensured to these honest, virtuous people. It is the only way in which they can be properly cared for. Any other plan is a failure.

It is not to the best interests of the Choctaws, or of the whites, that the Choctaws should attend the churches belonging to the whites. Separate churches and separate schools are for best for all concerned. These Choctaws are honest and virtuous; not idolatrous, but very superstitious. They are suspicious, and slow to confide in anyone; but their confidence once gained, they are easily influenced.

Bro. Cammack did a fine work among them, and Bro. Ormond built on the foundation he had laid. We have now a thrifty, religious colony, which will slowly grow. Had we more land, the colony would grow faster. The Choctaws must see that we are thoroughly in earnest, and intend to continue the work so well begun. Tali-Chulok Church ought to be devoted exclusively to school purposes, and another building erected for a house of worship. In the meantime the salaries of Bro. Holland and his Choctaw assistant must be provided for. Can we not get enough Sunday-schools in our Conference to undertake this labor of love? Will not East and West End and South Side (Meridian) Sunday-schools devote their missionary contributions to this purpose? Will not Marion, Lockhart, Lauderdale, Brogan, Porterville, Chapel Hill, Scooba, Binnsville, Blair, DeKalb, Mt. Pleasant, Pleasant Ridge, Marvin, Daleville, Soule Chapel and Suqualena, Rose Hill, Paulding and Hopewell join in the good work? If the presiding elder and preachers in charge be willing, let us have a prompt response from these Sunday-schools through their superintendents or preachers. And let the Sunday-schools in the Braudon and Enterprise districts fall into line, and we will have no trouble in raising the needed amount. And nowhere can our missionary money be invested to better advantage. But if any Sunday-school is directing their missionary offerings to some other special object authorized by the law of our church, let us not divert the offerings to the Choctaw Mission. Every cent which can be had is needed in Mexico, Brazil, Cuba, China, Japan and Korea. I want to interest schools that are not already interested in special mission work.

Orphans' Day in North Mississippi.

The first Sunday in March, 1897, or as soon thereafter as practicable, is named as Orphans' Day throughout the North Mississippi Conference, in which presiding elders, preachers in charge of missions, circuits and stations are requested to present the Home to every congregation, Sunday-school and Epworth League.

Knowing that all our preachers and people are in full sympathy with this good cause, your North Mississippi Board have set apart the first Sunday in March, and Sundays following, in order to secure as much ready cash as possible by the time the Home is completed; and for the further reason that our Conference "named the first Sunday in April as Education Day," which we must all be sure to observe.

It affords us great pleasure to commend the good work that is being done by our gifted agent, Sister T. B. Clifford, of Water Valley.

We are glad to state that Bro. Clifford will visit different parts of the State in the interest of this good cause whenever he can leave his pastoral charge.

We have received in cash up to date from all sources in our Conference, $1,900. This includes the following report, which is our last for Orphans' Day, 1896:

Cornersville circuit, $2.10; Kosciusko station, $13.35; Ripley circuit, $2.70; Starkville circuit, $4.55; Elzey circuit, $7.20; Strong's circuit, $15; Potts' Camp circuit, $6.75; Batesville station, $5; Holly Springs station, $25; Black Hawk circuit, $15; A Good Woman, $2; Crawford circuit, $1.20; Oxford station, $25; Mrs. T. B. Malone, $2.50; Shaw's station, $8; Columbus station, $10; Sallis circuit (A Good Woman), $10; Pittsboro circuit, $5.45; Louisville circuit, $9; Ackerman circuit, $5; Senatobia station, $5; Lexington station, $5; Poplar Creek circuit, $5.65; Coffeeville circuit, $11; Waterford circuit, $2; Ira P. Beasley, $5; total, $209 95.

If we have omitted any charge, we will be obliged for corrections.

Brethren, let us make an earnest effort to bring the cause of the orphans before every congregation in our Conference, and give all our people an opportunity to contribute.

Mississippi Orphan's Home.

I want a little space in the ADVOCATE to call the attention of the friends of the Mississippi Orphans' Home to a matter pertinent to its welfare. Our treasurers have subscriptions from a number of you to the building fund that are unpaid. Can not you arrange to settle these amounts at once? The money is needed. The work on the building is already begun. All of the material for its construction is contracted for, and a large portion of it is already on the ground. Your trustees have made these contracts on these promises of yours to pay, and you must not fail us. Rev. J. A. Bowen, Water Valley, Miss., is the North Mississippi Conference treasurer; Rev. M. L Burton, Wesson, Miss., for the Mississippi Conference. Please write to these brethren at your earliest opportunity, and enclose a check in the letter. If you can not do this last, write anybow, and let them know when they may expect your remittance.

Selections.

In Sunday-School, 1863-4.

BY TOM SAWYER.

[The following clipping from a Tallahassee (Fla.) paper reached us through the kindness of a friend. We are sure our readers will be grateful to that friend for the privilege of its perusal. "Tom Sawyer" is no less a personage than the present treasurer of the State of Florida, Hon. C. B. Collins, who was born in Jackson, Miss., but lived from early boyhood until after the war in East Feliciana parish, La.—EDITOR.]

At no time during the war did the Methodists of old Manassas Church, in the hill country of East Feliciana, ever give up the regular gospel services, and for a wonder the Sunday-school flourished as it never did before or since. Many a passing Confederate stopped at the little church and heard words that comforted him during some trying hour in his after life, and who knows but when he met death upon some distant battlefield he was able to bless God for the little country church? Sometimes the seed fell upon good ground.

I want to tell you of one whom I "loved and lost" during those beautiful, yet dreadful days; one who laid his impress upon my young life, and whose name I can not yet mention without a quiver about the heart and a suspicion of moisture about the eye.

My home was not far from an immense fort erected by the Confederates upon a bluff where the great guns commanded the Mississippi river, and there, during the hot Summer of 1863, grim war unfolded its sublimest terrors. For many months the contending armies grappled and contested every hill, while the earth trembled 'neath the bellowing of mortars" and the booming thunder of gunboats on the river. All night, like fiery shooting stars, the great bombs would stream across the heavens, then fall with a mighty explosion on the fort. Outside we waited and listened with awe to the tremendous struggle, then we would turn our attention to the maimed and suffering fellows who were sent out to be cared for by the tender women of the Southland. It was in the ranks of the wounded that I found my lost Sunday-school teacher, and of him I speak to-day with reverence and affection. He came to us on crutches, and my first sight of him was when he slowly made his way up the aisle and modestly seated himself on the bench by my side. He was but a boy, not then out of his teens, and I thank God that he has never grown old unto this day. I think of him as a boy with the red stripes of an artilleryman upon his uniform, and I remember him still as a boy when sixteen months later I wiped the powder stains from his poor dead face and bore him away from his last battle.

I can hardly tell the story now because of the tide of emotion which rises up and floods my heart as I think of how we parted; but I thank God continually for the comforting knowledge that my boyhood friend was always ready.

When he came stooping up the aisle of that old church he hobbled right into my heart, and straightway I set him upon a pedestal and indulged in a species of hero worship, such as helps to throw a glamor about the years of boyhood. The next Sunday he was taken into church relationship and put in charge of a class of boys; then he captured all hearts, only to break them when he went away so suddenly and so tragically, nor need I hesitate to add, so heroically.

On other pages I have told the story of our everyday life: how we frolicked and sang, how we hunted and fished, and how we scented when the waves of war would sweep over us from time to time: but here I would dwell upon how, with glorious bass, he sang Uxbridge or Arlington: how in petition, childlike and humble, he would lead the prayers; how he discussed to our opening minds the stories and doctrines of the Bible: then how he sought by example and precept to teach us the ways to be both men and Christians. He came from Missouri, away up next to the Iowa line, and I shall never forget how his voice used to tremble as he prayed for his distant loved ones.

Only last November, at Indianapolis, I met a man from my teacher's old home, and in response to my inquiry about the loved ones of my friend, he said: "Scattered and gone, sir, God only knows where!" Yes, God knows.

It is not proper in these columns for me to tell of battle and sudden death, but it is well to know that even in the midst of awful war some of our boys preserved their Christian character, and, in fact, that those characters shone all the brighter from contrast with evil surroundings.

It was the fourteenth day of November, 1864, when I saw my hero for the last time. I had seen him in so many perilous places that I suppose he never thought much of the danger. He left me with a laugh, and I saw him whirl his saber in the air as if in mere wantonness of strength. I think it was the joy of battle which some writers tell us of. A little latter, where the earth was torn and trampled by the rushing squadrons, I found a poor, bleeding piece of clay, which I knew was the tenement where my friend dwelt; but to my agonizing cry there was no response.

The magnificent young soul had gone. I was only a boy then—a boy of fifteen—but from that moment I was to be a boy nevermore. From that time I can not bear a gloomy November day.

When the winds come down from the north with cold and mist; when they wail through the naked woods and boom along the river, I seem to see a dead face turned up to a pitying sky, while two sorrowing boys kneel by their dead teacher. I thank God that I knew him, and I know that I shall meet him again.

There is no fiction about this. It is only a sorrowful memory of one who lived and loved and died for his country.

There are still living many persons who recollect how we put the brave boy's body away, and how, as the clods rattled upon his coffin, great guns on the river were sounding his requiem, and the far-off roar of battle hushed the sound of the mourners. Just twenty years later I stood again by that grave, the sounds of war were all hushed, and only a joree was whistling its flute like song, while the cheerful voice of singing guineas came up from a neighboring barnyard; then I went on to the old church and knelt where I first met my boyhood friend.

NEEDED BLESSINGS

BY WILLIAM H. BURLEIGH.

We ask not that our path be always bright,
But for thy will to walk therein aright,
Therefore, O Lord, through all its devious way,
Will give us strength sufficient to our day—
For this, for this we pray.

Not for the fleeting joys that earth bestows,
Not for exemption from its many woes!
But that, come joy or woe, come good or ill,
With childlike faith we trust thy guidance still,
And do thy holy will.

Teach us, dear Lord, to find the latent good
That sorrow yields, when rightly understood;
And for the frequent joy that crowns our days
Help us with grateful hearts our hymns to raise,
Of thankfulness and praise.

Drouth Sufferers.

Permit me, through the columns of the dear old ADVOCATE, to state some facts concerning the drouth sufferers of Jackson parish. In December we took the census of our parish by wards. There was a committee of five from each ward to ascertain the true condition of our people. In Ward 2 there were 284 families asking aid, 158 families out of corn, while there were 218 families out of meat. There were 1,040 families in the parish asking help, while there were 717 families absolutely without anything in the way of provisions. Our hogs are dying by the hundreds of starvation, while our horses and cattle are being reduced to skin and bones. There are plenty of families all over the country who have no corn, no meat, no Winter clothing, no money, and no credit. These people are not beggars, but they are honest, hard working people; but mother earth, the source of all wealth, has failed to respond to our touch, and, therefore, there is a dearth all over the land.

Let agriculture fail, and the whole business superstructure goes down. Your pastures, railroads and cities become a howling waste. But with our farms at full blast, if your cities burn to ashes, they go up again like a mushroom before the embers are cool.

Now, we appeal to the charities of the public, and especially to our Methodist people, both in and out of the State, to lend us a helping hand, that we may again resow our farms, and provide the necessities of life for our household. Unless aid comes from some source, there is no telling the extent of the dire effects of this dreadful calamity. There have already been over 100 families forced to leave their homes, the most sacred spot to them on earth, and many more will be forced to go unless speedy and substantial aid be forthcoming.

We appeal to our preachers, our stewards, our Sabbath-school superintendents, and whoever will, to take collections and form relief committees in every neighborhood. We appeal to the ladies of the State for help in this, our sore time of need. Your sisters and their little children, our preachers and their families, all are in a destitute condition. We accept any and all donations of breadstuffs, meat, molasses, clothing, money, or anything else you may see fit to send. We can buy corn through our committee at 25 cents per bushel. Our shipping-point is Ruston, on the V., S. and P. R. R. Our chairman of the parish relief committee is N. R. Carroll, Vernon, Jackson parish, La. Any and all donations sent to Mr. Carroll, or to myself, will be faithfully distributed among our drouth sufferers.

Hoping our people will heed this call, and come to our relief, I am,

Fraternally, J. L. MOORE,

Steward of the church at Siloam, and recording steward of the Gansville circuit, Arcadia district, Louisiana Conference.

A Leaf from the Diary of Rev. Thomas Nixson.

BY REV. J. M. WEEMS.

In 1807 my father moved to Duck River, and settled in what was afterwards Mury county. There were but few white people living there, and we had but little preaching. My father was a local preacher, and preached as often as he could, and formed a few societies. In 1808 Joseph Oglesby came from the Nashville circuit, and held several two days' meetings among us. He said he was the "voice of one crying in the wilderness and preparing the way for others to follow." It was during these meetings that I was made to see myself a lost sinner. In the vain efforts to help myself, I made many resolutions, but broke them all, and was carried further away from hope by worldly companions.

In 1808 my uncle, John Cragg, was sent to Duck River, and Miles Harper was our presiding elder. We now had regular preaching, and many new societies, and the Duck River circuit was formed. I was again made conscious of my sins, but resisted the Holy Spirit. In 1810 "stuttering" John Lewis—sometimes called "Old Club foot"—was sent to our circuit. He was a "son of thunder," and, with the assistance of William Lewis, from the Henderson circuit, conducted some large and successful revivals.

On the night of the third of May William Lewis preached a very strong and impressive sermon, and I went to the altar resolved to give the remainder of my life to the service of God. I joined the church on the thirteenth, but was greatly disappointed because I did not find pardon as easily as I had expected. My sins seemed to increase in multitude and in magnitude until I felt there was no hope for me. On the eighteenth I went to a camp meeting near Columbia, where I obtained a hope that God would forgive my sins; but that hope soon passed away, and my distress and agony was so great I could not weep. On the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh they held a two days' meeting at Mt. Pisgah, near my father's home. I once more went to the altar, hoping God would show me mercy. It was at this time, and while pleading for salvation in Christ's name, I felt an indescribable sense of his love in my heart. But I was not looking for religion in this way. I expected to hear a voice, and then be compelled to leap and shout. Old Bro. Atkins, a local preacher, was kneeling by me, and he said, "Do you think God has converted your soul?" I hesitated a moment, and then said, "I think so!" The same powerful shock was repeated with an increase of evidence, which banished every doubt, and I said, "Yes; I know it!" I then looked around on the people, and they appeared more like angels than men, and my soul was filled with an ecstacy of joy and of peace I had never known before.

The meeting continued until two o'clock in the morning. We were on a high hill called Mt. Pisgah, and the moon, which was just rising, with the bright and beautiful stars, seemed to join with my soul in saying, "Praise ye the Lord!" From this moment I looked over Jordan, and saw the land of rest—the saints' eternal home—and not a cloud obscured the glorious vision. Oh, the joy, the peace, the glory that filled my regenerated soul! Truly, "old things had passed away; behold, all things had became new."

The next day I had to plough a young horse in a new ground, full of stumps and cane roots, and I expected to have a trying time; but nothing vexed or annoyed me, and as I was kept in perfect peace, the language of my heart was, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." This joyful state of mind continued for some time, and until I began to feel I was called to preach.

Honnoll vs. Mudge.

I am not one of the quill drivers, nor have I seen Dr. Mudge on "Divine Providence;" but without consulting him or any other uninspired writer, I have been able, from inspired premises, to reason out of the dilemma in which my old friend and brother, Jim Honnoll, finds himself; and while it may not satisfy him, yet, with your permission, I will give it for what it is worth, as follows:

1. That God is sovereign, and has all power and authority, is a Bible doctrine that must be admitted.

2. That man is a free agent, and chooses his own actions or selects his own course of conduct, is also a Bible doctrine that must be admitted.

3. These must be reconciled, for God is not the author of confusion.

4. This is done by recognizing the fact that neither God or any other intelligent being ever exerted all the power and authority which he possesses. This would make him a tyrant, worse than any parent, king, or military chieftain.

This is proven as follows: In Ezek. xxxiii, 11, we read: "As I live, saith . . . God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but would that the wicked turn from his way and live." Again: In II. Peter iii, 9, we read that the Lord "is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

Now, from these and other Scriptures we learn that God wills the salvation of all men.

It goes without proving that God is omnipotent, and has all power, and is, therefore, able to save all men.

Now, from these inspired premises one of two conclusions irresistibly follows: that all men will be saved, or God does not save men by the direct and immediate exercise of his power and authority. But as we know from the teaching of God's Word that all are not saved, therefore it follows that man is not saved by the immediate power of God, but by and through the agency of his church and the instrumentality of the gospel. And this is just what Jesus Christ taught when he said to his disciples, "Ye are the salt of the earth, the light of the world."

When God made man a free agent he then delegated to him power to choose his own actions; and if God had not done this, then no man could have been blameworthy or praiseworthy. If Jesus Christ himself had been fated—as some teach—to the course of conduct which he pursued, and could not have acted otherwise, then there could not be any merit—on his part—either in his life or death. Again: God is not glorified in the wicked. In the seventeenth chapter of John, Christ prays, not for the world, but for all believers; prays that God, the Father, will help all believers from the evil of the world; that he will sanctify them, and glorify, or bring them to salvation in heaven; and chief among the reasons he gives for this desire is in these words, "I am glorified in them," which, as I understand, is equal to saying: "The wicked world will not honor or glorify me if those who believe in me are not kept from the evil—sanctified and saved. I will have no glory at all."

God made man for his own glory. Man meets the end of his being only in glorifying or honoring his Creator, and in so doing is saved. The wicked and rebellious do not honor, but dishonor God, and are, therefore, doomed by failing to meet the end of their being.

Brethren, it grieves me to hear good, intelligent, but mistaken men degrading themselves, and thereby dishonoring God by such expressions as, "I am a poor, helpless worm of the dust." Who authorized any man to call me a worm of the dust? Not the Bible, I am sure. I am not such. No. I am an intelligent, free moral agent, the offspring of my divine Father, made in his image, endowed with the supreme attributes or faculties of intellect, sensibility and will which differentiate me from and elevate me above all earthly creatures, and enable me to meet the end of my being by voluntarily living a life that will honor or glorify my Creator, and by his grace, thus given me, I will do it, and, in so doing, "work out my salvation."

I don't want to hear men say, "I am an humble instrument in the hands of God." I am not an instrument in the hands of God. No, God don't shove me hither and thither, back and forth, like a carpenter does a jackplain or hand-saw. No, I am an intelligent, responsible agent, commissioned and sent by my own heavenly Father to act for and with him in saving my fellows, and I rejoice to do it to his honor and glory.

Brethren, if you would save man, show him his dignity and responsibility, and put him on his honor.

To the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference.

We come now to the closing months of another fiscal year. This year was entered upon with much enthusiasm by the women of Southern Methodism, as they inscribed upon their banner 100,000 members and $100,000. North Mississippi shared this enthusiasm and assumed its quota of members and money. How nearly we have reached our mark will transpire within a few months, and we will prove to ourselves and to God just how deep our enthusiasm really was and how strong our purpose to do our part. Believing that this show of enthusiasm, having its source in hearts full of love to God and thoroughly awake to the necessities of the hour, I would call upon the women of North Mississippi for an earnest effort towards the consummation of the work which we so heartily entered upon in the beginning of the year. To rightly understand how much remains to be done, it is necessary to note what has been accomplished up to this time. There has been received into our treasury since the beginning of the year $2,230.41. This lacks something over $1,000 of reaching the amount raised last year, and when we add to this the $1,000 extra we proposed to raise as our share of the $100,000, we have something over $2,000 to be collected and remitted to our Conference treasurer during the fourth quarter. Let every auxiliary treasurer feel the weight of responsibility that rests upon her, and make an earnest effort to collect every cent for dues and other objects that can possibly be collected. Every dollar thus collected will increase the sum total and bring us nearer the desired amount. Let the auxiliaries meet every dollar of pledges, both for the general pledge fund and for the special work, which may have been undertaken, either by auxiliaries or in co-operation with the societies of the district.

Our Conference corresponding secretary reports 544 new members. This, my sisters, is but a little over one-half of the members we proposed to gain during the year. You very readily see what a great work must be done along this line during the fourth quarter. Make prayerful, earnest effort to enlist for this great cause some of the many around us who have no part nor lot in it. Every member of the Missionary Society in North Mississippi could surely get one new member during the next month were she determined to do it. Sisters, we must do it.

Our Conference Society has undertaken great things for God this year, in the support, by auxiliaries or districts, of special work in our foreign fields. Recent letters from Miss Haygood give us the following information concerning these specials in China, which should rejoice the hearts of those who have projected them and encourage them to persevere in these undertakings. Miss Haygood says: "We have been so happy as to secure as Bible woman to be especially associated with Mrs. Burke in work—Mrs. Kive, one of the best of our native Christian women. She is a widow, nearly fifty years old, who has had much experience in Christian work, and is an earnest, devout woman. She entered upon her duties last week. Mrs. Burke and I think best that she should be assigned to the Tupelo Auxiliary." Mrs. Burke also writes of her: "I have a new Bible woman, in whom we all have the utmost confidence. Her name is Mrs. Kive. She is my Bible woman—your Bible woman. I am so happy. I will write you more about her. I just wanted to let the sisters know their money was being used as they desired. I should have included the brethren too, for they contributed liberally that Sabbath night." Those who attended the last annual meeting in Tupelo will remember that Sister Burke was there when the collection was taken for this Bible woman. How fortunate that she should enjoy the help secured by Tupelo's contribution. Miss Haygood further writes: "We are trying to make arrangements for a very valuable young woman, an earnest, intelligent Christian, who was educated in Clopton School, on the Daisy Fant Scholarship, to come to Sung Kiang as Mrs. Kive's assistant. If we succeed, we wish to assign her for support to the McGehee's Chapel Auxiliary. In that case I will send you a postal and write to Mrs. Coleman. The Grenada Collegiate Institute Scholarship, also the Como Auxiliary Scholarship and the Holly Springs Scholarship, will be placed in the Girl's Boarding School, Soochow. Miss Pyles will write to the different auxiliaries about them." Mrs. Trueheart also writes of the Bible woman to be supported by the Muldon Auxiliary: "I have had correspondence with Mrs. W. S. Lenoir at Muldon about the M. L. Palne Bible woman, and really rejoice that you selected Mexico, for at Saltillo a very valuable woman has devoted herself to the work of a Bible woman under Miss Leila Roberts. There are some other specials, Bible women and Hospital Buds, which will be arranged for as soon as is possible. Our Conference Society has had the gift the past quarter of another day-school, $150 a year, from Mrs. J. T. Lay, of Winona, to be named 'The Rebekah Moore Day School,' in honor of her sainted mother. We certainly appreciate the gift, and pray God's blessings upon the giver. Oh, that more of our members who have been blessed of God with ample means would undertake work for him in foreign lands."

Sisters, much commendation is due you who have so nobly undertaken to supply these needed helpers for our workers in foreign fields, and through your scholarships begin a training which will in after years yield other workers for our Master. Your plans are taking definite shape, and those who are thus aided have cause for much rejoicing. Be faithful to what you have undertaken. Let not one woman fail to do her full part, so that at the closing of this fourth quarter we can all rejoice together as we see our plans fully realized and know our Lord's cause is moving forward.

Parsonage and Home Mission Societies.

In a revolving chain, like a Methodist Conference, there ought not to be a want to which every link in the chain is not ready to respond. The following are some of "many infallible proofs" of the need of a Parsonage and Home Mission Society in the Mississippi Conference:

Roxie, Miss., Jan. 13, 1897.

Ex. Com. W. P. and H. M. Society—

MY DEAR SISTERS: I am here on this charge by order of the Conference. I have a wife and four small children. We have no parsonage. I want to organize the women of the charge into a Parsonage and Home Mission Society. Give us what help you can in the way of literature, etc. Let me hear from you at once.

Yours in Christ,

R. A. BRELAND.

The presiding elder of that district writes:

Gloster, Miss., Jan. 12, 1897.

MY DEAR SISTERS: I am glad you are interested in the P. and H. Mission work, and are enlisting others. We are struggling to pay for this district parsonage in which we are to live. Bro. Breland, at Roxie, has been hardly able to find a house to put his family in; has rented a house his salary will scarcely enable him to pay for. Other places need parsonages. I will most gladly encourage the work you have in hand in every practicable way. Wishing you divinely assured success, I am,

Yours in Christ,

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT

In a single town in the Mississippi Conference (Meridian) more than $800 a year is paid out for rent of parsonages. What a saving to the church will be an investment in Parsonage and Home Societies! It is wise to await the opportune moment for organizing any society. There are often reasons why a church is not ready to assume other burdens. There is a church or parsonage to build or pay for often; or the work of the P. and H. Mission Society is not known. It is well to wait until the time is ripe, but meanwhile every effort may be used to lay the foundation and bring about the "fullness of time" when the structure may be raised. Though societies are responding by organizing in many charges, we can hardly afford to wait the slow process of growth before making the effort to meet the need of homes that already exist in the Mississippi Conference. It happens always that the preacher who needs the house is the preacher who needs the salary (and herein consists the hardship), while the man who is well able to rent a house is already abundantly supplied.

We call attention of every preacher to the following plan that will build at least two parsonages every year, and greatly aid the P. and H. M. Society in its regular channel of work:

1. Collect (and send to Mrs. T. B. Holloman, Natchez) for the Parsonage Fund an average of not less than $5 for every charge in the Mississippi Conference. This will be a quick and satisfactory solution of the problem with which we are confronted to-day.

2. Call attention to the P. and H. M. number of the Nashville Advocate, and appoint an agent for Our Homes in every charge, who will see that literature is supplied.

3. Where practicable, organize P. and H. M. Societies, either in connection with the Wesleyan Aid Societies, or separately.

4. Organize the children of the church into Juvenile P. and H. M. Societies. The church that fails to enlist the activities of childhood in laudable service will soon find her strong reserve corps gone over to the enemy, and enrolled in the ranks of the world.

5. Every Wesleyan Aid Society in the Conference, knowing this need for preachers' homes, will count it a privilege to forward a contribution for the Parsonage Fund to Mrs. T. B. Holloman, Natchez. We must depend greatly on the preacher in charge to aid us in enlisting the idle bands of that large majority of women who have not taken any part in the working force of the church. We must depend in large measure on the minister himself to do much of the work of organizing that lies so near at hand to him, while we are separated by so many miles of obstacles, and, consequently, debarred from personal supervision. To make these yet unutilized resources, and concentrate our scattered forces on a single point, will accomplish much effective work, and result in blessing not alone to those who give, but to many a preacher's home where not the good wife must need be "careful and troubled over many things," and the least of which is the burden of finding a roof over their heads, that is added to her husband's cares.

Selections.

The Christ of To-Day.

Jesus of Nazareth is something more than the Christ of history, a blessed memory; or the Christ of prophecy—a sublime hope: He is the Christ of to-day, and of every day, a living reality in our lives, a very present help in time of need. Faith lays hold upon him as One who is ever with us in the church, in the household, and in the world. He is the close companion of our daily lives. We walk the hard hill-sides of life with burning hearts because he bears us company. We pass through valleys or death shades with fearless step, led by his infinite hand. In the glory of his presence toil and pain are transfigured. There is no break in our trustful intimacy. No shadow of possible change comes on our joyful fellowship.—James Campbell.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, of this city, last week challenged Dwight Moody to a debate upon the merits of Christianity. Mr. Moody declined on the ground that his mind was already made up in regard to the merits of Christ, because, as he writes, "I know what Jesus has done for me during the last forty years since I first trusted him." He urged also that "the times call for action, not discussion. Hundreds and thousands of men and women are dropping into drunkards' graves every year right here in New York. Now let us all join hands and try to save them. I will try to reach them with the gospel.... If there is any man in infidelity, let your members likewise put it into practice." Mr. Moody is right. The test he proposes is the true one. He hopes his example may prove contagious, and that the churches will engage in earnest endeavor in the spirit of Christ, to make known to men by every possible and reputable way the Lord's work, and words of our Lord and Savior. Let the endeavor be to warn men the warnings and the reproofs of the Immanuel as well as his gracious invitations.—Christian Intelligencer.

Only those of truly heroic mould can fully comprehend or appreciate heroic souls; only the great and noble of purpose can fully know great souls who have wrought their noble purposes into actions and words of flame.—Exchange.

If we would have anything for benefit we must earn it, and earn it become shrewd, inventive, ingenious, active, enterprising.

To Whom it May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mnl-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,

FROM THE WORK.

Laura L Chevalier, Superintendent Sunday-school, Vidalia, La., Feb. 1, 1897: "The first Quarterly Conference convened at Vidalia, Jan. 24 1897. Rev. F. White, P E, in the chair; Rev. T. B McClendon, P C., secretary. Rev. B. F. White, P E, held services in the morning at eleven o'clock, and administered the sacrament; Sunday-school in the evening at three o'clock. New Year opened with a deeper interest in the church and Sunday-school. The Sunday law is enforced; saloons closed. God is with us."

Rev. P. E. Duncan, Coldwater, Miss., Jan. 29, 1897: "Our work on Coldwater and Hernando is coming up with good promise. We recently captured the preacher and family up in their arrival, and the process still continues. Better people to their preacher and more loyal band of Methodists I don't believe can be found in the North Mississippi Conference. My predecessors, Bros. Hargrove and Cunningham, did faithful and efficient work, and are held in the highest esteem by the people. Have organized in the Conference two Epworth Leagues, which are growing in interest with our young people. The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE is received with interest here. I hope to see its circulation much increased. Pray for us, that He who must give the increase will bless us a rich harvest of souls during the year."

Rev. A. D Miller, Hermanville, Miss., Jan. 28: "We were returned back on the Hermanville circuit for the second year with many expressions of satisfaction and good-will, and have since received many tokens of appreciation from the good people in and around Hermanville, for all of which we are very thankful, and pray God's richest blessings upon them all—some of them were members of other churches, and some not members of any church at all. God bless them, one and all. But one dear lady certainly made our home happy on Christmas Eve morning, when she sent her colored porter with a basket well filled with many good things. The basket contained presents for all the family, from the least to the greatest. Its value was about $7. Then one after another came, until we were well supplied for not only Christmas, but for two or three weeks. So you see, Mr. Editor, the lines have fallen unto us in pleasant places and we have a good heritage. May God bless them and all the good people with a very happy and prosperous year in every way, and may I show my appreciation to God and this good people by a faithful year's work for the upbuilding of the church and the salvation of sinners. Pray for me and my work."

Rev. J. M Huggin, Pittsboro, Miss., Jan. 28, 1897: "The people of the Pittsboro circuit have shown me much kindness since my return to the charge. Substantial tokens of appreciation have come to the parsonage from Pittsboro and Big Creek. These things encourage us, and make us feel like doing better work for them than we have done in the past. We are hoping to be able to build a new church at Pittsboro during this year, though we have lost some valuable members of that church since Conference. The outlook for a good year, I think, is encouraging. Rev. J M Hampton, a superannuated member of our Conference, lives in less than a mile of the parsonage. He and his family have been true friends to the pastor and his family. Bro. Hampton and his faithful wife will in a few days celebrate the sixteenth anniversary of their wedded life. About fifty years of this time have they spent in their present home. They have a very warm place in the hearts of the people of this section. May the Lord bless you and your excellent paper!"

Rev. R. L. Phillips, P. C., Waynesboro, Miss., Jan. 29, 1897: "Our first Quarterly Conference was held at Winchester, Jan. 16, every church being represented but one. Bro. Carley was with us, but returned home immediately after Conference suffering with la grippe. The start with these brethren is encouraging. The questions of missions, church literature, etc., were brought before the Conference, and the importance of supporting the institutions of the church was emphasized. The administrative machinery of our district is in excellent condition: no serious jars or eruptions; therefore, we expect great things of the Lord. We find the people of Waynesboro and surrounding country to be zealous, progressive and loyal—indeed, they have given us many noble sons of Methodism; among others the immortal West and Little. Praise the Lord for a liberal-minded people! Excelsior! Bro. C H Ellis and Sister Nettie Brown have just been with us in a glorious meeting at New Hope. The Lord was with us in power to save. Results: 12 or 15 conversions and sanctifications, notwithstanding much prevailing sickness and inclement weather. Success to the ADVOCATE!"

Rev. G. S. Morehead, Chapel Hill charge, Miss., Jan 27, 1897: "We are progressing very well here, I think; considering the hard times, financially. We are taking up our Conference collections in subscriptions, or in any way that we can get them. I wish that we could get our Conference collections so that they would be worth one hundred cents on the dollar. Then we would have a glorious and happy people. I am in hopes that we will begin to adopt and manipulate plans so we shall be able to meet the demands of our church. I was visiting awhile back on my charge, and was taking up my collections. Met one of our members, and asked him to help me. He told me if he had anything left after paying his expenses, he would help me. I thought of the Mosaic law, that we should bring in the first fruits of the field, firstlings of the flock, every year unto the Lord for an offering of sacrifice. How he was erring from the path of duty! Our efficient presiding elder is waking up things in his district. He is a man of God in every sense of the word—loyal to his church, to his people and to his God. Oh, how time passes now! When I was a boy it looked like Xmas would never come; but since I have become a man it doesn't take a year long to roll by with her mighty wings of time. While I have health and strength I want to do all the good that I can while tabernacling here in this tenement of clay below. We have a nice work here. The people are kind and generous in their dispositions and ways, and extended doors are everywhere to their pastor. Thank God for Christian people! We have a people that are loyal to our church in their orthodox vows. Some are very liberal of their means to the church, and respond when called upon. Mr. Editor, we want you with us this Summer, if you can possibly come. We are anticipating a visit from our beloved Bro. Bachman this Summer. May God bless all the editors of our different church papers! I pray God that we can get more subscribers to our Conference papers this year than ever before. Success to you, Dr. Black. I will try and send you in a goodly number of subscribers this year. I desire all your prayers."

SARDIS, MISS.

We are in the midst of a severe blizzard for this latitude. This is Monday night, Jan. 25, and the winds have been blowing from the north since Sunday about eleven A. M. We went to the church without overcoats, but needed them before we got back. By dark it was sleeting, and the morning brought a slight snow, and the wind has been from the north all day; so tonight is bitter cold. As night came on I began to think of the comfort of all dependent on me for a warm place for the coming awful night. Our young presiding elder makes all his appointments. The thermometer may run over at the top and out at the bottom, but on he goes; did not miss an appointment even last Summer, and at the late meeting of the district stewards they raised his assessment from one thousand to eleven hundred and fifty dollars.

I believe all the preachers of this district (Sardis) are in place and settling down to hard work, with the exception of R. I. Allen, who has been quite ill since Conference; but I understand he is improving, and will soon change his pos office from Winona to Pleasant Hill, Miss. We give thanks that this good man's life has been spared. The people of Pleasant Hill may expect good work from Allen. He is a steady, strong puller. Bro. Kline, at Nesbit, is getting off well, and he and people are well pleased. First thing he did was to ceil the parsonage, and well he did. Strange how indifferent some preachers are as to the condition of the parsonage. Jacobs, at Arkahutla, is tried and true. Massey, at Longtown, is drawing the good people to him, and inspiring them to complete the parsonage. Young is at Pleasant Grove for the fourth year. He has served three charges and received his twelfth appointment. Well may he be called the quadrennial mover. J. R. D. King, at Cockrum, is a man with large capacity for both mental and physical labor, and he gives his people the benefit of it. Bro. Burt and Tyro seem to be well pleased. C. P. Moss is at Eureka for the second year. The people wanted him back—a good sign. Bro. Wilson is at Burgess—our only mission. May his faith fail not! Dr. H. T. Gaines will break the bread of life to the dying congregations of Courtland. Sinners are converted under his ministry. The sweet-spirited Harrison is again with the good people of Batesville and Wesley Chapel. He preaches a gospel rich enough to fatten the leanest. R. O. Brown and Como seem to be feasting in each other's love, and Bros. J. W Ball, at Senatobia, and Perry Duncan, at Cold Water and Hernando, are astonished at the continuous stream of good things that flow to the parsonage, and the kind things the people say about their preaching. This scribe is trying to behave himself to that extent that this good people will continue to endure him for two more years. Their many acts of kindness, words and deeds of love can not be detailed in a letter like this. The parsonage wears a new suit of gray, with green and drab trimming. May the Lord give us a great year!

W. S. SHIPMAN.

Your local doctor may be a good old man, but you shudder when he suggests local treatment for the weakness and diseases peculiar to women. These things are generally unnecessary, but the doctor doesn't know it. He is perfectly honest, but he is behind the times. He does the best he can, no doubt, but his best is not good enough. He is not a specialist. He is a general practitioner, worried and bothered and hurried in giving attention to a thousand and one different ailments. Many busy physicians do not take the time to find out what is really the matter with their patients. Many a woman has been continuously treated for a disease she did not have, because frequently the symptoms of diseases peculiarly feminine appear to be the same as those of other disorders.

Every invalid woman may have the services of a regularly graduated, experienced and skilled specialist in the treatment of diseases of women if she will write to Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. Over thirty years ago Dr. Pierce invented his "Favorite Prescription," for the treatment of the diseases of women. It has had a record of thirty years of success, and to-day more of it is sold by druggists than all other medicines for women combined. Its effect is immediately perceptible. It is quick to stop the dragging, bearing-down feeling and other torturing pains. It soothes inflammation, promotes regularity, and stops debilitating drains on the system.

The physiology of women, in health and disease, related in Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. A copy free for 21 one-cent stamps to pay postage only. Cloth-bound 31 cents.

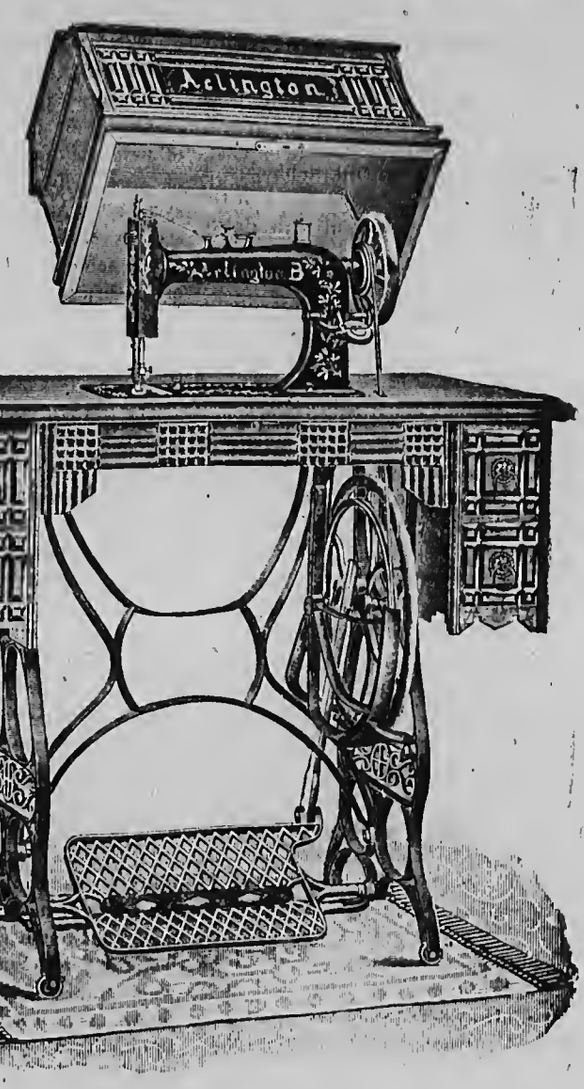
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.



A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachment free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $20 50, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '98, and send us $18.50 additional, and we will send you the machine.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

"Nor deem the irrevocable past
As wholly wasted, wholly vain,
If rising on its wreck at last
To something nobler we attain."

If those who see most of you do not regard you as a Christian, it is very likely that you are not.

It takes very little ink to blacken a cistern of water. Just so a little discontent fills the soul with darkness.

The drudgery of daily life should be regarded as a gymnasium for the development of the higher powers of our nature.

Never mind about to morrow's temptations and tribulations. Give attention to those of to-day. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

With many readers brilliancy of style passes for affluence of thought; they mistake buttercups in the grass for immeasurable gold mines underground.—H. W. Longfellow.

One of the most farcical things imaginable is for a man to pray to be delivered from temptation when he is regularly day by day placing himself voluntarily in the way of temptation.

Storms are furious while they last, but they never last long, and they are always followed by sunshine. This is true of other storms than those which belong to the realm of meteorology.

One of the greatest problems of the church at the present time is how to utilize the vast amount of talent that is either lying dormant or is frittered away in worse than useless activities.

Some preachers have a prodigious capacity for misunderstanding very plain words. The command of our Savior, "Feed my sheep," they understand to mean, "Beat my sheep." It would be well for all such to study the dictionary.

One hornet, in good fighting trim, can demoralize a camp meeting, with a Spurgeon for a preacher; but that would not argue that a hornet is wise, or big or useful. So, many a disagreeable person can hurt a church by poisonous talk, without being of any account.—Baptist Standard.

Matters do not stand with any of us as they did a year ago. Our life has grown richer or poorer, deeper or shallower; we are better or worse; more under the rule of truth and right, or less. God is where he was. We have changed; we have come nearer to him by the rising quality of our life, or we have gone away from him by sinking into lower habits and under the dominion of lower principles.—The Pulpit.

Unscientific Temperance Instruction.

Through the courtesy of the gifted author, Mrs. W. Holbrook McHenry, State Superintendent of Scientific Instruction of the Louisiana Woman's Christian Temperance Union, there lies upon our table a copy of a neat pamphlet of twenty-odd pages entitled, "Historical and Scientific Aspects of the Temperance Question. An Address to the Teachers and Temperance Unions of Louisiana."

In common with forty other States and all the Territories, Louisiana has a law requiring that scientific temperance shall be taught to all the pupils of all the public schools of the State. This law was enacted in 1888. In order that our readers may know exactly what the law is we quote the first section entire:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, That in addition to the branches in which instruction is now given in the public schools instruction shall also be given as to the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics and special instruction as to their effects upon the human system, in connection with the several divisions of the subject of relative physiology and hygiene, and such subjects shall be taught as regularly as other branches are taught in said schools. Such instruction shall be given orally from a text-book in the hand of the teacher to pupils who are not able to read, and shall be given by the use of text-books in the hands of the pupils in the case of those who are able to read, and such instruction shall be given as aforesaid to all pupils in all public schools in the State to all the grades until completed in the high schools.

Another section makes it the duty of School Boards to see that text-books on physiology and hygiene that are in harmony with the law shall be used in all the schools. The law also requires that all teachers in the public schools shall pass "a satisfactory examination in the study of the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics and of their effects upon the human system." Another requirement of the law is that every teacher in the public schools shall file a certificate of faithful compliance with the law as a prerequisite to the receiving of any "remuneration for services rendered in that capacity."

The law is a good one, but Mrs. McHenry shows that to a large extent it is a dead letter. Some School Boards ignore the law. In some of the public schools text-books are in use which teach that alcoholic beverages used in moderation "promote digestion," and are not injurious; that "alcohol is a food, a source of strength and nourishment, that it keeps up the animal heat and in some degree prevents the waste of tissue." Ranker hygienic heresy can not be conceived of. We quote from our author as follows:

"Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson says, 'Alcohol can not by any ingenuity of excuse be classed amongst the foods of man.'" . . . . "The renowned French experimenters, Lallemand, Perrin and Duroy say, 'Alcohol when taken into the stomach is treated as an intruder and climinated as quickly as possible.'" . . . . "Dr. Thomas Small, of Columbia College, says: "Alcohol is a poison, over at war with man's nature, and in all its forms and degrees of strength produces irritation of the stomach, which is likely to result in ulceration, mortification and a thickening and induration of the coats. No one who indulges habitually in the use of wine or more ardent spirits posesses a healthy stomach.'" . . . . "Statistics carefully gathered from the hospitals of St. Petersburg, Paris, London and New York show that nearly one-half of the insanity of the world is caused directly by intemperance, and two-thirds of the idiots and epileptics are the children of drunken parents."

The work is a strong appeal in favor of the enforcement of the law according to the obvious intent of the framers. We hope it will bear much fruit. Certainly this is a matter that merits the attention of the public. All patrons of the public schools and good citizens generally should do whatever lies in their power to bring about a reform at this point. The value of proper scientific instruction in regard to the effects of alcohol can hardly be overestimated, while on the other hand we can scarcely conceive of a greater calamity to a State than to have such pernicious falsehood taught to its youth in the name of science. A bountiful harvest of drunkards will be the inevitable result of such a sowing.

"Painful and Pitiful."

MR. EDITOR: I hope the admirable article by Dr. Bigham, with the above title, will have a careful and wide reading. It lays bare the meagreness of our seeming obligation to the spiritual and moral well-being of the negroes among us. We can not live on the splendid history of ante-bellum days. Our fathers wrought nobly, but what are we doing? No true Christian can read the forceful and honest words of Dr. Bigham without having his heart stirred to the depths. I suggest that every reader of the ADVOCATE give that article a re-reading.

Fraternally,

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

Our Missionary Debt.

Again we call attention to our subscription list for the payment of our missionary debt. We deem it proper to say that our course in starting this list has the full and hearty approbation of our Missionary Secretary, Dr. Morrison. Moreover, we suppose there is hardly a single member of the M. E. Church, South, who does not favor the payment of the debt. Certainly no Christian can favor repudiation on the part of the church. But good wishes have no monetary value. They must be transmuted into something more substantial in order to acquire debt-paying qualities. If the debt is ever to be paid, why not now? And why should not every single reader of the ADVOCATE bear his part? We are in receipt of a very encouraging letter from a pastor in one of the patronizing Conferences. He says that the ADVOCATE is creating debt-paying sentiment in his charge, which will be heard from in the near future. We invite the co-operation of all our pastors in this matter. If they will use their influence in any way that seems to them best to enlist our people in this movement, Mississippi and Louisiana can set a noble example to the whole church. We firmly believe that this debt will be paid within less than two years from this date, and we believe that our patronizing territory will do its part of the good work. Brother, how much will you give?

"What Will the Harvest Be?"

The church of to-day is sowing seed from which she will reap a direful harvest in the not distant future. We refer to the non-church-going habits of the rising generation. Formerly parents carried their children to church. Now, if a child attends Sabbath-school, that is all that is expected of him in the way of church-going. Children are not required to go to church, and they do not go. Of course, there are exceptions, but that this is getting to be the rule we suppose will not be denied. A greater folly it is hard to conceive of. The habits of youth are likely to be the habits of mature life.

Persons who during childhood and youth have not been accustomed to attend church will not easily form the habit when they have reached maturity. As things are now going, the church attendance of the next generation promises to be smaller than at present. Let parents reflect. Let pastors sound the alarm. Let a reform begin at once. Bring the children to church. Train them up to the habit of regular attendance upon the services of the sanctuary until they have reached manhood's estate, and it will be "second nature" for them to continue to attend.

Solid Petroleum.

M. P. D'Houmy, a French naval engineer, has been experimenting for years with a view of converting petroleum into a solid substance which can be used as a fuel. It is authoritatively announced that his experiments have been crowned with entire success. The substance produced is very hard, easily combustible, but non-explosive, and produces no smoke, no odor and almost no ashes. Moreover, it is waterproof. As it takes far less space than coal, it will be very valuable at sea on that account. Then, since it is not liable to evaporation and is non-explosive, it will, of course, be infinitely preferable to liquid petroleum as fuel on shipboard. For these reasons, and also on account of its comparative inexpensiveness, it is hailed by the naval world as a genuine bonanza.

Let the Law Be Enforced.

A few years since Congress passed a law requiring railroad companies to equip all their cars with automatic brakes and couplers, the purpose of the law being to reduce the number of casualities among employees. The railroads were given until January, '98, to make the change. It is now less than a year until the time expires, and yet a large percentage of the roads have not made a beginning in the direction of conformity to the law. These delinquent roads now come before Congress asking for another five years' extension, on the ground that it will be inconvenient and expensive for them to provide these appliances within a few months. Congress should pay no attention to such a plea. If the time is short, the railroads themselves are to blame. They have had four years already. The law was enacted by an overwhelming majority of both Houses of Congress. Both the great parties have placed themselves on record in favor of the law. Let the law be rigidly enforced. When human life is at stake, a few paltry dollars should not be taken into the account.

Individual Work.

While there is a great deal of religious work that can be done only through the combined effort of many individuals, through the agency of churches and societies, yet nothing can take the place of personal work. Each Christian has certain private duties which can not be discharged by others. Every man has his own personality, and should make it tell for the right. Truly has it been said that "the greatest works that have been done have been done by the ones." The Protestant Reformation resulted from the courage and efforts of one man, Martin Luther. "No learned society discovered America, but one man, Columbus. No confederate nations rescued Scotland from political and ecclesiastical enemies, but one man, Knox. By one man, Howard, our prisons were purified. By one woman, Miss Nightingale, our disgraceful nursing system was reformed." He who has but a single talent may honor God with it, and be a blessing to his fellow-men.

A New Book.

PASTORAL SKETCHES. By Rev. B. Carradine, D D. Louisville, Ky.: Kentucky Methodist Publishing Co. 1896. Price, $1.

The above-named work is a 12 mo. of 317 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, and well printed on good paper. It contains a very accurate portrait of the distinguished author. It is divided into twenty chapters, under the following headings: Reminiscenses of Certain Preachers, Baptismal Incidents, The Interrupted Marriage Ceremony, The Indefinitely Postponed Marriage, Some Funeral Scenes, The Choir, Street Preaching, A Remarkable Missionary, Certain Expressions and Pronunciations in Pulpit and Pew, How Preachers Are "Taken In," The Conference Letter, The Conference Call, A Martyr, Guy, Little Jack, Emma C., Professor S., A Photograph of a Class of Conference Undergraduates, The Sickness of Zionne, The Annual Conference.

From a literary standpoint the author is here at his best, the task assumed being of such a nature as to bring into play his natural vivacity and brightness, his wit, humor, and pathos. There is not a dull line in the book from beginning to end. The spirit and purpose of the work we can best present by the following quotation from the preface:

"This book was written with a view to mental rest and relaxation. The author had not the time nor the means to go to the mountains or seashore for a season of recuperation, and so wrote this volume. . . . As he wrote, his eyes were often wet with tears, and just as frequently the smiles would play about the mouth over the facts and fancies that flowed from his pen. But it was not simply to elicit smiles and tears from himself or others that the volume was written. These are only means to an end, or, more truly speaking, the gilt on the sword, or the paint and trimmings of the chariot. The reader can not fail to see that under the pathos and humor of the book follies are punctured, formality assailed, sin exposed, truth exalted, and deep spiritual lessons inculcated. The book is a transcript of human character, a description of a part of the life-procession that is seen moving in the ecclesiastical world, or that is beheld from the church by the ministerial eye."

NOTES.

The postoffice address of Rev. T. S. Randle and family is Dry Creek, La.

***

Rev. Joel T. Daves, of the North Georgia Conference, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, died in Atlanta on the fifth.

***

Rev. J. W. Raper, of the North Mississippi Conference, has been ill for several weeks, but is now on the road to recovery.

***

Dr. J. T. Sawyer was unable to fill his appointments last Sunday on account of an attack of la grippe. He is now convalescent.

***

Bishop McCabe preached last Sunday morning at St. Charles Avenue M. E. Church, and in the afternoon at the Y. M. C. A. Hall.

***

Dr. J. H. Dye has resigned the presidency of Galloway Female College, and the vacancy has been filled by the election of Dr. C. C. Goeden.

***

Rev. H. W. May, of the Louisiana Conference, has had a good deal of sickness in his family since Conference. The sick are now convalescent. His address is Greenwood, La.

***

The unanimity with which the American press speaks in advocacy of the arbitration treaty is remarkable. So far as our observation goes, there are very few dissenting voices.

***

Mrs. Johnson, widow of the late Dr. H. F. Johnson, of the Mississippi Conference, is in the city and will remain several months with her daughter, Mrs. Junius Hart. Her address is 1543 Calhoun street.

***

Bishop Galloway delivered a very interesting lecture at Water Valley, on the fourth, on "Mississippi: Her Yesterday, To-day, and To-morrow." The lecture was delivered under the auspices of the Epworth Leagues of the city.

***

We regret to learn that Rev. B. F. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, is quite sick with la grippe. When we last heard from him he was slightly improved, though still very feeble. Let the prayers of the brethren go up for his recovery.

Pingree, the celebrated mayor of Detroit, Michigan, has been elected governor of that State. He insists upon holding his office. Legal proceedings were instituted a short time since to oust him from the mayoralty, but the case ended in failure, the State Supreme Court deciding that there was no law prohibiting him from holding the two positions. If Pingree has as much reputation in the gubernatorial chair as he has done in the Christian office, he may get slated for the presidency.

Rev. T. B. Clifford, of the Central Mississippi Conference, has a lecture which he has delivered several times, entitled, "Methodism: Its Past, Present, and Future." Bro. Clifford was born and reared under the shadow of the great university of Oxford, England, where Wesley began the work which immortalized his name. He was an ardent Methodist and an enthusiastic Leaguer. His lecture is highly spoken of. We suggest that the Epworth Leagues in different localities invite him to do a good thing for themselves. We are corresponding with Bro. Clifford with a view to securing his services. His address is Water Valley, Miss.

It was a quiet and happy couple left on the train for Jackson and Natchez, where they will spend a few days visiting friends, and then proceed to Waxahatchie, their future home. We commend our Texas friend upon his success in winning the heart and hand of one so fair and lovely.

The committee of inauguration arrangements at Washington has made it be known that they propose to spend $50,000 for the ball. The Christian Advocate contained the following sentiment: "It is unbearable for me to think of the vast amount of money being spent for no more substantial purpose or appropriate display and pleasure when there are millions of our brethren all throughout the world actually starving, dying from the lack of clothing, shelter and medication."

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

Reports from various parts of the Conference indicate good work begun and planned for the year. New churches are being completed and others projected. Our people will soon be worshiping in their new houses at Lexington and at Booneville. Steps are being taken for building in Greenwood, Greenville and Clarksdale.

Rev. J. W. Raper is just recovering from a long spell of sickness; so is R. I. Allen. We hope these brethren may very soon be able for full service in their charges.

Rev. Geo. H. Lipscomb, Booneville station, has raised his foreign mission assessment in full and much of his other collections.

It is hoped that Bro. Clifford will continue to write "Epworth League Echoes" for our ADVOCATE. Matter of that kind is needed to awaken and intensify interest in Epworth League work in our churches. Let us have more of it from him and other wise and experienced workers.

Columbus district makes the first move on the line of Epworth League District Conferences for the year. Who next? We hope at least eight more such will be held in the Conference.

We are glad to note a growing interest on the part of preachers and people for our Conference paper. It is deserving of the patronage of all, and should have a larger circulation this year than ever before. This can be accomplished if all the preachers will talk and work for it as some are doing. Let there be an earnest and united effort to secure as many subscriptions as possible this year for either our Conference or connectional organ, or for both of them, wherever practicable.

The colporter is in the field and at work with fair success. Thirteen pastoral charges have been visited since Conference. Thanks to Bro. Burroughs for such a cordial invitation to the Epworth League Conference at Macon. We will (D. V.) be there with full equipments. The new Sunday-school Hymnal is promised by March 1, when we will fill all orders for it. Send them on.

Home Treatment for Cancer.

DR. BYE'S Balmy Oils, for cancer, is a positive and painless cure. Most cases are treated at home, without the service of a physician. Send for book telling what wonderful things are being done by simply anointing with oils. The combination is a secret: gives instant relief from pain, destroys the cancer microbes and restores the patient to health. Thousands of cancers, tumors, catarrh, ulcers, piles and malignant diseases cured in the last three years. If not afflicted, cut this out and send it to some suffering one. Address DR. Prayer Meeting Topic for February.

THE CHRIST OF ISAIAH.

FEB. 14—CHRIST'S CHARACTER DESCRIBED. (Isa. xi, 1-5.)

Isaiah sees Christ here as

I.—A NEW GROWTH FROM THE DAVIDIC STOCK

The figure employed in verse 1 is that of a new growth springing from the stump and roots—all that remains of a once vigorous tree. The royal house of David, the son of Jesse, shall be cut off by the judgments of God, until there shall be very little visible evidence of its existence, but there shall, nevertheless, be vitality in what remains, for out of this Christ, the Messiah, shall spring. Out of an apparent state of death shall spring up a new and vigorous growth that shall surpass the glory of the old. "And there shall come forth a shoot out of the stock of Jesse, and a branch out of his roots shall bear fruit." (Revised Version.)

Jesus Christ was the direct heir to the throne of David, according to the genealogical tables, which had been carefully preserved during the entire period since the Jews had lost their national independence, but his parents were, in outward circumstances, only a poor family living in an obscure village.

II.—POSSESSING DIVINE POWERS. (Ver. 2, 3.)

Upon Jesus Christ the Holy Ghost decended in the form of a dove at the hour of his baptism (Matt. iii, 16, and John i, 32, 33), a fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy, "And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him." "The Holy Spirit communicates the whole creative fullness of divine powers." (Whedon.) Thus by nature the Son of God, and the Holy Spirit resting upon him, he shall be possessed of infinite wisdom and power, shall abide in "the fear of the Lord," as in his natural element, and shall be a ready discerner "of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

How exactly does this correspond to the qualities of Christ, as revealed in the Gospels, in not a single one of whose words and deeds can there be seen aught but the highest wisdom, who exercise miraculous power over every form of being, whose every action was an expression of a supreme consecration to the will of the Father and who could read the innermost motives of men, thus being an infallible judge of human character.

III.—JUDGING THE WORLD RIGHTEOUSLY AND FAITHFULLY. (Ver. 4, 5.)

He shall manifest an infinite sympathy for the poor and distressed, and shall even argue their cause, while upon the wicked he shall cause divine indignation and punishment to descend. (Read chap. lxi, 1-3, in this connection.) Righteousness and faithfulness in the administration of grace and of judgment, both temporal and eternal, shall belong to him as necessary garments. The verses immediately succeeding (6-9) "present in a strain of allegory the results of Messiah's righteous and peaceful government." (Whedon.)

No use to deny the fact that Salvation Oil is fast taking the place of all other liniments.

Meeting at East End Church, Meridian.

Mr. Hall and I have been holding a meeting in East End Methodist Church, Meridian, for ten days, and will continue till after Sunday. We have had snow, sleet, rain and mud to contend with, and only one day of sunshine, but there have been over sixty souls saved. Last night the crowd poured in until chairs had to be placed in all the aisles. I do not think the house will hold the people to-night. Praise the Lord for such hungering for his Word!

Mr. Hall preaches with the fullness of the Spirit, besides leading and conducting the music. God has in him given me a blessed co-laborer in his work. We feel that together we can both do more for his glory than ever before. We are happy in the consciousness of his abiding presence. MARY MCGEE HALL.

"WHY DO WE WAIT?"

Why do we wait till ears are deaf
Before we speak our kindly word,
And only utter loving praise
When not a whisper can be heard?

Why do we wait till hands are laid
Close-folded, pulseless, ere we place
Within them roses sweet and rare,
And lilies in their flawless grace?

Why do we wait till eyes are sealed
To light and love in death's deep trance—
Dear wistful eyes—before we bend
Above them with impassioned glance?

Why do we wait till hearts are still
To tell them all the love in ours,
And give them such late meed of praise,
And lay above them fragrant flowers?

How oft we, careless, wait till life's
Sweet opportunities are past,
And break our "alabaster box
Of ointment" at the very last!

O let us heed the living friend
Who walks with us life's common way,
Watching our eyes for look of love,
And hungering for a word of praise!

—The Sabbath Defender.

If I Were You.

BY REV. H. O. ROWLANDS, D. D.

If I were you I would be governed less in the conduct of my life by my moods, feelings, and "inspirations," and more by my reason and conscience—and the Word of God. The first are fickle, lawless and unreasonable; the second are abiding and changeless. People of moods are usually unpleasantly peculiar, the common people call them "cranky." Moods are treacherous leaders. Not when you feel the best you are the best. Don't confound a spell of indigestion with godly repentance; don't mistake an attack of a lachrymose fit for a heavenly vision. Moods are like the winds and waves on the ocean—sometimes they are with, sometimes against the ship. The ship that is propelled by an inward force takes no account of the changing atmospheric current; her engine is her power. Let reason, conscience and God guide your career.

If I were you I would not nurse and keep alive old grudges and remembrances of injuries and injustice you've suffered. It does no good. Very likely your complaint is just; you were ill treated. Possibly there was a flavor of blame in your conduct also; but no matter. The great world has long forgotten your case; your friends think you are foolish to brood over it so long, and they have ceased to take interest in it or in you. Your brooding over it brings acid into your life and acerbity into your heart. Your expression of face is changed, your voice loses its musical tenderness: your whole bearing and life are losing their beauty on account of that old grudge that is fermenting in your soul. You are losing your dear old agreeableness; that sweet affinity rising from congenialness is fast dying out of you on account of that old grudge; no good accomplished by exposing your wounds to the passing, feelingless world. Cast out the evil spirit! Try not to think about the injustice you received. Above all, don't talk about it even to your friends. Let it die from starvation.

If I were you I would not be constantly visiting the graves of those unborn members of your family we might call the might-have-beens of life. Look at the names of a few of them: "might-have-been" rich if it were not for that blunder made; "might-have-been a success in that enterprise if somebody had not interfered;" "might-have-been"—O, there are lots of those now dead possibilities over which you weep and weep in vain! You are very foolish. You are very wrong. You make yourself uncongenial to others. All do not believe your statements—that is, they do not believe that if you had avoided that or the other mistake you would now be prosperous.

Rather they think if it had not been that blunder it would have been something else. Let the dead bury the dead, and you follow after a living leader. Don't dwell among the tombs of dead opportunities; some one will think you are a little beside yourself.

If I were you I would speak evil of no one. You may injure such a one a great deal and do yourself no good; and at last it is very possible the evil may recoil on you. Do you know—people are always afraid of cynical persons; they say "the dog that brings a bone will also carry one away." There is a morbid, brutal pleasure enjoyed by some people in seeing the gifted fault-finder coming with microscope and scalpel to the bleeding life of another and then watch the slits, hacks and probings made into a suffering reputation so as to display the point of a jest, the sheen of sarcasm, and the edge of criticism. After all, the witnesses do not love the fault-finder any more than people love a hangman. I love those people who find something good everywhere, and leave to God to judge. You love them too.

Sarsaparilla Sense.

Any sarsaparilla is sarsaparilla. True. So any tea is tea. So any flour is flour. But grades differ. You want the best. It's so with sarsaparilla. There are grades. You want the best. If you understood sarsaparilla as well as you do tea and flour it would be easy to determine. But you don't. How should you?

When you are going to buy a commodity whose value you don't know, you pick out an old established house to trade with, and trust their experience and reputation. Do so when buying sarsaparilla.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been on the market fifty years. Your grandfather used Ayer's. It is a reputable medicine. There are many sarsaparillas. But only one Ayer's. IT CURES.

A Blessing in Disguise.

Such blessings are apt to come to us wearing grave and almost frowning faces, and we meet them with averted eyes and chilly hand clasps. It is because we do not know how precious they are and with what tender and fragrant sweetness they are fraught that we turn away from them, finding later how divine was their ministry and how beautiful their meaning. Once and again during our pilgrimage these messengers cross our path, and we seldom recognize them until they have done their errands and gone away—those errands sometimes half frustrated by our perverse and blind reception, or conception, of what God intended by this or that special providential dealing.

You are, for instance, full of plans for a certain period of time and exceedingly busy, so busy that you are sure you can not spare a moment for a single interruption. Nor, by the utmost effort, can you squeeze in another engagement. Every waking moment is occupied, and the thronging duties and anxieties of the day invade the night so that your sleep is broken and disturbed. Now, at precisely the most inconvenient hour of your life, as it seems to your thought, there comes the intrusion of a fit of illness. You resent the pain, the nervous weariness, the time you must spend and waste in bed, and you beg the physician to give you a tonic which will do its work quickly and efficaciously, and set you again on your feet. Very likely you say, in that incipient stage of illness which is simply solicitous and irritating: "I have no time to be ill, doctor. I must have my hands free for my work." The doctor smiles and drops a soothing word. His tones are encouraging, and you do not notice that he makes you no pledges, and that he is chary of promises. You resign yourself to wait until time and rest and remedies shall have had their beneficial influence upon you, and then, you hardly know how it happens, all thought of the neglected tasks drifts away from you, and you lie still and are tranquil, and others take up your duties and carry out your plans, and the world goes on.

The world would go on if you were taken out of it, for, though the workers drop out of the ranks, the work itself never stops. No one of us is essential in any place, in any relation, and it is well for us occasionally to enter into a realization of this fact, which, commonplace as it is in the utterance, is still far from being fully accepted by our understanding.

Gradually health returns and with it a new poise, a new freshness, a new youthfulness of feeling. The first walk, the first drive after a short illness, how eventful they appear and how delightful! We did not remember that the view around the familiar turn in the road was so entrancing; we are surprised at the opulence of the roses in our neighbor's garden; the young girls in the village never looked so charming before, and we wonder if it is that the quaintly picturesque costumes just now in vogue are more becoming than any dress ever worn by youthful girlhood before. What is the secret?

Presently we discover that we are ourselves rested. Those days in bed were doing for us what nothing else could have done; they were giving to every organ of the body and to every faculty of the soul a chance to stop the exertion which was wearing the machinery out. We have been, so to speak, in the dry dock for repairs, and the illness we girded at was a blessing in disguise.

Could we but see it, there are other and familiar experiences which bear the same character. The stupid and clumsy maid, who taxes your patience and ingenuity to make up for her blunders and to remedy her accidents, is developing you in sweetness, gentleness, and tact. The obdurate Sunday school scholar, who is willful and headstrong and apparently incapable of attending to lessons with any heedful interest, is bringing out in you those qualities of energy, of magnetism, of versatility, which will enable you hereafter to control classes of such boys and influence them for their unending advantage. A little thought will show to many of us how full of good and rich in abiding helpfulness are our blessings in disguise.—Margaret E. Sangster.

There Are Safeguards.

One is the establishment and maintenance of family prayer. In our hurried life, set by train whistles and ferry schedules, family worship is too often crowded out. It ought not to be. We owe it to God to serve Him in our households. The child who grows up in an atmosphere of family religion, in the daily exercise of song and Bible reading and prayer, is thrice armored against temptation.

Another safeguard is the habit of church-going. The Sunday-school is not enough. It is admirable, but it is only a part of the child's religious opportunity, going to it is a privilege, but duty means the attendance in the pew, of the child as of his parents.

A third safeguard is the elimination of bad books, and the substitution of good ones in the child's reading. The seeds sown by bad books spring up and bear noxious fruit. For the sake of to-day and to-morrow, and of all the to-morrows, let us sternly oppose the book which carries poison to the juvenile mind.—Intelligencer.

Doing and Not Doing.

"Sir," said a lad, coming down to one of the wharves in Boston, and addressing a well-known merchant, "have you any berth on your ship? I want to earn something."

"What can you do?" asked the gentleman.

"I can try my best to do what ever I am put to do," answered the boy.

"What have you done?"

"I have sawed and split all mother's wood for nigh on two years."

"What have you not done?" asked the gentleman, who was a queer sort of a questioner.

"Well, sir," answered the boy after a moment's pause, "I have not whispered in school once for a whole year."

"That's enough," said the gentleman; "you may ship aboard this vessel, and I hope to see you the master of her some day. A boy who can master a woodpile and bridle his tongue must be made of good stuff."—Our Sunday Afternoon.

Often precious stones are put into the fire. The Oriental cornelian and Brazilian topaz change color in the burning, and the black spots of the amethyst and hyacinth can only be removed by heat. Thus God's jewels are purified; all that can stand the fire must pass through it, and in the fierce heat of trial many a commonplace Christian begins to glow with new hues of grace, at which men greatly wonder.—W. Y. Fullerton.

Impossible! That word is not French. I know no such word. —Napoleon I.

Hygiene.

To Cure Headache.

"A hot bath, a stroll in the fresh air, shampooing the head in weak soda water, or a timely nap in a cool, quiet room, will sometimes stop a nervous headache," writes Dr. B. F. Herrick, in Ladies' Home Journal.

"When overfatigued from shopping or sight seeing, a sponge dipped in very hot water and pressed repeatedly over the back of the neck between the ears will be found exceedingly refreshing, especially if the face and temples are afterward subjected to the same treatment. Neuralgia is caused not only by cold air, but by acidity of the stomach, starved nerves, imperfect teeth, or by indolence combined with a too generous diet. Heat is the best and quickest cure for this distressing pain. A hot flatiron, passed rapidly and deftly over several folds of flannel laid on the affected spot, will often give relief in less than ten minutes, without the aid of medicine. Hot fomentations are of equal value, though when the skin is very tender it is more advisable to use dry heat, nothing being better for the purpose than bags of heated salt, flour, or sand, which retain warmth for a long time. Cold water, applied by the finger tips to the nerves in front of the ear, has been known to dispel neuralgic pains like magic. When caused by acidity, a dose of charcoal or soda will usually act as a corrective. Sick headache is accompanied by bilious symptoms, and attacks usually come on when the person is overtired or below par physically. This is a disease of the first half of life, and often stops of its own accord after middle age. A careful diet is imperative in every case, sweet meats and pastry being especially pernicious.

"Eating heartily when very tired, late dinners, eating irregularly, insufficient mastication, or too much animal food, especially in the Spring or during the hot weather, are frequent causes of indigestion, causing headaches by reflex action."

The Value of Bathing.

On awakening in the morning the body is covered with moisture, and the quickest way to remove it is in a sponge or plunge bath. Mere contact with the water is stimulation for the entire system. The warm bath before dinner is to clean the body, quiet the nerves, and prepare the system for the meal of the day. A burning thirst may be quenched in this bath, a headache cured, tired feet rested, the temper sweetened, and a bad feeling generally dispelled. In a fresh toilet of the simplest character the individual will feel better, and look it. A bath before dinner is not debilitating, although the assertion is commonly made. A bath at any time may make a person ill who is unaccustomed to bathing. Hot baths come in the line of medical treatment, and should be so regarded. Only shallow-pated woman get in a stew. No common sense individual—miners, millhands, and cigarette makers excepted—should stay in a tub over five minutes.—Philadelphia Methodist.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE

In one of his wonderful sermons very truthfully said, "My brother, your trouble is not with the heart; it is a gastric disorder or a rebellious liver. It is not sin that blots out your hope of heaven, but bile that not only yellows your eyeballs and furs your tongue and makes your head ache but swoops upon your soul in dejection and forebodings,"—and

GABRIELLE BARNES WILKINSON.

Only those to whose lips the same cup of sorrow has been pressed can understand the chill that settles on the soul when one stands beside a pale, stiff form, and knows the faithful heart which would have shed its last drop of blood for us has ceased to beat.

Seldom are the hearts of mother and child so closely knit as were my precious mother's heart and mine. Bound by a rare bond of sympathy and love, we were each a part of the other's life. Every joy of mine was hers; every ambition was greater because she shared it, and never a cloud of trouble or perplexity crossed my brow but that it cast a shadow on her heart. After the slender blue-veined hands were still I looked at them with tear-dimmed eyes and aching heart, and knew their gentle touch would never soothe nor quiet me to rest again. I thought of how much those loving hands had done for me through all the years since she took me, her first and last baby, in her arms, until, but lately, they had been shorn, through illness, of their strength, and God said, "Their work is done." I thought of the daily letters she used to write, through my long school-days away from home, and during our every absence from each other in the years since then. Friends often marveled at those letters because they came as certainly as dawned the day. "My love letters from mama," I used to call them. Their long, full pages were always beautiful in word and sentiment. Letter-writing was one of her chief pleasures. "It was nearest to being with the absent one," she said. Alas! that the last tender line has been written, and the gifted, poetic pen is laid aside forever! The thought I would have banished, if I could, was of the silent violin and her mute guitar, and the ivory keys which never more would waken into music at her touch.

There are many who could join me in tribute to the loving service of those hands, and tell of flowers skillfully arranged to best display their beauty for the pleasure of her friends; of dainty dishes prepared to tempt the sick; of fairy-like stitches, such as few could make, in dainty garments and beautiful things she often deftly fashioned for those she loved best. But it was in times of sickness in the home when the frail hands took on new strength, and were untiring and inexhaustible in their ministry of help and comfort.

I stood beside her as she lay robed in her bridal white, with roses at her feet and on her breast, and realized the voice which never failed before to answer to my call was hushed; and to my grief-stricken cry, "Oh, mama!" from the mute lips there came no fond response. Each day since then my heart has made that cry, and longed unutterably for the close, sweet companionship so sadly missed.

She always loved intensely the esthetic and beautiful; and all things beautiful shall ever speak to me of her. The beauty and fragrance of flowers will be as a breath of her presence. I shall never hear a strain of music but it will recall the sweet tones of her rich contralto voice, and bring to me sacred memories of happy days when she and I together mingled the melody of violin and guitar.

All who knew her in her younger days sang the praises of her perfect loveliness of person; and neither time nor long illness lessened her grace of form and manner, nor marred the beauty of her clear-cut cameo features, nor dulled the lustre of her dark brown hair. But all praises of her gifts of mind, and loveliness of heart, and beauty of person, and that fine poetic feeling which was so much a part of her—all praise of these sound dull and cold to me, and no word can I find half deep enough and tender to tell the fullness of my love.

She left us on a Sabbath morning in the Spring-time. The flowers she loved best bloomed to deck her bier. I love to remember that the rose bush, which, of all the garden, had been the object of her tenderest care and dearest pride, never bore such wondrous, gorgeous blossoms as those I gathered during those last days of hers on earth in the early morning, while the dew still glistened in their golden hearts, and laid them near her pillow, that their sweetness and beauty might greet her when she woke. Her violet bed, too, bloomed until it was a mingled mass of green and purple, which wafted its perfume through her window on the gentle breezes of the Spring. Delighting her beyond words was a cluster of rare white violets, which I culled from treasured plants which only lent their sweetness for her sake, for they have never bloomed before or since.

She often spoke reverently and ecstatically of heaven, saying, "If God has made this world so beautiful, how passing beautiful must heaven be!" And so I lift my eyes, turning from the darkness of the desolation she has left, and think of her as marveling at the bright glories of her heavenly home, and joining that seraphic voice in angel chimes. And one day we shall meet again then, "with songs on our lips and with harps in our hands," we shall together praise the blessed Savior evermore.

LILY WILKINSON THOMPSON.

Crystal Springs, Miss.

DOLLERHIDE—Died in Delhi, La., Dec. 25, 1896, R. H. DOLLERHIDE; born in North Caroline, May 20, 1828.

In early life he moved to Louisiana, living first at Floyd, but for the last twenty years a resident of Delhi. For fifteen years he had been chief magistrate of the town, and there is but one voice in saying he meted out even-handed justice and mercy to all. His place in affairs of Church and State can not be easily filled, for his mind was of gigantic strength and breadth, and there was no Gordian knot of business that he could not easily grasp and unwind. For thirty years he had been a member of the Methodist Church, and for the last few years had lived nearer to God. He always enjoyed church worship, which in health he never failed to attend, and was Sunday-school superintendent until his failing health required his resignation.

He leaves to mourn his loss a loving and sorrowing wife (nee Miss Cynthia McGaughey) and seven children, all grown, devoted, loving and faithful to their father, who were all, save one son, weepers at his bedside in death.

As a husband, he was ever kind and loving; as a father, all that the word embodies that he was; and as a friend, as true as the stars to a cloudless night. Altogether, he was a man full of charity and good works. He has gone to his eternal home—a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

May a tender, loving Father send the Comforter to his sorrowing loved ones here on earth! MRS. M. D. MURPHEY.

THEUS—MAGGIE VIRGINIA, daughter of James and Maria Brice, and wife of W. P. Theus, was born near Arcadia, La., April 11, 1856. She was married to W. P. Theus, Sept. 21, 1876, and died of typhoid fever in Arcadia, La., Jan. 19, 1897.

She professed religion and joined the Methodist Church under the ministry of Rev. J. H. Jordon at the age of eleven years. The steadfastness of her faith, her fidelity to the church and her ever-increasing devotion to God proved the verity of her conversion. She was ever an obedient, loving child, giving much comfort to her aged parents in their declining years.

As a wife, she was faithful, true and devoted; as a mother, she was firm in her discipline, loving and tender in her administration, always holding the confidence of her children.

She loved the church of her choice. It was a great pleasure to her to entertain the preachers. The services of the house of God were her chief joy. Her place in God's house was never vacant without a good excuse.

We will miss you, dear sister, but the angels will rejoice in your society. God bless the bereaved! JNO. A. MILLER.

Ruston, La.

ROBERTS—OSCAR S. ROBERTS was born Dec. 20, 1866; converted under the ministry of Rev. W. B. Hines, and joined the M. E. Church, South, in Amite county, Miss., in 1885; lived devotedly as a Christian for eighteen years, and died in glorious triumph in Zachary, La., Jan 15, 1897.

Bro. Roberts was a true Christian—one who loved God supremely—and did his duty both as a member and officer in the church, and was beloved by all who knew him.

For two days before his death he talked freely on the subject, and his only regret was that he had not done more for the Master, and would have no more stars in his crown. The universal opinion here is that a good man has gone to his reward, and that the place made vacant by his death will be hard to fill.

He leaves a devoted mother, several brothers, and an affectionate sister, whom he said he would tell the loved ones already gone on before "were on the way."

We mourn the loss of our dear brother, but expect to see him again on the banks of "eternal deliverance." May the Lord comfort the bereaved! THOS. J. UPTON.

HUMPHREY—Little JOSEPH, son of Joseph and Jennie Humphrey, was born Aug. 5, 1891, and departed this life Dec. 30, 1896, aged five years five months and twenty-five days.

Little Joseph was with his brother burning grass, and was caught by the flames and burned to death. Sad, indeed, and a great shock to the family; but we are assured that He who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven," has taken little Joseph to his heavenly home, and now he lives with God and the holy angels.

We do not sorrow as those who have no hope. Mother, father, sisters and brothers, the little tie that has been so sadly severed from you here is watching and waiting for you yonder. May you all find comfort in believing in Jesus, and at last join little Joseph in his heavenly home! J. S. SANDERS.

McNEILL—Whereas, God, in his trusted love and providence, has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved companion and co-worker, VIRGIE JANE MCNEILL; therefore, be it

Resolved, That our chorister and Sunday-school has lost a most faithful member, and each one of this class and the entire Sunday-school has surrendered to God a loving little friend.

Resolved, That we mourn her loss to the school and to ourselves.

Resolved, That we shall ever cherish her place in our class and her memory in our hearts.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our home paper, to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and also to the bereaved family, with our heartfelt sympathy and love. HER SUNDAY-SCHOOL CLASS.

Mansfield Female College Affairs.

The Boarding Department is fuller than at any time for years past, and still they come. Substantial repairs and improvements have been made; other improvements contemplated. The faculty is doing all that can be done to give every patron more than the worth of their money.

Let every friend of the college lend us a helping hand just now. Especially let every delinquent subscriber send, without delay, the amount promised. We need the money you promised us, and we need it badly. Send by postoffice money order, payable at Mansfield, La.; or check on bank.

J. L. P. SHEPPARD.

Notice.

The Greenville District Preachers' Association will meet at Gunnisen, Miss., March, 9, 10 and 11, 1897. All preachers not members have been assigned subjects and will be expected to attend.

A Scourge of La Grippe

IS RAGING EVERYWHERE, DEVASTATING CITY, TOWN AND COUNTRY ALIKE.

Nothing equal to it has ever been known. We have had la grippe before in this country in several well-defined epidemics, but not as we are having it now. Everybody, everywhere, has it, has had it, or is expecting to have it. In every paper we read of it. Everyone we meet speaks of it. Perhaps the worst feature about la grippe is that it is almost sure to leave consequences behind it which are far worse than the original disease. But it could not have been otherwise than that some things have been learned, during these sieges with la grippe. Untold thousands have learned these things, but a still greater multitude perhaps have these things yet to learn.

First, that Pe-ru-na taken before each meal and at bedtime will protect anyone from having la grippe. Second, that Pe-ru-na taken every hour during the acute stage of la grippe will shorten its duration and prevent the long train of disagreeable consequences which follow the acute attack. Third, that in cases where Pe-ru-na has not been used during the acute stage and the victim finds himself dragging out a miserable existence from the damage to his system accomplished by la grippe, he has only to take Pe-ru-na according to the directions on the bottle to realize a speedy and complete cure. The explanation of this is that la grippe is epidemic catarrh. Pe-ru-na will cure catarrh wherever located. It will cure catarrh of every variety and stage. Therefore it will cure la grippe, which is simply the epidemic variety of acute catarrh. During such a Winter as this no one should be without a copy of Dr. Hartman's latest book, which treats fully of la grippe, acute catarrh, chronic catarrh, coughs, colds, bronchitis, consumption and all other climatic diseases of Winter. Sent free to any address by The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio.

You Can Make Money Easy.

About three weeks ago I heard of a firm in Pennsylvania who manufacture dish washers, and I sent for one. It came all O. K., and after a most thorough trial on dishes, kettles, crocks, and all cooking utensils, I found it to be the most perfect invention ever made for housekeepers. I wash dishes every day for a family of eight, and never have to put my hands in the water. It works splendidly, and never cracks or breaks the dishes. All those who see it work are struck on it and I am making big money selling them here in my neighborhood. They are easy to sell, and those who have received them are so well pleased. Anyone can make from $25 to $50 a week selling them, and not have to work hard, either. If those who want something to do will write to Dept. A 5 of the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Sta. A, Pittsburg, Pa., they will receive full particulars regarding this dish washer and instructions how to sell it.

Conference Minutes.

I find in the Conference Minutes some errors which I wish to correct. Byhalia is reported to have paid the presiding elder only $49, when it paid $64.50; pastor in charge only $300, when it paid him $490; assessed for foreign missions, $90, and paid nothing, when we paid $45. We also reported 200 Sunday-school scholars, instead of 175, as the Minutes have it. Also 2 Epworth Leagues. Since Conference, Byhalia paid $10 more, making $500 for the pastor.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

No wine nor other intoxicating liquors are to be provided at the presidential inaugural ball.

Three people were killed and five fatally injured by the explosion of a boiler in a sawmill in Bogue Chitto, Miss., last week.

The General Relief Committee in this city, engaged in collecting and shipping supplies to North Louisiana, is now in excellent shape, being fully organized and working with great zeal and devotion.

James H. Eckels, the Comptroller of the Currency, has sent a letter to the governors of the States requesting them to recommend legislation to secure uniformity in the collection of banking statistics.

The rapid development of the grain-exporting business through this port has done more to attract attention to the advantages to be found here as a shipping point than anything which has happened in the past thirty years.

The Capitol of Pennsylvania, at Harrisburg, was burned last week. The total loss is $1,500,000. The burned Capitol was built early in the century, but was regarded as one of the handsomest specimens of Ionic architecture in the country.

A head-end collision, resulting in the death of two men and the serious injury of a third, and the destruction of a good many thousands of dollars worth of property, occurred one mile south of McGehees, Alabama, on the Louisville and Nashville railroad.

The Rivers and Harbors Committee has returned to Washington from their trip South. The members are enthusiastic over the hospitable reception given to them, and those who had not previously visited the southern section of the country have had their ideas of its industrial, agricultural and commercial importance greatly enlarged. In fact, the tour was in a sense educational in its effects.

A fresh revolution has broken out in Crete, and if the dispatches are to be believed, the situation is more serious than it was during the revolution which was so recently ended by what appeared to be a satisfactory compromise.

The returns for the Manchester Canal seem to bear out the supposition that it is not such a "white elephant" as has generally been supposed. The tonnage for the month of December footed up to 181,144 tons, or an increase of about 40 per cent. over the same month of 1895. The increase in revenue is put down at 42 per cent. for the same periods.

On Thursday the Queen Regent of Spain attached her signature to the decree promulgating the reforms in the administration of affairs in Cuba, which the Spanish government proposes to put into effect in the island as soon as General Weyler succeeds in crushing the rebellion, if he ever does succeed. The reforms include a very liberal amount of self-government, an administrative and legislative assembly chosen mainly by popular vote, control of the budget, and the power to make a tariff even upon goods imported from Spain, with the one proviso that Spanish goods must be given more lenient treatment than foreign goods.

The Pope has ordered that the next canonization shall be celebrated in St. Peter's, which will be beautifully draped for the occasion and lighted by hundreds upon hundreds of great chandeliers. It will be the first time that a canonization has been celebrated in St. Peter's since 1867, and it is estimated that the cost of the ceremony will exceed $100,000.

VOL. 44.—NO. 7. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1897. WHOLE NO. 2113

THE DOOMED MAN.

BY JAMES W. ALEXANDER, D. D.

There is a time, we know not when;
A point, we know not where,
That marks the destiny of men
To glory or despair.

There is a line by us unseen,
That crosses every path;
The hidden boundary between
God's patience and his wrath.

To pass that limit is to die,
To die as if by stealth;
It does not quench the beaming eye,
Or pale the glow of health.

The conscience may be still at ease,
The spirit light and gay;
That which is pleasing still may please,
And care be thrust away.

But on that forehead God has set
Indelibly a mark,
Unseen by man, for man as yet
Is blind and in the dark.

And yet the doomed man's path below
May bloom as Eden bloomed;
He will not, does not, will not know
Or feel that he is doomed.

He knows, he feels that all is well,
And every fear is calmed;
He lives, he dies, he wakes in hell,
Not only doomed, but damned.

O, where is this mysterious bourn,
By which our path is crossed?
Beyond which God himself hath sworn
That he that goes is lost.

How far may we go on in sin?
How long will God forbear?
Where does hope end? and I where begin
The confines of despair?

An answer from the skies is sent:
"Ye that from God depart,
While it is called to-day repent,
And harden not your heart."

Communications.

One Issue.

A few spare minutes to-day enabled me to read with some thoroughness our NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of Jan. 28. To express the pleasure and gratification would be a hard task. It is replete with interesting items from first page to last. Let us see: That brief and beautiful poem, "An Angel in the Bible," moves us to "the possibilities within." Then Dr. Palmore encourages us, out of current and prospective history and God's Word, to go forward in the Master's name to conquer the kingdoms of sin." The tribute to worth in "The Writings of Sir Walter Scott" marks Miss M. V. Duval as a woman of rare gifts and fine taste. We need more of such good advice, "like apples of gold" in silver setting. Then Dr. G. G. Smith, in writing of a famous case deeply interesting to the whole church, succeeds in making "the worse appear the better reason" as cleverly as most lawyers could. I think more than one "doctor has been bewildered by the glitter of words," or too much influenced by personal sympathy. Dr. Umbrell, on "Snakes," is unique. It surely is time to learn not to devote all our energy stirring up and killing forms of error that are hiding their diminished heads. What shall I more say? Time would fail, and our editorial patience also, to tell of the rich and racy communications on the second page, moving us to loyalty to our grand old hymn book and to what is good among the new; inspiring our hearts to praise God for leading Bro. A. D. Miller (and the rest of us) out of the wilderness of debt on Indian Mission land. Let's make Bro. Miller still happier by knowing that other $400 very speedily will buy more land and give gospel light to these naturally dependent on us.

That work of Christ-like women in Tehonpitonlas Mission should send a thrill of pleasure to every lover of his kind. The columns of the W. P. and H. M. and of the W. F. M. Societies teem with interest. They do credit to our Conference organ, and well deserve thanks from all for thus leading the way for our gifted and gracious women to bring their work to the front. Who can now estimate what is likely to come of "China's New Woman"? Encouraged by the great Viceroy, aided by women already under the benison of Christ's mission, how soon may these daughters of heathenism rise to their true position in their own homes and in the church of God! Thanks for your selection on "Sociability in Church." Now come the brethren with their trials and triumphs, and you tell us how to get the best Bibles and sewing machines. You are too modest a man to let me compliment the pithy items and "cheering words" of the editorial page. Special notices on page 5 always attract a preacher's eye and often touch his heart. Here we reach a ready access one to another. What of page 6? It is improving all the time. I suspect the delicate touch of a godly woman's hand "along these lines." Those articles on "Dr. Rosa Wiss" and "Onward" mean much for the future happiness and exaltation of the "better half" of humanity. What mother's or father's heart could fail to respond to the pathos of "My Little Lad"? Your hygiene column is always good. The obituaries may not be generally read, but some faithful ones delight to see the memorials of their friends embalmed in type, and why not? E. g.: Such unobtrusive, but useful lives as Katie Lum Hicks, Sister Mary A. Ford, and others, have given the world ought to be written somewhere besides in the memory of those who knew and loved them here. I never saw either of these here below, but hope to greet them on the other shore and need no introduction. On the last page we get the thrilling news of much newly wedded love. Many besides the fifty-two parties of the first part have read that nuptial column with smiling lips and happy hearts. Now for Quarterly Conferences and the "News of the Week," and we who skip most advertisements lay down the paper and say: Well done, Bro. Black! I knew "you'd make a spoon or spoil a horn"—a good one at that. Blow you the trumpet of the gospel with no uncertain sound. Let all the people say, Amen! and subscribe for our ADVOCATE immediately.

Religion the Innate Faculty of the Soul.

In every human soul there is an appetite which calls for food different from that which feeds the body or that which supplies the mind—a something which will not be content with mere temporal good, and which the broadest grasp of knowledge can not satisfy. This is the spiritual faculty. It has sometimes been called the sixth sense. By it the soul feels its dependence on something higher and stronger than itself.

The spiritual in us calls for spiritual food. This is an essential condition, a primordial fact in human life, and lies back of the existence of any form of religion. It is that which in every race of men has created a system of religion. This unfolding sense of the soul, this desire for God, this faculty of faith, has, like other endowments, been given in different measure to the different races of men; but its presence is everywhere to be found.

There has been much speculation, even by the great lights in literature, about the failure of religion. Thus Carlyle tells us that Locke, by treating the mind as a substance that might in imagination be modeled into shape and size—a something that, were our organs fine enough, might be seen and felt—had paved the way for banishing religion from the world. Following this drift of thought, the conclusion was soon reached that "as the stomach secretes chyle, so does the brain secrete thought." Then, of course, we have reached the blankest materialism, and religion is to be thrown over among the myths.

In truth, we see that this school of thought, as all kindred ones must do, has left its devotees on the desert wastes of vagaries. Every false system of thought worked out in human experience will be lost either in gross superstition or blank materialism; so many noble rivers are lost in sand wastes. On the southern slopes of the Atlas mountains there are during the rainy season rivers which flow into the Great Desert and disappear. If a rustic of that country should conclude that the waters of the world are lost in the great Sahara, he would not be more widely mistaken than are they who think that the religion of the world is running out in that stream of thought in which the materialistic writers have of late been making such a splash. A backwoodsman floating down the Mississippi river on a raft and unwittingly takes down one of those chutes so common to that stream, and as his channel narrows more and more, wonders what has become of the waters of the mighty river, makes no greater blunder than do men who are drawn off into the side currents of the world's thought, and seeing their stream grow less, conclude that the world's great life and noble destiny are all a myth, and that man, after all, is but an animal like the hog, only of a better breed.

Not until the last man has been banished from the world will religion take its leave of our planet. Religion is innate in human nature. From the time that man began to think and feel till now it has been the staple of his thoughts and the labor of his soul. Moses and the prophets, Jesus and the apostles! What labor of mind and heart!—what treasury of noble thoughts! They have shaped the current of the world's history. Their successors have lived through all ages, and still exert the greatest influences on human destiny. The religious feeling has entered more largely than any other into the whole history of man. The cry of humanity has been for God. The travail of the soul has been to reach the great Invisible. We are not yet prepared to forsake the stream of life into which has been poured the best blood, the noblest efforts, the most sacred hopes and the most earnest prayers of the best part of the race of man. "Unto whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." In all beside we see nothing but the sand wastes of vain speculation.

Epworth League Echoes.

BY REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD,
President Mississippi State Conference of Epworth Leagues.

Don't forget that the third State Conference of Epworth Leagues in Mississippi will be held in Water Valley, Miss., April 29 to May 2.

Water Valley clad in garments of yellow and white will, with open arms, receive you.

We are at work on the programme now, and hope very soon to send it out.

A full orchestra of trained musicians will furnish the accompaniments to the soul-stirring songs that the Leaguers will sing during the Conference.

On Sunday afternoon of the Conference an open-air meeting will be held in the City Park, to be addressed by one of the most prominent and useful laymen in the South.

"The Children's Hour" will be a special feature of the programme. Over one hundred juniors in "rank and file," with officers well trained, will demonstrate the possibilities of young life in the church.

Of course, the social advantages of such a meeting will be good, but first of all, and above all, it is to be a great religious occasion, and we pray that it may prove good to the use of edifying.

There are three songs that we would specially like the Leaguers to learn. (1) "All hail the power of Jesus' name," etc. (True Coronation). (2) "O for a thousand tongues to sing," etc. (with the chorus, "Blessed be the name of the Lord"). (3) "When the roll is called up yonder, I'll be there."

Sing religious songs on the train as you go and come from the Conference. The trainmen enjoy it, and some song may touch some heart and point some life to Christ.

The future of our great church depends upon the boys and girls of today. God grant that we may continue in the "apostolic succession."

The Charity and Help Department should arrange for a systematic visitation of the sick and of the poor.

The Mississippi Methodist Orphans' Home also looks to this department for help. We hope that every League in the State will find it possible to assist in some way this very laudable enterprise. Will some League furnish the chapel or the library or a dormitory as a monument to their zeal and liberality?

We have just received an invitation to visit a large town in Mississippi to wake up a League which the writer of the letter states is in a "comatose" condition. Some time ere long we'll try to go and endeavor to "stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance."

Let every League in the State send for the little book, "What to Do, and How to Do It," by Joe Ramsey, of Tennessee. Order of Barbee & Smith, Nashville, Tenn. Only ten cents.

The spirit of missions is the spirit of the gospel. If God has not called you to go, he has certainly called you to send. Assist your pastor in every way you can in raising the full assessments.

Correspondence.

From the West.

DEAR ADVOCATE: For several years, while Drs. Parker and Galloway were upon your tripod, I was an occasional contributor to your columns and an interested reader of your bright pages. Since my old friend, Dr. Black, has had you in charge, I have frequently thought I would like to renew your acquaintance, but until now have neglected to take the initiative. By leave of your editor we will now resume our former relations, which I am sure will prove pleasant and profitable to me, and I trust not disadvantageous to you.

You were the friend of my youth. From my earliest recollection you visited my mother's home in Lauderdale county, Miss. Well do I remember how eagerly I looked for you, and literally devoured the "Children's Corner," before I was sufficiently advanced to get over hard words, or relish the matter prepared for more mature minds. Since our juvenile literature has been cheapened in price and increased in volume, the demand for the "Children's Corner" in all our church papers is not so imperative, I presume, and yet I am sure that the editor who attempts to dispense with it will make a great mistake. Dispense with the "Children's Corner"! Why, even grown-up children, young men and young women, not a few of whom are several years beyond their teens, demand a department of their own, and woe to the editor who dares to say them nay. Since the organization of the Epworth League our own Pacific Methodist Advocate has had a League Department of from two columns to two pages; but this did not satisfy our young folks, so they resolved to start a paper of their own (which the preachers and other of the older folks thought would be an unwise move), and only desisted on condition that Dr. Wilson would give them three pages of the Conference organ, if they should require so much, to be in charge of an editor of their own selection. This shows, however, that our young people are not dead or sleeping, and is a prophecy that there is a future for our church on the Pacific coast.

Though not by any means an old man, I am getting to be one of the older preachers of the Conference, there being but thirteen in the active work with us who were connected with the Conference when I entered in 1875, and four of the number came in with me. A majority of the preachers have entered since my return to the Conference in 1882 after a sojourn of five years in the Mississippi Conference. Some of the old preachers, however, who were in the Conference in the early days, have returned. Dr. Anderson came back from Texas in 1877, Dr. W. A. Finley from Oregon at a later date, while Rev. Jesse Wood, D. D., with us now, was then loaned to the Congregationalists. Quite a number have gone to answer to roll-call at the Conference where memorial services are never held, a larger number have come from and returned to other Conferences, several have joined the local ranks, three or four who did not remain with us long enough to get acquainted have gone to other churches, and some are on the retired list cheering us as we press the battle. Of the dead, four have left us within as many months. They were Rev. W. M. Winters, who passed away Sept. 20; Rev. Samuel Brown two months later, followed by Rev. B. H. Russell in December, and Rev. E. H. Robertson in January. These were all old men, their ages ranging from seventy-three to eighty-five. All were in the Conference when I joined, Bro. Robertson excepted, and all did heroic service for the church. Some who have gone away are only loaned. M. B. Sharbrough, who joined the Mississippi Conference the year that this scribe was admitted to the Pacific, and exchanged Conferences with me in 1877, is serving a term as presiding elder of Los Angeles district, of the Conference of that name. This is his third district. Rev. T. L. Duke, another Mississippian, who reported 168 accessions on the Linden circuit last year, was also taken to the Los Angeles Conference last Fall because the Bishop had need of him. We expect them both back. H. M. DuBose, the eloquent and sweet-spirited, is back in the Mississippi Conference, from whence he started. He is not on the Binnsville circuit, however, where he was my neighbor, but at the capital city. He made us a capital editor, and it is not our fault that he is not still conducting our Conference organ. Our latch-string hangs outside for him.

On the whole, we have progressed on every line. Our membership has about doubled. Seventy-six effective preachers received appointments last Fall, against fifty-nine in 1882. Twenty years ago we found it difficult to get preachers for all the appointments, but since Bishop Hay-good brought out that car-load of Georgians, there has been no lack. We are now recognized as a fixture and a part of the church. One year that I was in the cabinet we had to wrestle with the problem of placing five more preachers than we had appointments. Somebody was crowded out. It was hard on the Bishop and his advisers, but I do not know but that we could stand another spell of crowding, provided the crowding be done by the right men. I might regard the fact that the composition of our Conference has so greatly changed in twenty years as discouraging, were it not that older Conferences are not far behind us in this regard. In looking over the appointments of the Mississippi Conference I find that I would be almost a stranger if I were to return there; and yet it is only fifteen years since I met with that body. Really, time works wonderful changes everywhere. Relations at our old home, Marion, frequently mention names familiar to them that we never heard. These have taken the places of others who were numbered among our friends, not a few of whom have fallen asleep. Ah, a majority of the elders among our near relatives, including our own dear parents, have passed away. Truly, "we are pilgrims and strangers on the earth."

There are several things I would like to say, but this letter is already long enough, and I must defer them until another time. Sincerely,

W. P. ANDREWS.

Is Cheap Postage Abused?

The report of the Postmaster General shows a deficit of nearly eight millions of dollars. The receipts from postage fall that far below meeting expenses. Yet we want a one-cent letter-rate, and believe it would increase the revenue of the department by more than doubling the number of letters mailed.

The President has called attention to an abuse of the mails, responsible for more than one-half this deficit. The actual cost for transportation alone of mail matter is eight cents a pound. But second-class mail matter pays only one cent per pound. This has been wantonly abused by publishers of paper-covered books, who send not less than forty million pounds per year through the mails as second-class matter, costing the government for transportation above $2,800,000 more than the publishers pay. To a limited extent, cheap publications of a helpful character take advantage of this rate; but the great bulk—at least ninety per cent.—are foreign novels, many of them pernicious and infectious. Regularly-bound books cost eight cents a pound for postage; this mass of uncleanness goes for one cent a pound.

A bill to correct this—the Lond Bill, H. R. 4566—has passed the House, and is now before the Senate Postoffice Committee: Hons. E. O. Wolcott, Colorado; John H. Mitchell, Oregon; Wm. E. Chandler, New Hampshire; J. C. Burrows, Michigan; Thomas H. Carter, Montana; Marion Butler, North Carolina; Wm. F. Vilas, Wisconsin; J. L. M. Irby, South Carolina; D. B. Hill, New York; N. C. Blanchard, Louisiana. A powerful lobby is laboring to defeat this bill. Should you wish to help its passage, use your influence with the committee and your senators. What you do must be done at once.—Western Advocate.

Arbitration.

The "great event of the nineteenth century" is not the discovery of the locomotive, or of electricity, or of the wonderful capacity of coal, nor is it the marvelous advance in surgery and medicine, nor the wonderful progress of literature and of education. It is the discovery that two nations can make a treaty for the arbitration of their differences by peaceful methods. The world may well rejoice in it. For when it shall have been demonstrated that these two nations, England and America, can live in harmony under such a compact, other nations will be induced to try it. Then may follow, in subsequent years, the reduction of the armies of Europe and the return of the young men of those countries from camps of idleness (which are schools of vice) to the sweet influences of home life. Imagine the increase of the wealth of those countries when these millions of idle consumers are restored to the ranks of laborers, and imagine no less the promotion of good order and religion when the young men are taken from the temptations of camp life into the orderly companionships of home. Such a promotion of peace will prove an inestimable blessing to the world, both materially and spiritually.—Christian Observer.

Communications.

A Leaf from the Diary of the Rev. Thomas Nixson.

BY REV. J. M. WEEMS.

When speaking to my father of their call to the ministry, the preachers always expressed regret that they did not yield to the first impressions of the Holy Spirit, and go at once into the work. I then resolved that, if called to preach, I would enter the work without delay, and thus escape the sorrowful regrets of the older brethren. Not long after this I felt very strongly impressed that I must preach, and I asked the Rev. John Cragg if he thought all young converts had these impressions? He said he thought they did, as the Holy Spirit wanted every one to be religious. I then hesitated and tried to justify my course with the plea that it was an impression made on the minds and hearts of all young converts for their spiritual development. Yet there was a continual feeling in my heart that I ought to prepare myself to preach.

We held prayer meeting every Wednesday night, and if no local preacher was present, after opening the meeting, the class leader would say: "If there is anyone present who feels like saying anything let him come forward." So I prepared a talk for the prayer meeting, and fully expected to please and astonish everyone in the house. But to my great mortification every word and idea was driven from my mind as chaff is driven by the wind. As soon as they dismissed the congregation, I slipped out of the house and went home alone, and was afraid to hear anyone speak of the meeting. I now concluded I was mistaken—that if God had called me to the work of the ministry, he would have given me greater presence of mind, and aided me by the Holy Spirit; that the impression was not from God, and to drive it away I fasted twice a week, and at ordinary meals would eat but very little.

Mother said I was carrying the matter too far, and was starving, and not fasting. But I told her I was one of the hard kind, and must resort to harsh means to conquer my depraved nature and be religious. All the time keeping from her the real cause of my trouble. I succeeded in driving away the impression that I must preach, and with it went the joy of my religion also. I then reasoned that if the impression was not from God, resistance would not affect the peace and joy of my soul; and that if it was from him, I might expect these results to follow. I then resolved to pray in public, exhort and preach as my way was opened, and if I could not do as well as others, I would do the best I could. So in October, 1811, I was licensed to exhort. December the earthquake began, and continued through the following March. That year my father was in charge of the Nashville circuit, and as my mother was in bad health, he sent me to fill one round of his appointments. The people were all alarmed and came to preaching by the hundreds. Father said he thought the local preachers would preach for me; but if they would not, for me to lose sight of the presence of lawyers, doctors and all others, and think only of God and of duty. At that time we had no house of worship in Nashville; so we preached in the dwelling of good Bro. Hobbs, who was the jailor. As I passed from one preaching-place to another the roads were cut up with horses and conveyances going to church, as though companies of cavalry were on the march. How I trembled as I drew near the church and saw the multitudes awaiting for the preacher. But God was with me, and the roaring and thundering sound of the earthquake made it an easy matter to preach. On the night of the seventh of February a most terrific earthquake took place. I was up in the cedar glades, near Lebanon, and it seemed as though the foundation of the house had given away, and we were going down into the depths. While we were awaiting our doom, we heard the people of the neighborhood coming and praying for mercy. One man who had been very wicked was confessing his sins. He said: "O Lord, I promised during the last earthquake I would be religious, but I have not kept that promise. Spare me this time and I will serve thee." On this round I received 75 into the church on probation.

A Bit of Church History.

In the beginning of the Christian Church, John the Baptist came preaching in the wilderness of Judea, saying, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." But only for the short space of six months was his mighty voice heard "as the voice of one crying in the wilderness, 'Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make his paths straight.'"

Now Christ appears on the scene. The long looked-for, the often spoken-of Messiah, has come, and John must fade from before him as the stars fade before the rising sun. For three years and six months the clarion notes of Jesus' voice rang out in thunder tones in the sacred temples and on the majestic mountains, in the beautiful, blooming valleys, and on the tempest tossed seas, setting forth a code of ethics that contain all the truth in the whole world. His words were mountains of truth. Christ laid the foundation and raised the fair structure that is to bless all nations of the earth, where his forerunner but dimly blazed the way. He sealed the truth with his life, redeemed the church with his blood, and left it in the hands of the apostles.

By the middle of the second century the apostles had gone into almost all the civilized world, preached the gospel, and founded the church known as the Catholic Church, till about 482. We now take up the history of the church.

In 171 Montanus, of Phrygia, was the author of the first heresy that amounted to anything. Montanism claimed a second gift of the Holy Ghost, called the Paraclete; that it was a fuller and more perfect gift of the power of God. There is very striking resemblance between Montanism and the second blessing theory.

The next direct branch from the main body was the Novatians, which broke off in 250, calling themselves Puritans; contending that if a Christian, after being baptized, sinned, he must be forever excommunicated. In 310 the Donatists, holding to a doctrine similiar to the Donatists, took their rise, and were a source of trouble to the church for a long time.

Now, about 482 the Catholic Church was divided, giving rise to two distinct branches, known as the Greek, or Eastern Church, and Latin, or Western Church. From the Greek Church spring the Paulicians in 653. The Latin Church gave rise to the first Pope in 606. Here begins the true Roman Catholic Church. From the Roman Catholic Church came the Peterines in 945, the Arnoldists in 1140, the Waldenses in 1150, about 1500 the Church of England, and in 1536 the Anabaptists, which is the last branch from the main body of the Catholic Church.

Now, I can find no reliable account of any other church up to this date. So, where does the Baptist Church get her idea of apostolic succession? Well, let us see farther. History tells us the first Calvinistic Baptist Church was established in 1633, a direct branch from the Church of England. In 1640 there were seven Baptist Churches in London and about forty in the country. The Baptist Church of America came from the same stock, for Mr. Williams was an Episcopalian minister before his immersion. In 1639 he was immersed by Ezekiel Holliman, who had never been immersed. Where, now, is the proof of the much-boasted line of succession? Are we not sisters? Have we not the same mother and grandmother? So I see it.

Reply to "C. M. P."

MR. EDITOR: You, of course, know that if you turn a plant with one side to the light, it will grow one-sided. I had about decided that I had said enough on the subject; but, as you kindly gave our brother, "C. M. P.," an unlimited amount of space in which to ventilate his one-sided views, I shall make bold to claim a little more space myself. In the brother's second article he gives us a very fine illustration of Bro. "A's" choir. We all know that women can get up higher than men. They are made that way, and while it makes some of the brethren feel bad to have to be silent while we carry on the tune, so it must ever be. Brother, you have "histed your tune" just "a few tones too high," and you may "split your whistle" if you do not "clear your throat" and wait till it gets within your reach again. In your third article you tell us of the old couple who broke the "fiddle-strings" for the camp meeting, and wind up by saying, "Now tell me who drove the Spirit away in this instance?" I answer, "The 'choir,' of course." If they had been as angelic and sweet spirited as you represent them, they would have gone on and sung their very best without the "fiddle." As it was, they got mad, and the other side got mad; and if the devil can get both sides mad, he'll break up any camp meeting, fiddle or no fiddle.

Just here I wish to say a little in behalf of "gray hair"—not that mine is gray (it is as red as it ever was), but I feel sorry for you or anyone else who has no respect for "gray hair," unless, as you say, it grows on a mule. Even then, if age caused it to turn gray, I'd feel a little reverence for it. I am glad that the aged man or woman has the respect of all respectable people, whether in or out of the "choir;" and if I had "no more respect for gray hair than any other color," I don't believe "it would occur to me to tell the brethren (and sisters) all over the country about the matter through the columns of my Conference organ." I suppose I could scarcely be called a mule, having "little or no ear for music." The only objection I offered to the "solo" was, "it was so low I couldn't hear it." With small ears and no book to read the words, I couldn't understand them. If I had seen "here a good sister weeping softly, there a brother blowing his nose vigorously," I would very naturally have been glad that somebody's ears were big enough to catch it; but, in the absence of such demonstrations, I thought I was not the only one who had been cheated. I, too, believe that many are called to sing the gospel, and they can find it nowhere so beautifully expressed as in our hymn book, which should be dearer to the heart of every loyal Methodist than any book save the Bible.

Should we be allowed to enter a "blissful eternity," we may, with the aged couple you refer to and some others, in some sequestered spot away from the sound of the fiddle, sing our songs occasionally as we like best; and in this thought we take both comfort and courage. Sing on, brother; I've got it down within your reach again.

"Justice To 'C. M. P.'"

Having been deeply interested in "C. M. P's" writings on the choir, I am also in the replies. Pardon me, but feeling in the two replies read that "C. M. P." has been done an injustice, I can not refrain from just a word. Surely he does not advocate singing those songs which do not tend to the glory of God, and those of that nature are what I call "silly songs." Truly, they would not exalt anyone in the least degree about God, etc. I am sure a consecrated organist (and there should be no other kind) will only use consecrated songs. Song is the gift of God, and he always intends it in connection with the preached Word. "What is worth doing at all is worth doing well," and God requires preparation in the choir as much so as in the pulpit. True, all due respect should be tendered the aged. I often wonder what some of our aged saints will do on reaching heaven, for about the first sound that reaches their ear will be choir after choir striking their harps of gold, and not at a snail's pace, either. Neither do I think "C. M. P." advocates abandoning our hymn and tune book. He simply would like to hear those tunes sung with vim and in right time; but just here I think "C. M. P." rather too severe on the aged. Do you forget that incidents impressed upon the brain of the young deepens with maturer years? I suppose "De Fleury" was always written in the hymn and tune book as now. Perhaps in their younger days they heard some organist play and sing it as if each note were a whole one; and now, to sing it in the time written, some of our saints will rise and leave, remarking they do not believe in singing gigs in the house of God.

Again: The good magnet always attracts the right way. Let the choir possess this, and I do not think the "ball-room need be added." We should not suppose such a thing. Still, those attracted there would not have depth enough to appreciate a good thing when they heard it. The Lord deliver us from that feature coming in any closer proximity to the church than it is. I do not think the consecrated songs of our evangelists will help to bring it there; not with a consecrated organist to assist the pastor in building up the church of God to his honor and glory, and that she can do without the addition of the "hall-room" to attract.

ORGANIST.

To the "Preacher's Wife."

To the sister who had the struggle with the uncleaned parsonage: Now, that you have cleaned up, and everything shines in kitchen and dining-room, to say nothing of the tidiness all over the house, as you are enjoying the result of your labor and good management, don't you think it would have been better to have written your predecessor a kind letter, with some housekeeping ideas, rather than have "told tales out of school," and set "Preachers' Wives" in a bad light before the world as keepers of homes?

Mrs. H. W. Foote, of North Miss. Conference
Mrs. R. R. Parker, of Mississippi Conference
Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, of Louisiana Conference

To the Members of the W. P. and H. M. Society of North Mississippi.

In examining the statistics of our W. P. and H. M. Society, as found in the tenth Annual Report—nearly a year old now, but the latest we have—one can not fail to be impressed with the great disparity between the number of members and the amount of dues reported. I knew this discrepancy existed in my own Conference—the North Mississippi—but was not aware that it was a common cause of complaint until I began to look closely into the figures given. The Louisville Conference is the only one in the entire connection whose dues exceed the number of members as reported by their Conference secretary. The Southwest Missouri Conference lacks only about $4.50 of reaching one dollar per member. The others do not begin to approximate this amount. While North Texas carries off the palm for the largest amount of dues—$375—yet she has 1,234 members—a greater number than any other society. Northwest Texas comes next, with $300 dues and 1,190 members. Of course, we all understand that these figures represent only 50 per cent. of the dues actually paid in, as Conference treasurers are required to divide the dues; and while 50 per cent. are sent to the general treasurer, the other half remains in our Conference treasury for Conference purposes.

Our Constitution reads: "Anyone paying regularly one dollar a year, or ten cents a month, may become a member of the society." How is it, then—taking North Mississippi as an example—that we can have 750 members, and yet pay only $306.24 as dues? Is there not something wrong about this? Most members pay, not the dollar a year, but the ten cents a month—$1.20 a year dues—yet our dues amount to not quite 50 cents per member. In most societies the rule is that the members pay their dues regularly, and I can not believe there are non-paying members enough to cause this discrepancy.

There seems among us a recognized rule—a tradition, an unwritten law, so to speak—that when an Aid Society is merged into a P. and H. M., in order to make the change felt as little as possible (what other reason could there be?), in order to become connectional, some amount is taken from the treasury and sent off to the Conference treasurer as dues from the society. This amount depends greatly on the size and liberality of the society, some paying $5, some $10, others $20 per annum. The rest of their money is used for local purposes. Now, all appropriations for general work are based on the idea that each member pays one dollar (at least) per year. But we see that this basis is a false one. How, then, can the appropriations be met? Evidently they can not, unless we change existing circumstances. I believe that in our tender years, in the incipiency of our organization, this custom was well enough; but now we are out-growing our swaddling clothes, we are bursting into full life and vigor, and we need to come up to the full amount required of us. We must leave first principles behind and press forward.

Especially would we urge this in our own Conference. North Mississippi stands fifth in number of members. Let us not lag behind in the matter of dues. As to specials, we are straining every nerve to complete our scholarship, upon which we had already entered when the above figures were published. Remember ours is the first scholarship undertaken by the P. and H. M. S., and we must complete it this year, so that by the opening of the new session, in September, we may be able to call it our very own, and to fill it with one of our Mississippi girls preparing herself for home mission work.

By increasing our dues we are helping forward the work in two departments:

First. We are assisting the Decennial offering of $20,000, so much needed for the general work. Our leaders survey the whole field and see most clearly where funds are most needed, while we, as loyal workers, desire to forward the work as much as possible.

Second. We help our preachers in our own Conference in securing comfortable homes. Nor is this an insignificant item, but one of the most important coming before us for consideration. Many applications for help have been sent to us, and several of them have been forced to wait. Why? Have we no sympathy for these brethren and their families? Indeed we have. Our hearts are full to overflowing as we read their appeals, and we long to extend a helping hand to each of them. But, alas! our treasury is empty; we can not help them.

Dear sisters, we would not underrate local work. We know most societies have much of this to do; but the few dollars needed to make up the dues will hardly be missed from your local treasury, but when added to similar amounts from others will help to secure many homes for homeless pastors, and so redound to the glory of God.

Sisters of North Mississippi, I have no fears that you will fail when once reminded of what is due and what is expected of you. Too often have we tried you to doubt you now. Look over your treasurer's books, and let this quarter's report, the last of the fiscal year, far exceed any you have ever made. Blot out all debts against every name, and enter upon the new year with March 1 with a clean record. And may the richest blessings of the All-Father abide with each one of you! is the prayer of your president.

We are very glad that Mrs. Stone has thought it best to write the foregoing timely letter, and we agree with her that the day has come for us to assume our full responsibility.

Our Literature.

Any undertaking, of whatever nature it may be, depends for its success upon information in regard to its object and importance. Without this information there can be no concert of action, and in consequence no advancement whatever toward the desired end. We, as a body of Christian women, are deeply interested in the success of this Parsonage and Home Mission work; but not sufficiently so to inform ourselves thoroughly by means of its literature, as to its great object and importance.

Our society issues a monthly paper, entitled Our Homes; has also an established "Reading Course" and "Leaflets," giving a full and complete account of the work that has been accomplished; also of the work to be done, and the great necessity of united effort as the need of that work increases. It is only necessary for the Christian women of our churches to realize the intrinsic value of this literature as a means of information to give it a place in every household.

Our Homes, edited by Miss Lucinda B. Helm, is distinctively an educator in home mission work, and contains full reports of "the movements of the whole Christian church toward the uplifting and saving of the great outside multitudes too long neglected." It comes to each and all with a loving message from the blessed Savior to seek out the homes of poverty and help their wretched inmates to throw off the burden of ignorance and live cleaner, purer lives. Its pages are filled with plans to "drive the wolf from the poor man's door," and to build comfortable homes for God's ministers—the messengers of his—who bring not only sweet words of comfort to the bedside of the dying, but help and strength to a vast multitude of tempted, sin-burdened men. We desire to serve the Master to the very best of our abilities, and there is strength in unity of mind and purpose. By keeping in touch with the progress and needs of this great movement through our literature, we are enabled to act and plan with intelligence and wisdom. Education in its broad sense, is the basis of social progress and the advance-guard of civilization. It is the watchword of liberty and the key which unlocks the door of prosperity. As the rays of the sun disperse the mists and darkness of night, and a new day is born, so the light of knowledge disperses the mists of ignorance and revoals to mankind the wonderful treasures of God's vast store-house. But while all may revel, without effort, in the glorious beauty of God's fair creation it is not so in the realm of knowledge. As the precious metal lies deep-buried in the earth and to reach it requires sacrifice and toil, in like manner must be reached the pure gold of lofty thought and high achievement, whether in the field of art, science, literature or religion.

Before entering into the conflict every soldier is thoroughly drilled, each in his respective position—to advance against the enemy in a solid body; each one is expected to do his duty and obey orders. The battle we are waging is based upon interests of far greater import than those of any earthly conflict, because success means everlasting life, and defeat eternal death. Shall we count the cost too great, if our Lord demands of each one in turn an account of his stewardship? Shall we count our labor lost if, by improving the talents committed to our keeping, we can advance as one body against the mighty forces of sin, and aid in pulling down its strongholds? To do this we must know how, when and where our help is needed; we must act and leave results to him, who in his own good time will grant the bounteous harvest to the laborers in his vineyard. When the mighty weapons of faith and prayer are wielded in wisdom and love by an intelligent, consecrated Christian people, "the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose."

The worst part of martyrdom is not the last agonizing moment; it is the wearing daily steadfastness. There are many Christians who have the weight of some deep, incommunicable grief pressing, cold as ice, upon their hearts. To bear that cheerfully and manfully is to be a martyr. There is many a Christian bereaved and stricken in the best hopes of life. For such a one to say quietly, "Father, not as I will, but as thou wilt," is to be a martyr.

Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet anchor of your liberties; write its precepts on your hearts, and practice them in your lives. To the influence of this book we are indebted for the progress made in true civilization, and to this we must look as our guide in the future.—U. S. Grant.

I fell into the habit years ago of talking with God, and it becomes so natural that in all my open spaces I do it without thought.—Horace Bushnell.

The man is a shirk who makes his prayers in church and never does anything to help answer them.

To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of cores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,
Editor Christian Advocate.

To Subscribers.

In remitting do not send us a check on your local bank. It is very expensive to us to collect these. Send by postoffice order, or express order, or registered letter, or by check on or draft on New Orleans.

I have used the "Mul-en-ol" for several years and can testify to its efficacy in "Colds," "Sore Throat," and especially in applying it externally for Rheumatism. Several friends have found it an almost immediate relief in Rheumatism. I have personal experience as to its healing properties in "Colds" and the throat diseases.

Reply to "Preacher's Wife."

It is not often that we see an article from one of our preachers' wives, and when we do we naturally prick up our ears to hear who has trodden upon the long-suffering, that our clerical folks are so strangely attacked and accused of being a dirty set! Now, I don't accept the challenge of "Preacher's Wife" to write something on this subject," thinking I can wield a pen more effectively and fluently, but this I do say: that she has hurt the interest of the good sisters of the church societies at large, or she would never wish to deprive them of the pleasure of cleaning up the pots and pans, scalding the vermin, and burning old letters! "Preacher's Wife" has just had a like experience; and who would willingly destroy the occasion for the coming together of the kind souls for the pleasure of a combination housecleaning social and a little harmless bug-slaughter! Of course, they don't let the outside world know how Mrs. —— left her kitchen; that a hoe was actually required to scrape the worst of the dirt off the table! They don't wonder their ex-preacher has dyspeptic and unable sometimes to stand and proclaim the gospel to a lost and dying world! Poor man! they understand it all now, and they wonder vaguely why the woman didn't take up the matting in the front rooms once or twice any way during the four years she stayed there! They forgot (dear souls!) that they had put it there eight years before for the new preacher who had preceded them (and anything that comes a la parsonage leave does not bear the ordeal of taking up many times—if it is expected that it should go down again).

Our correspondent, because it has fallen to her lot to be greeted with bad odors and unfumigated rooms, puts it down that our itinerant wives, as a rule, neglect their homes and families, and spend the bulk of their time in adorning their persons!

Now, I think if "Preacher's Wife" will get one of Dr. Black's—I mean Prof. Wise's—notes (mentioned in the last ADVOCATE), and will start out reconnoitering over the Conference, she will find that she has inadvertently slandered the wives of the Mississippi Conference preachers.

Now, I am not a preacher's wife, and, while I have less patience with slovenliness than almost any other crime, I think possibly our sister has not been behind the scenes at the parsonages enough to rightly appreciate the difficulty of always leaving the house even moderately clean under the circumstances. Consider the picking up, the dividing of one's effects from those of the parsonage, the daily receptions, farewells, "grip," mud, rain, and all the results attendant on the marching orders of the Bishop and the turning on of Winter by the Weather Bureau. Surely the "powers that be" should seriously consider the question whether the flight should be in Winter, so that some preachers' wives may not be greeted with offensive odors, or be led to believe that because one poor preacher wore his socks too long (his careless wife leaving the same with a package of lavender letters and other rubbish), that the whole fraternity of preachers' wives are strangers to cleanliness and godliness!

CHAMPION PREACHERS' WIVES.

FROM THE WORK.

J. M. J., Vernon, La.: "We are now domiciled in our comfortable parsonage. Our good people received us very kindly, and have supplied our every necessary want to make us comfortable, and we have no fears for the future with our lot among such kind and Christian people, some of whom I preached to in Alabama twenty-five years ago. What a pleasure it is to meet old friends here; and if the pleasure be so great here, oh, what will it be when we all meet in the Father's house in heaven!"

Rev. W. A. Terry, P. C., Tranquil circuit, Jan. 29: "We have made a very successful beginning on Tranquil charge. The people all over the work have given me a hearty welcome into their homes, and seem to be anxious for me to share their hospitalities. The majority of the officers and members have expressed themselves as being willing to do anything they can to help along the good work. I have preached twice at every charge except one. The congregations have been generally very encouraging, considering the bad weather. We believe that God's blessings are going to rest heavily upon us during this Conference year. Brethren, pray for me, that I may lead many into the light. Success to you (Dr. Black) and the ADVOCATE."

Rev. Thomas B. Clifford, Main Street, Water Valley, Miss., Feb. 1: "We began the new year with a great revival. Bro. McIntosh was with us several days. He is earnest and consecrated, and the Lord uses him in the strengthening of believers and the salvation of sinners. We have received 17 members since Conference, with several others to follow. We now have a membership of 100 in this new church (now eight months old), with 103 scholars on the roll in the Sunday-school. The two Epworth Leagues at this church are doing good work, especially the Junior. At the last meeting of the Juniors eight of them offered voluntary prayers. Many of them are already members of the church. Mrs. T. B Clifford superintends them, and we expect great things to result from the training of these children. At a Church Conference held yesterday the claims of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE were presented, and many sample copies of the paper distributed. Our congregations continue to grow, and much interest is manifested in all the services of the church. The choir, composed of several instruments and many good voices, adds much to the services of the sanctuary. We are indebted to Bros. Bowen and Morehead, of this city, for advice, sympathy and valuable help rendered in the work which God has called us to do. Bishop Galloway will deliver one of his celebrated lectures in the Wood Street Church next Thursday, Feb. 4, under the auspices of the four Epworth Leagues of this city. 'The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice.'"

Rev. F. B. Ormond, Natchez, Miss.: "The Lord is blessing both people and pastor at Wesley Chapel. Our congregations are increasing constantly, and this writer can say he is now serving the most appreciative people it has ever been his lot to serve. The people, both young and old, are manifesting a desire and disposition to do something. Our Epworth League is doing a grand work, and has been a great help to the pastor. It is quite an inspiration to him to attend all the meetings of the League. The Sunday-school and missionary societies are also doing a good work. In a word, we are very much encouraged at the prospects for a grand and prosperous year at Wesley Chapel. We think we are safe in saying that every department of church work is on an upward move, and we are all endeavoring to build up the cause of Christ. We expect great things of the Lord at Wesley Chapel during 1897. Pray for us."

COLUMBUS CITY MISSION.

Having received many letters of inquiry about the Columbus City Mission, I think that a few words of explanation will not be out of place. I had rather make these explanatory remarks through your paper than to write private letters.

By the last session of the North Mississippi Conference I was sent to the town of Columbus to build a second Methodist Church—a work very similar to that projected in Water Valley a little over one year ago. From the Conference I went at once to my new field of labor, and after six weeks of hard work and thorough investigation I found the following facts and conditions to exist:

1. The old Methodist Church is located in the central part of the town, and no one, even those who live furthest away, is put to any inconvenience in attending services there.

2. The old church is amply large to hold every Methodist in the town, and can easily seat three fourths of all the white people—men, women and children—in the city.

3 I found over ninety-nine per cent. of the citizens (white) opposed to the enterprise. This I think to be a perfectly correct statement. I will say, in justice to the people of Columbus, that they were opposed to it because they saw no necessity whatever for a second church. Too, this matter was sprung on the town very suddenly. Not more than two or three people in the town knew that such an enterprise was being planned, until the appointment was made.

4 The people in that portion of the town that the new church movement was designed to benefit were divided in their sympathies about the matter. A few families would have given the enterprise their support; but three-fourths of the people there were as much opposed to it as those living nearest to the old church.

5. Those few families who promised their support to the movement were in the employ of the Southern Railway Company. They are liable to move away at any time, withdrawing from the church its already too weak support.

There are other important facts I will not mention. The above facts I mentioned to the presiding elder of the district, and he gave me permission to abandon the field. I hope that the brethren will attach to me no blame for the failure of the mission. I did my full duty in the matter, and have nothing to regret save the misfortune of my appointment. I want to say that my misfortune of the past year—the expense of medical treatment, etc.—makes my being thrown out of work doubly hard to bear. My heart goes out to many dear friends for words of sympathy and assurances of friendship. May the great, good God bless you, brethren!

Sarsaparilla

The One True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

A doctor can tell you exactly what he thinks is the matter with you. If he fully realized just one great truth he would come nearer to doing this. The thing he doesn't fully appreciate is the fact that the man with pure blood and good digestion can never have anything very serious the matter with him. If you get your blood in good condition, and keep it rich, and pure and wholesome, you will thereby cure almost any disease with which mankind are afflicted. A sewer may be pretty dirty, but if you keep continually flushing it with pure water, you will eventually get it clean. The body may be full of impurities, but in the natural course of events these impurities will be excreted; and, if they are not replaced by other impurities, the body will become pure and healthy. If you continually pump pure, rich blood into a diseased organ, the disease will gradually disappear and soundness and health of the tissues will be restored.

That is the theory and that is the actual result of the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It doesn't make any difference what your doctor calls your disease, the "Golden Medical Discovery" will cure it; and it will cure it by making the blood pure and rich, by stimulating the digestive organs, invigorating the liver, and by soothing and strengthening the nerves. It is the most wonderful blood-maker and flesh-builder that has ever been known. It is the most successful medicine of its kind that was ever prepared.

Sometimes in connection with the "Golden Medical Discovery" it is wise to take a few of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They are the only positive and permanent cure for constipation, and as long as constipation is present health cannot be fully restored. Frequently the "Pellets" are all that are needed. One is a gentle laxative and two a mild cathartic. They are perfectly natural in their action and cause no pain or griping.

There is no death: what seems so is transition;
This life of mora' breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call death
She is not dead the child of our affection,
But gone unto that school
Where she no longer needs our poor protection,
And Christ himself doth rule.
In that great cloister's stillness and seclusion,
By guarding angels led,
Safe from temptation, safe from sin's pollution,
She lives, whom we call dead.

—Selected.

Blessings on him who scatters sunbeams along his pathway.

A kind word and a winsome smile will win where a club would fail.

It doesn't require any brains to be a growler. A mangy canine can do that.

If you find the Bible a dull book, you may be sure that the fault is in you, not the book.

I would rather be a poor man in a garret, with plenty of books, than a king who did not love reading.—T. B. Macaulay.

Some people seem to think that the best way to cleanse their own garments is to bedaub some one else with villainous mud.

Daniel Webster uttered a solemn truth when he said, "One may live as a conqueror, a king, or a magistrate; but he must die as a man."

There is no sense in asking the question, "Which is the better—a good heart or a good life?" Both are included in any correct definition of religion.

No quality will ever get a man more friends than a sincere admiration of the qualities of others. It indicates generosity of nature, frankness, cordiality, and cheerful recognition of merits.—Samuel Johnson.

Some new duty performed; some new temptation overcome; some new difficulty surmounted; some new accretion of spiritual strength from communion with our heavenly Father: ought not these to be the experience of every day of our earthly experience?

We would like to advise some people to be modest; but what good would it do? People who are modest can become more so, but the immodest man does not know how to begin to acquire the much-needed quality. Modest folks are in the main, like poets; they are "born, not made."

You may have to wait a long while before you come upon an opportunity of doing what you conceive to be a great thing, but remember that the little deeds of every-day life are great in God's sight if done from a proper motive. Opportunities for doing these lie around you as thick as the leaves of Autumn.

The Dignity of Man.

The teaching of Christianity concerning the dignity and destiny of man is one of its most essential characteristics, and presents almost as striking a contrast to the teachings of Pagan religions as that between darkness and light. The first chapter of the Sacred Record contains the declaration of man's creation in the image and likeness of the Eternal God, and this glorious truth is never allowed to become obscured, but all through the Sacred Volumes is dwelt upon and made as clear as the noon-day. If man were an inferior being, a mere animal, whose existence terminates with the loss of the vital breath, then the humiliation of Christ and his agony upon the cross would be without meaning. From the standpoint of atheistic materialism the story of the cross is the very acme of folly. If "it is all of life to live and all of death to die," then why the incarnation? Why that matchless display of supreme love that is symbolized by the cross? The dignity of man's nature, his kinship with Deity, is the key that unlocks the mysteries of redemption. Human life is exalted and transformed in proportion to the degree in which the truth of man's noble origin and destiny is apprehended. The loftiest conceptions of the ancient moralists concerning man's nature and worth fall immeasurably below the Scripture ideal. The Greeks, renowned for philosophy and culture, supposed themselves to be "autochthons," and entertained very vague and unsatisfactory views respecting the future life. It was the general belief that "the life of the meanest slave, abused and deprived of every comfort here, was much to be preferred to the life of the greatest hero here in the world to come."

Brahmanism, the religion of multitudes in India, teaches the degrading doctrine of the transmigration of souls, life being regarded as but an illusion, a temporary emanation from Brahm, the supreme, into which the soul is supposed finally to be merged. The Brahman hopes for nothing better than the annihilation of will and personality. Disbelieving that all have the capacity for beholding the Unseen Being, he has a contempt for the rights of others, and ardently maintains the caste system, the greatest curse India has to-day.

Says Bishop Galloway in his book on "The Evidential Value of Missions": "The highest expression of philanthropy in all India is hospitals for sick animals, inspired by the doctrine of transmigration. They will neglect afflicted men to care for a diseased dog, for, in so doing, they may be ministering to a dead son or daughter."

One of the fatal defects of Buddhism is its misconception of the blessedness of unending personality. According to the tenets of this religion, as Dr. Marcus Dodds remarks: "He is a heretic who holds that man has a soul or permanent self separate from the body. There is no life that is not material, and man's only salvation is not to be. The great problem comes to be how to commit suicide." Another writer says: "This means that the best men vanish and leave the masses in hopeless misery. The Buddhist is to hate life in this world, not that he may keep it unto life eternal, but in order that he may never have any more life."

Few of us have any adequate conception of how much we are indebted to the gospel of Christ for prevailing convictions as to the sacredness of human life. It is true that even in this heaven-favored Christian land there is a lamentable amount of bloodshed, but it requires only a moment's reflection to see that this is not the result of the prevalence of Christianity. On the contrary, anti-Christian sentiment is the parent of it all. The universal proclamation of the gospel of Christ does not imply its universal acceptance. Human free agency is not destroyed, and never will be. Men may reject Christianity and run counter to its teachings; but when we have painted American civilization in the darkest colors which truth will allow, there is still a mighty difference between it and the civilizations of Paganism as to the estimate put upon human life. No student of the history and customs of the peoples of the East can fail to note how lightly human life is valued. As one has said, "China would see a thousand men perish with less concern than we would see a score." It is stated that in the South Sea Islands, before their evangelization, human flesh was the cheapest food. To a Mohammedan the life of "an infidel," as all Christians are called, is no more than the life of a sheep.

In this materialistic age there is no truth that needs stronger emphasis than that the soul of man is worth more than all else. Mankind must be made to see that without redemption through Christ life is vanity, and death is hopeless perdition. Alas! that so many professing Christians seem only half convinced of this momentous truth. How few act as if they believed that the soul, as the Master declares, outweighs a world. One of the greatest needs of the church is a deeper conviction of the truth of God's Word as to the turpitude of sin and the necessity of sound conviction and thorough consecration. If the disciples of Jesus would put forth half the effort to convert their companions that is used in seeking amusement and pleasure, what glorious results would follow? What heroism, what self-sacrifice men sometimes display in rescuing their fellow-men from a burning building? Should not Christians exhibit similiar earnestness in rescuing the souls of men from an awful fate? David Livingstone, that matchless missionary who felt that the degraded savages in the wilds of Africa have an interest in the atoning blood, once said: "I have been so busy for twenty years trying to save the souls of others that I had almost forgotten that I have one of my own until a savage auditor asked me one day if I felt the influence of the religion I was advocating."

The Christian should esteem every soul, civilized or savage, bond or free, however sin-besmirched and unlovely, as a jewel of priceless value, a "diamond in the rough," capable of being polished and fashioned by the Holy Spirit into a gem of matchless beauty to shine forever in the kingdom of God. Just as the architect, on beholding piles of brick and stone, pictures to himself a splendid edifice constructed out of the chaotic mass, so the disciple of Jesus, on gazing into the faces of his fellow-beings—many of whom are almost swallowed up in the mire of iniquity—realizes that by the power of the gospel they may be lifted upon of these debasing habits and unholy surroundings, and built into comely temples of the great King. Who can adequately picture the infinite capabilities and blessedness of the redeemed soul as it is changed by the power of God more and more into his own Image? No man—be he preacher or layman—can be a soul-saver who is not profoundly impressed with the preciousness of each human spirit, and its inexpressible need of regeneration through Christ. Why should there be such anxiety and toil for food and raiment and other temporalities, and such neglect of the spirit, if we believe that the Spirit will abide when "the stars are old and the sun grows cold?" "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

While He Lives.

Many a true disciple of the Lord Jesus goes through life, fighting its battles heroically, bearing its burdens uncomplainingly, and making the world better by his presence in it without ever receiving a word of commendation. When the end comes, flowers of brightest hue and sweetest aroma in vast abundance adorn his coffin, while the vocabulary of panegyric is exhausted in commemoration of his noble career. Not one flower would we pluck from his grave, not one syllable would we eliminate from his well-earned funeral eulogy; but would it not have been infinitely better if the brightness and fragrance of these flowers could have cheered him amid the toils and tribulations of life? And these words of postumous praise; how they would have strengthened him had they been spoken in his ear at some time of gloom and despondency. Words of commendation fitly spoken hurt no one, but are often of almost priceless value. Brother, don't save all your flowers for funerals. Little will your friend care for the flowers of earth when he shall have gone to the paradise of God. Give him your flowers as an expression of appreciation and affection while he lives. If you have a vase of incense for a friend, don't keep it sealed until you hear the tolling of his funeral bell.

Purposes, like eggs, unless they be hatched into action, will run into decay.—Samuel Smiles.

They Agreed.

A short time since a unique specimen of the tramp fraternity walked into the office of a certain clergyman of this city and poured into his ear a somewhat protracted tale of distress, closing with an appeal for financial aid. Whatever effect this stream of eloquence and pathos may have had upon the preacher's auditory nerves, it failed to reach its objective point—the pocket-book. When this fact became apparent, the peripatetic solicitor of alms took a pencil from his pocket and wrote something upon a sheet of paper lying upon the minister's desk; then, folding the paper, he handed it to the minister, said, "Good-morning," and walked out. Unfolding the paper, the minister read the following words, "Amor pecuniæ radix omnium malorum est." Fortunately the preacher remembered enough of the drill of school-boy days to enable him to render these words at once into vernacular as follows: "The love of money is the root of all evils." "Yes," soliloquized the minister, "the love of money is the root of all evils—tramplsm as well as the rest."

A Noble Institution.

A short time since we had the pleasure of paying a visit to Miss Sophie Wright's "Free Night School for Boys." Having done so, we desire to repeat with all possible emphasis what we have previously said in its praise. It is one of the noblest philanthropies in the city. More than four hundred boys and men, who otherwise could not attend school at all, are here receiving instruction that will fit them for lucrative work. Besides the ordinary elementary branches, the course includes algebra, geometry, bookkeeping, stenography and type-writing, all of which costs the pupil nothing. While the honor of originating and maintaining the institution belongs to Miss Wright, much praise is also due to her faculty, all of whom, with two exceptions, give their services without compensation. If all the sons and daughters of Adam were possessed of such a spirit, what a world this would be!

NEW BOOKS.

Progressive Lessons in Physical Education. AN INTRODUCTORY COURSE OF INSTRUCTION BASED ON THE SWEDISH SYSTEM. By Clara G. Baer, graduate of the Posse Gymnasium, Boston, Mass.; Director Physical Education, Newcomb College; Lecturer on Medical Gymnastics at the New Orleans Sanitarium and Training-School for Nurses; State Superintendent and Associate National Superintendent of Physical Education W. C. T. U. Used in the Public Schools of New Orleans. New Orleans: L. Graham & Son, Limited, Printers, 207-211 Baronne street. 1896. Price, 35 cents.

This little volume, arranged by Miss Baer to supplement her course of instruction to the teachers of the city schools, forms a valuable addition to the literature on gymnastics. The exercises are arranged for the school-room, and the lessons are intended as first steps in the practice of gymnastic exercises. They form the simplest progression for beginners, and should be used as first steps in physical education. The book is illustrated, and the exercises are fully and carefully explained, thus simplifying the instruction materially. Besides the progressive lessons, the book contains special exercises for correct standing and walking, breathing and vocal exercises, etc.; also a discussion as to the effects of exercise.

We bespeak for the work an extensive circulation and a career of usefulness. We rejoice to see a daughter of the South, and especially one whom we have the honor to claim as a personal friend, winning bright laurels in a new field of authorship.

A HISTORY OF METHODISM IN THE UNITED STATES. By Rev. James M. Buckley. In two volumes. Illustrated. New York: The Christian Literature Co. 1897. Vol. I.

We are in receipt of the above-named work, but have not had time to examine it sufficiently to give it a critical notice. Of course, we expect to find it meritorious. The distinguished editor of the New York Advocate never turns out a poor job. Mechanically the work is in the highest style of the book-maker's art. Paper, typography and binding are all that could be desired. A more extended notice will appear after a while.

The dramatization of "The Pilgrim's Progress" in a leading London theater has utterly failed. The cause of the failure is that the religious public that were expected to patronize it thought the whole affair irreverent, and stayed away, while ordinary theater-goers found it preternaturally dull, "a burlesque with all the fun out of it." It was a mere bait to catch non-theater-goers.—New York Advocate.

H. C. Morrison's Appeal.

In the ADVOCATE, of Feb. 4, an able writer, who uses three stars, claims by argument and an appeal to the Manual of Discipline that Morrison's continued preaching before and since his trial takes away his right to be heard in appeal. There is no doubt whatever that the Manual says so; yet no one present at the Richmond General Conference, or who has read the Daily Advocate publishing its proceedings, can be ignorant of the fact that the Manual is not law.

Your able contributor argues well. The impregnable difficulty before him is that paragraph 309 requires that "the records of the trial in the Quarterly Conference shall be laid before this committee, which records only shall be the evidence." The fact that Morrison has, or has not, obeyed the sentence of the court below, can not, by any process known to Methodist law, reach the committee trying the appeal. It could not do so in any Court of Appeal in Christendom. The appeal must be heard on the "records" alone. This will not hinder an after prosecution of Morrison for contumacy, if the Court of Appeal should reverse the finding of the Quarterly Conference.

Your correspondent fails at another point to recognize the fact that when Morrison returned his license and parchments to his presiding elder, that he could preach thereafter only as a layman; that he had voluntarily given up his rights as a Methodist preacher. There can be no proof, however, in "the records" that he has exercised ministerial functions since "the records" were made up, and the law rightfully refuses to allow any proof to be made from the outside.

Your correspondent's declaration that "the exercise, therefore, of ministerial functions after one has been expelled by due process of law vitiates the right of appeal, and is an estoppal upon the Annual Conference in entertaining the same," presupposes two facts not in "the records." First, that Morrison has been exercising "ministerial functions after he has been expelled." Second, that the preaching as a layman is the exercise of "ministerial functions." Laymen have in all ages of the church preached, but in only a few minor churches have such preachers been regarded as "exercising ministerial functions." In the New Testament use of the word "preach," and under primitive customs, laymen, both men and women, preached who were not regarded as "exercising ministerial functions." Our Dr. Garland often preached as a layman.

The writer does not believe for a moment in "second-blessing" theory. He is not in sympathy with the course taken by many of our evangelists; but it will be a deeper disaster than both of these grave errors to take illegal methods to right wrongs. Unauthorized evangelists disturb us, but only gross errors upon the part of administrators of law can put us to an open shame before the Christian world.

It was a grievous mistake for our Bro. Morrison to engage in a meeting in the face of a protest of a godly presiding elder and a faithful pastor, but he violated no law except the law of brotherly kindness and the apostolic injunction, "Let each esteem other better than themselves."

If the next General Conference sees best, it will be easy to make a law to correct these abuses. Such law should not, however, appear under the head of "duties of preachers in charge;" but under Section XI., forbidding local preachers to conduct services without the consent of the presiding elder, within whose district such services are proposed to be held.

A successful revivalist, writing to the Wesleyan Advocate, made this very remarkable statement: "I threw my brain, soul, tact and enthusiasm into getting subscribers for the paper. I worked for it as I did for revivals, and on the same ground—that it was necessary for the highest success of my pastorate." He is a wise master-builder, and knows the conditions necessary to make a revival permanent.—Central Methodist.

As will be seen from the official notice on our fifth page, Sister Mary L. Hargrove, widow of the Rev. T. B. Hargrove, of the North Mississippi Conference, has been elected to fill the vacancy in the faculty of Searritt Bible and Training-School caused by the death of Miss Holding. The church is to be congratulated.

NOTES.

Mrs. L. S. Long, wife of Rev. S. D. Long, of the Holston Conference, died on the sixth at Radford, Va.

We will be obliged to brethren in the patronizing Conferences for such news items as will be of interest to our readers.

The distinguished lawyer and statesman, John Randolph Tucker, died on the thirteenth at his home in Lexington, Va.

Sister Goar, wife of Rev. R. P. Goar, of the North Mississippi Conference, has been quite sick, but is now on the road to recovery.

Rev. F. N. Parker has made a fine beginning at Baton Rouge. Congregations are good, and the people are much pleased with their preacher.

The Tennessee Methodist has changed its name to The American Outlook, but, like Fanntleroy's painted horse, it is "the same old Bon."

We hear excellent reports concerning the work of Rev. L. S. Jones at Yazoo City. Congregations are good and the outlook decidedly encouraging.

Rev. G. M. Hull, of the Mississippi Conference, has been quite sick for some weeks, first with la grippe, then with measles. He is now slowly convalescing.

Rev. J. D. Harper, of the Louisiana Conference, has not been able to preach for a month on account of attack of la grippe. He expects to be able do full work from now on.

The membership and congregation of Felicity Street Church gave a reception recently to their pastor, Rev. J. F. Foster. The programme embraced good music, appropriate recitations and dainty refreshments. It was a very enjoyable affair.

Bro. A. M. Gurley died at the home of his son, F. A. Gurley, in Meridian, on the fourteenth, in his eighty-first year. Bro. Gurley had been a member of the Methodist Church from early manhood, and in his prime was an active worker in the church. He was thoroughly exemplary in all the relations of life, and commanded the respect and confidence of all who knew him.

By invitation of the W. F. M. Society, Bishop McCabe, of the M. E. Church, will deliver a missionary address at Rayne Memorial Church next Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock. The Bishop has a high reputation as a preacher, and especially as a missionary speaker. Those who are posted in church affairs know of his remarkable achievement of raising a million dollars a year while filling the office of Missionary Secretary. Our people will doubtless avail themselves of this opportunity to hear this magnate of our sister church. Come early if you want a seat.

In response to a request from the New York World asking for an expression of opinion anent the arbitration treaty, Bishop Galloway replied as follows:

Jackson, Miss., Feb. 1.
The World, New York:

Every consideration of humanity, international comity, patriotism, statesmanship and Christian brotherhood demand the adoption of the peace treaty pending in the Senate. Its defeat by partisanship or frivolous technicalities would be a crime and a national humiliation. In the name of a vast Christian constituency I would urge its speedy adoption.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

Rev. I. S. Hopkins, pastor of the First Church in Atlanta, Ga., has resigned his pastorate in order to accept an appointment at the hands of President McKinley. He has choice between the regency of Smithsonian Institute and the ministry to Greece. It is not yet known which he will accept. Dr. Hopkins was for several years president of Emory College as the successor of Atticus G. Haygood. Subsequently he was for several years president of the Georgia School of Technicological School. He is a man of pre-eminent ability, and has been much talked of as a suitable man for the Bishopric.

"Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah."

Please allow me to recommend to our preachers the "Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah," by Dr. Alfred Edorsheim, recently offered by Barbee & Smith for $2; usual price, $6. This book ranks with the "Life of Christ," by Dr. Weiss, of Berlin, and Dorner's great work on "The Person of Christ," as among the greatest contributions of the Christian era to the right conception of the person of Jesus. The earliest conflicts of thought in the church centered around the doctrine of the person of Christ.

Our century has seen a revival of interest in the department of Christian thought. We are realizing not only, as Buckner said, that the "character of Christ is the gospel," but that it is likewise the proof of the gospel. Our own denomination has also contributed to this literature. Haygood's "Man of Galilee" and Harrison's "Living Christ" are valuable additions to modern Christology.

Dr. Edorsheim's work is especially valuable as furnishing from the standpoint of an able, learned and reverent Jew a full account of the Jewish setting of the human life of our Lord. N. G. AUGUSTUS.

Announcement.

The Board of Managers of the Scarritt Bible and Training-school, at a meeting held in Kansas City, Mo., Tuesday, Jan. 13, 1897, elected Mrs. Mary L. Hargrove to fill the position of teacher of the Bible, made vacant by the death of Miss Elizabeth Holding. Mrs. Hargrove is well known throughout the entire church. Her office of recording secretary of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions brings her into touch with missionary workers, while her abundant and successful service for Christ as the wife of a Methodist minister has gained for her esteem and confidence wherever she has lived. Mrs. Hargreve has been thorough and diligent as a student of the Bible, and helpful and inspiring to her classes as a teacher of the Word. She brings to her new position well-trained powers of mind and consecration of heart. Her duties will begin in September.

By order of the Board.

A Pastor's Helper.

Pastors who contemplate holding their own revival meetings, and desire the help of a gospel singer to conduct their music, can get my services by addressing me. I use our Methodist Hymn and Tune Book, or any other, if pastor wants it.

I will try and be not only a help to pastor, but to his congregation, working up an interest for congregational singing, and teaching them songs they never knew were in their book. I often lead congregations with my beautiful silver cornet, and will sing some touching solos at any time pastor requests. Any pastor who may want me will please address me as follows:

Notice.

Dear Brethren in the Ministry: As you know, I was continued by the Board of Missions as agent for the Indian Mission in Mississippi, and I am very anxious to do all I can in the way of raising funds for the Mission. So I will be glad to visit the work of any brother not too far away and preach some night in the week, provided he will allow me to take a collection for the Mission.

Now, brethren, let me hear from you.

Your brother in Christ,

What Is the Law?

MR. EDITOR: I have waited some time on "Three Stars" for the law relative to "local preachers," requested some time since, and no response from him. Will you please remind him that there are many in this section of the country who are anxious to know just what and where the law, to which he so frequently alluded, is. He, it seems to me, ought to be willing to enlighten us.

I have made my first round of Quarterly Conferences, and have my work in hand for a forward movement all along the lines. We are expecting and working for greater success this year than we had last year. We are in a drouth-stricken portion of the State; but few, however, are in real distress. My pastors are all at their posts, and I believe, after the jar occasioned by a change or two, everything is really promising.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

BY REV. ROBERT H. WYNN.

Prayer Meeting Topic for February.

THE CHRIST OF ISAIAH.

FEB. 21—THE CROSS.

(Isa. liii, 1-9.)

In this passage Isaiah reaches the high water mark of evangelical prophecy, viewing the coming Messiah, as he does, under the very shadow of the cross. The author views the humiliation, sufferings and death of our Lord as already accomplished facts, and his portrayal of them is so vivid that one could easily suppose him to have lived, at the time of his writing, in the midst of the closing scenes of the Savior's passion, or one could easily imagine the passage to be a historic poem written by some one subsequent to the death of Christ. The date, however, is 712 B. C.

One very prominent feature of the passage is the prophecy that Christ should not correspond to the national idea of the coming Messiah, and that consequently the divine message concerning him would not be believed; that he should be unattractive to the Jewish people, and should be undervalued and rejected by them.

The fact of Christ's sufferings and death, as being vicarious in character—as being a sacrifice for our sins—is most clearly foretold. We see him as our great burden bearer (ver. 4); we see his intense physical and spiritual agony, all suffered in our behalf, "for our transgressions," "for our iniquities," to secure "our peace" and our healing (verses 5 and 6); we see the divine calmness of Christ in the midst of insult and death (ver. 7); we see his unjust and indecent judicial treatment (ver. 8); we see him put to death as a felon, and buried in a rich man's tomb (ver. 9).

Notes.

We hope that "Epworth League Echoes" will continue. The New Orleans Leaguers will be glad to welcome Bro. Clifford when he visits us.

The Union Epworth League of New Orleans met on Thursday evening, at Louisiana Avenue Church. Rev. P. H. Fontaine, pastor of Carrollton Church, is now president of the Union, and he is very enthusiastic.

Hurry up with the money pledged for the special missionary fund by the Leagues of Louisiana. Send to E. H. Prescott, 1030 Louisiana Ave.

Attention.

Rev. J. M. Henry, New Iberia, La., and Rev. R. H. Wynn, Algiers, La., desire to have the names of any persons who are thinking of attending the Conference in Toronto, in July, and who would like to be members of a party to take the trip together. The Conference will be the largest gathering of Methodists ever assembled. Let Louisiana and Mississippi be well represented.

A Disguised Enemy.

Chronic catarrh often makes its approach in disguise. Before a person knows it, he may become a victim of chronic catarrh. Its onset may be gradual, its development insidious, and at last the victim finds himself in the clutches of a tenacious disease. A slight cold, a tendency to sneeze, a fullness in the nose and head, fullness or crackling in the ears, stringy mucus in the throat, slight cough or wheeziness, snoring during sleep, any one of these symptoms should be regarded as a warning. What can be cured in the beginning in a week or two, by using Pe-ru-na, if allowed to become chronic, may require months of faithful treatment. You had better take Pe-ru-na now, for by and by, you may be obliged to take it a long time in order to get well. Pe-ru-na is the remedy for catarrh. Almost everybody knows that by hearsay and thousands know it by blessed experience.

The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, of Columbus, Ohio, are sending Dr. Hartman's latest book on chronic catarrh and climatic diseases of winter free of charge—64 pages instructively illustrated.

IN 1897.

FICTION: "The Martian," the new novel by DU MAURIER, the eagerly expected successor to "Trilby," begun in October Number, 1896, with illustrations from the author's drawings. A new novel by FRANK R. STOCKTON—developing a Twentieth Century Renaissance—full of humorous situation and characteristically illustrated. "A Pair of Patient Lovers," by WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS. Other striking novelettes by American authors. Short stories by MARK TWAIN, THOMAS NELSON PAGE, RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, OWEN WISTER, JOHN KENDRICK BANGS, RUTH MCENERY STUART, OCTAVE THANET, MARY E. WILKINS, and other popular writers.

SCIENCE: "Story of the Progress of Science during the Nineteenth Century," a series of papers by Dr. HENRY SMITH WILLIAMS, supplemented by contributions on special subjects by expert scientists. Articles on the relations of curious psychological manifestations to physiology by Dr. ANDREW WILSON.

AMERICAN FEATURES: "The Mexico of To-day," a series by CHARLES F. LUMMIS, splendidly illustrated—the result of a recent visit to Mexico undertaken for HARPER'S MAGAZINE. Mexico is preeminently a silver-producing country, and its monetary operations rest entirely on a silver basis. Owing to the keen discussion of certain economic problems in connection with issues of urgent importance in American politics, these papers will command general attention. "American Historical Papers," by WOODROW WILSON, JOHN BACH MACMASTER, and JAMES BARNES. The true story of "Sheridan's Ride," by Gen. G. A. FORSYTH. Continuation of HOWELLS'S "Personal Reminiscences" of eminent literary Americans.

AFRICA AND THE EAST: "White Man's Africa," a fully illustrated series of papers by POULTNEY BIGELOW, the result of personal observations during a recent trip to Africa, covering the whole field of European exploration of that country. Illustrated articles by STEPHEN BONSAL on the transformations going on in "Eastern Siberia," recently visited by the author. "Hungarian Sketches," written and drawn by F. HOPKINSON SMITH. The full story of the recent Coronation of the Czar, by RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, illustrated by R. CATON WOODVILLE, who was commissioned by Queen Victoria to paint a picture of the ceremony.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE

A Red-Letter Year for 1897.

THE ENTIRE NOVELTY of many of the plans for 1897 is noticeable. For instance, the series devoted to

"LONDON AS SEEN BY CHARLES DANA GIBSON." Mr. Gibson has not before appeared as a writer. He visited London last Summer for SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE, for the purpose of depicting with pen and pencil those scenes and types which the huge metropolis presents in endless variety.

Of like novelty is the first considerable

NOVEL BY RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, "Soldiers of Fortune." The hero is one of the most vigorous men that Mr. Davis has drawn. Illustrated by C. D. Gibson.

"THE CONDUCT OF GREAT BUSINESSES." A beautifully illustrated series of articles of which the following are already completed:
"The Great Department Store."
"The Management of a Great Hotel"
"The Working of the Bank."
"A Great Manufactory."

"UNDERGRADUATE LIFE IN AMERICAN COLLEGES." A series of articles touching upon the life of our older universities as represented by the doings of the students themselves.
Judge Henry E. Howland writes on "Undergraduate Life at Yale"
Mr. James Alexander on "Princeton," and
Robert Grant and Edward S. Martin on "Harvard."

"JAPAN AND CHINA SINCE THE WAR," will be a most interesting group of articles richly illustrated.

"THE UNQUIET SEX." Under the title of "The Unquiet Sex," Mrs. Helen Watterson Moody will write a series of articles: "Woman and Reforms," "The College-Bred Woman," "Woman's Clubs," and "The Case of Maria" (a paper on domestic service).

W. D. HOWELLS'S "STORY OF A PLAY." In this Mr. Howells gives us the best novel he has ever produced in his delightful vein of light comedy.

GEORGE W. CABLE. In addition to the fiction enumerated there will be a series of four short stories by George W. Cable, the only ones he has written for many years.

HOW TO TRAVEL WISELY with a minimum of wear and tear must be regarded as an art little understood. Mr. Lewis Morris Iddings, in two articles, will offer a variety of useful suggestions and data on "Ocean and Land Travel." This will be happily rounded by an article from Mr. Richard Harding Davis on "Travellers One Meets: Their Ways and Methods." The illustrations by American and foreign artists will be highly pertinent.

 It is impossible in a small space to even mention the many attractive features for 1897. A beautiful illustrated booklet has been prepared, which will be sent, postage paid, on request.

I always keep a vial of the Tabules upon my dressing table, and use them with confidence whenever occasion arises. For a disturbed condition of the digestive organs I know of nothing so good, and for an 'all-round' family remedy I do not believe there is anything better to be had."

FOUR YEARS IN HEAVEN.

BY M. E. A.

"Four years to-day since baby died,"
Four years she's been in heaven;
Four years since God in love recalled

Four years—O how our hearts have longed
For thee, our darling one!
And sometimes found it hard to say,
Father, thy will be done.

Four years—and though to us since then
Daughter and son are given,
Each fills his own, but not thy place,
Our baby girl in heaven.

Four years within the heavenly fold
Safe sheltered she has been,
Led by the tender Shepherd's hand
In pastures fair and green.

Four years—but in that blest abode
Time is not told by years;
O happy place, where God himself
Shall wipe away all tears.

Four years—ah! would we thee recall?
Father, thou knowest best,
And in thy love infinite
Didst take our babe to rest.

We do not ask her back, O Lord,
But this would crave of thee,
Grace so to live that we at last
Our precious one may see.

Righteous Skipping.

It used to be considered a bad habit to skip, when one was reading a book. But times have changed; opinions, prejudices, codes of ethics, standards of conduct—almost all the old things—have suffered more or less from that transforming process which always follows the sudden access of more light. It is no longer a sort of breach of morals to skip whole paragraphs and pages of books. Indeed, it has become the finest art of reading to skip wisely! What scholar now-a-days reads a book doggedly, mechanically through, and then draws a sign of satisfaction at the close, because he hasn't skipped a word? The modern reader must skip, ought to skip. There is at least an intellectual obligation upon him to do so. The art is, to know what to skip. When one skips wisely in his reading, he develops mental judgment, adds to his store of knowledge wheat unmixed with chaff, and saves something of God's most priceless gift—time.

So there is a certain virtue in skipping portions of books. That is one kind of righteous skipping—but only a small part of the whole.

There is a moral obligation resting upon us to skip certain records of experience—"forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto the things which are before." Skip the old depressing thoughts—drop them out of memory—lighten the wings of the spirit, seeking higher levels of life and hope. Don't carry a dummy of the burden which Christ has taken off your shoulders. Sing on your upward pilgrim path—don't sit down to mope. Skip the memory of old, forgiven, conquered sins and faults. It is righteous skipping.

Skip old sorrows. What good does it do to weep over them? If they have brought you any living inspirations or lessons, dwell on these. If you must needs keep your bottled tears, keep them where the sunshine may paint rainbows in them.

Skip vexations. Nobody ever profited by dwelling upon them. If your friend, your brother, your wife, your husband, drops a hasty word—for which, no doubt, in their secret hearts they are sorry immediately—forget it. If you do not cherish it, it is gone; it is as if it had not been. Oh, the Christlikeness of forgiving and forgetting!

Skip temptations, skip impure thoughts, skip complainings, skip the angry thought and word, skip everything that you are better without. What a good thing skipping is! How strange that people do not count it more of a virtue, as well as an accomplishment! There is a good deal more righteousness than we have thought, perhaps, in that simple, negative thing—a hiatus.

The Wages of Women.

Many different reasons are offered to explain the frequent under-pay of women. All observers agree that work done largely by those living with their parents is commonly done at a lower rate than what is done by those paying board or keeping house. The objection that women do not undertake work as a permanent occupation is now less and less urged, for it is found less valid than formerly. All Americans work at a given employment only until they can better their condition; and whether this is by matrimony or by change of employment makes little difference. The fact that more men have to support other persons tells for something, and yet the inquiries of the Society of Collegiate Alumnæ show that of 379 skilled women workers replying to their inquiry 157, or more than 41 per cent., contribute to such support. It is not uncommon, even in employing men, to give higher pay to men with families than to bachelors. Undoubtedly one great reason, often overlooked, why women are paid less than men for the same work is that men get added pay for what may be called general utility. Their pay is based not on regular work alone, but on possibility of service, this greater possibility resulting partly from physical strength, partly from customs of society, partly even from dress. One young woman questioned by the Collegiate Alumnæ, a telegraph operator, puts this very clearly. She writes: "Men in the same positions are worth more to their employer for the reason that any employer is free to call upon a man for any extra work. . . . His desk work may be worth no more, but his time is, as it can be utilized in a hundred different ways. For instance, in a railroad position such as mine, a man could be called upon at a few hours' notice to take a long trip, possibly traveling on freight trains; would go to the bank in the worst of weather, etc.; but what employer would call on a woman to do these things? . . . You can ask a man to work till late at night if necessary, but a woman's reputation would be attacked if she were seen going in and out of business houses at night. An employer knows this, and for that reason she is seldom asked to do so. But it all counts in the salary."—Report of Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics, 1894, p. 37.

I am satisfied that a good deal of the chafing and sometimes indignation felt by women at inequalities of pay would be mitigated by dwelling more on these things. Beyond the nominal quality of work, there is often a value implied for contingencies, in greater physical strength, handier clothing, knowledge of mechanics, ability to take the janitor's or porter's place if he falls in a fit, power of occasional overwork without suffering, ability to be out at all hours. All these capacities constitute a sort of floating capital for men's labor, while it is generally conceded on the other hand that women are neater, quieter, quicker, more methodical and, on the whole, more trustworthy. In time the difference will settle itself. Meanwhile the actual demand and supply does more to govern the matter than any number of petitions or abstract arguments.—T. W. H., in Harper's Bazar.

Discipline of the Wood-Pile.

Every human male man who possesses even a lingering taint of temper, should keep an axe and a wood-pile handy, that he may rush out and work off his wrath when it waxes fierce. There is nothing in this vain old world that will send a man back to his appointed work with a more wilted collar and a truer comprehension of himself than thirty minutes' wrestling with a full-flavored axe. He can use it so fiercely in the wood. All the fury of his nature, all the hate he feels for his enemy, he can infuse into the axe-handle; and how the chips will fly! Not very artistically, probably, but they will fly. And presently it begins to dawn upon the man that he is feeling more calm. Evidently he is experiencing a change of heart. He does not hate his enemy at all. He changes his stroke, and begins to chop on the system of Italian penmanship—the up-strokes heavy, and the down-strokes light. He rather loves his enemy now. At last he put all his failing strength in one terrific blow. He misses the tip with the axe, and smites the chopping block with the handle. A tingle, as though he had swallowed an alarm-clock, goes from elbow to hip and back again, the axe drops from his powerful hands, and a weak, limp, nerveless, perspiring, trembling, gasp ing thing, he staggers to the house, lies down on the first thing that looks like a lounge, and is ready to die. There isn't a fear or a fault in his heart. Death has no terrors, and life has no temptations for him. He has chopped out all his baser nature and he is just as ethereal and spiritual as he can be on this side of Jordan. It is a great medicine.—Burdette.

Sympathy.

Christ teaches us that all of his children are members of one body, and when one suffers all suffer. We ought to teach our Sunday schools the same thing. When one of our members is in trouble, all members should sympathize. On this account, every death, or severe accident or illness, should be noticed in the school. It is a good thing occasionally to allow the scholars to express their sympathy and love in a material way. The writer was present in a Sunday school one Sunday when the superintendent said: "I know of a little girl who is not able to be here today because she has no shoes to wear, and her mother is unable to get them for her just now. If any of you would like to help to buy her a pair of shoes, you may lay some money on the table as you go out. It will be given to the teacher in whose class the little girl is, and the shoes will be bought without anybody but myself and the teacher knowing who it is that gets them." It was wonderful how many of those scholars had pennies and nickels for that particular purpose, and more than $2 was left on the table, and the little girl was present on the next Sunday with a pair of new shoes, and with a happy heart.—International Evangel.

Childish Troubles.

A mother in Babyhood tells of her little 4 year-old Dora, who went across the street to play with a neighbor's child, but finding her gone, came back sobbing bitterly.

I rather laughed at her, saying, "What a foolish little girl!" My friend looked up from her book, saying: "Did you ever think that the disappointments that come to a child seem as much to them as do our greater troubles to us? My dear, if you have some great trouble, and tell it to me, you would think me most hard hearted to merely say, 'You foolish woman.'" I saw the point as I never had before, and Dora was soon made happy by mama's sympathy and a promise of a walk later on.

Sometimes congregations are heedless and blameworthy in that they desert a man they ought to stand by. A Scotch preacher was fortunate in this matter in his congregation according to the following story: A prison chaplain was recently appointed in a certain town. He was a man who greatly magnified his office, and, entering one of the cells on his first round of inspection, he with much pomposity thus addressed the prisoner who occupied it: "Well, sir, do you know who I am?" "No, nor I dinna care," was the curt reply. "Well, I am your prison chaplain." "Oal ye are; weel, I hae heard o'ye before." "And what did ye hear?" returned the chaplain, his curiosity getting the better of his dignity. "Weel," replied the prisoner, "I heerd the last two kirks ye were in ye preached them both empty, but I'll be hanged if ye'll find it sic' an easy matter tae dae the same wi' this ane."—Mid-Continent.

In the Air.

Says a well-known American writer: "If you have built castles in the air, your work need not be lost; that is where they should be. Now put the foundations under them." Most of us, even the most practical, at one time or another build castles in the air. What sort of castles are they? If unworthy, the sooner they dissolve the better. But, if worthy, do not let the vision perish; we may at once endeavor to lay a suitable foundation on which it may rest. And even if our castle be never actually reared, the effort to complete it will leave its impress on our character. Our lives must be the nobler for striving to attain our highest ideal, although we never reach it.

Men who do their work without enjoying it are like men carving statues with hatchets. The statue gets carved perhaps, and is a monument forever of the dogged perseverance of the artist; but there is a perpetual waste of toil, and there is no fine result in the end.—Phillips Brooks.

HYGIENE.

Hygiene of the Brain.

The nervous system in man directs the activities of the whole body. Not one organ in it can perform its functions except under the control of the nervous system. Cut the nerve that supplies the heart, or stomach, or lungs, the muscles and other organs with nervous energy and they cease to act. Injure the nervous system by excesses of any kind, or by over-strain, and the functions of the organs will also be restrained, lowered. They can not go on with ease or with comfort.

And there is a relation between the nervous system and the other organs. It controls all the other organs of the body for its own sake, for the better they work the better will its own work be. If the stomach falters in digesting food and there is poured into the blood stream crudely prepared material, then the brain will suffer; and so of the heart, the liver, the lungs, etc. Their perfect action promotes better nervous action in the same way as their imperfect action increases imperfect action in the brain. This makes clear an oft-repeated saying that the mind is intimately related to the body, or, in other words, the healthful action of the nervous system depends on the healthful action of all other parts of the body, and also the healthful action of all the organs of the body depends on the healthful action of the nervous system. This has not been sufficiently recognized by physicians and hygienists in the past. Take the course of hygiene during the last twenty five years. The greatest advance has been in the discovery of the relation of bacteria to disease. There are some who tell us that until this we had no firm basis for hygiene, and that previously this science rested on a slender foundation. I would not disparage any one's belief that this discovery is a very important one, and its value has not been over-rated, but it seems certain that the time is coming when we shall learn many of our diseases have their origin in an unhealthful condition of our nerves, that when this system is in perfect health, "well integrated," as Herbert Spencer would say, even diseases supposed to have their origin in germs will be far less frequent. Why? Because a perfect nervous system, infusing every organ of the body with health, will render man less liable to them. This I believe is one chief reason why some are, as physicians say, "immune" to many diseases. They can not "take them." There are those, no matter how much exposed to contagious diseases, who never take them. Others rarely have a cold or indigestion. A perfect nervous system presiding over the body protects every organ more or less perfectly from evil influences from external agencies, even from the action of bacteria.

Again, many diseases are quickly cured by establishing a healthy state of the brain. Even some forms of dyspepsia, constipation, bronchitis, melancholia, hysteria, often disappear when the nervous system has its activities perfectly established and adjusted to the condition of life.—Journal of Hygiene.

PERUVIANA

Absolutely essential in the successful treatment of Kidney, Liver, Bladder and Urinary Ailments, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Gravel, Gout, Female Irregularities and all diseases caused by neglected Kidney, Bladder and Urinary Ailments.

A FREE GIFT.

It has cured case after case of ten to thirty years standing, that had been given up by doctors as hopeless. This wonderful SPECIFIC is founded on nature and supported by common sense.

Sidney Higgins, of Liberty, Wisconsin, a prominent Justice of the Peace, described his sufferings as though knives were being thrust in his Kidneys. PERUVIANA cured him, and he asks for pamphlets that he may scatter the news.

Below we publish the portrait of the Hon. Walter Cleary, of Kentucky, who writes:

"It gives me unbounded pleasure, unsolicited, to say to you that your great PERUVIANA is undoubtedly the best Kidney medicine the present century has ever seen. I can truthfully say that after months of suffering, three bottles of your wonderful medicine entirely cured me.

Mrs. Marcia Morse, Columbus, Ohio, writes: "My God bless you! I feel very grateful to you for the good the medicine has done me."

Mr. J. W. King, a prominent farmer at Danville, Ill., writes that it cured him of Bright's Disease which two doctors pronounced incurable. Mrs. Serene Standley, of Shelburn, Ind., writes that she had tried many doctors and remedies and was about to give up in despair when induced to try PERUVIANA, which promptly cured her. Mrs. S. W. Butler, Belle, Tenn.; Miss Alice Ramsey, Glenlock, Tenn., and many other ladies join in testifying to the wonderful restorative and curative effects in all forms of Kidney and kindred ailments and all other serious troubles peculiar to women. Write promptly for this Free Gift as this generous offer will soon be withdrawn.

Prof. W. L. McGee.

A NOBLE LIFE. A TRIUMPHANT DEATH.

William Levi McGee, Professor of Agriculture in Clemson College, South Carolina, died Oct. 22, 1896.

His death, though tragic, presented such an exhibition of heroic fortitude and Christian triumph as elicited the admiration of all who beheld it. He had summoned his senior class in agriculture to explain the operation of some new piece of machinery. Cautioning the students not to approach too near, and making some movement to guard them against danger, he came in contact with the machinery himself, and received such injuries as resulted in his death in a few hours.

The son of Mr. B. H. and Mrs. M. E. McGee, he was born near Durant, Holmes county, Miss., March 22, 1862. When five years old he moved with his parents to Acona, in the same county, where he lived until 1881, when he left home to enter the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Starkville, Miss. As a student, he was soon recognized as one of the leaders of his class. He graduated with credit in June, 1885, and was employed for one year as a tutor in the college. The next year he was principal of a school at Enterprise, Miss. At the end of this year he was employed again at the A. and M. College - first as Assistant Professor of Mathematics, and later as Assistant Director of the Experiment Station.

In March, 1894, he resigned his position in the Mississippi A. and M. College to take the place of Assistant Professor of Agriculture in Clemson College, South Carolina. Here his sterling worth and ability came into recognition, and he was promoted and made Professor of Agriculture, winning the confidence and esteem of the president, E. B. Craighead, and his other co-laborers.

President S. D. Lee, of the Mississippi A. and M. College, writes of Prof. McGee in most complimentary terms: As "a man of fine intellectual attainments, cultured, and refined in sentiment and bearing; of remarkable common sense and balance, never swayed by excitement or passion;" "a safe counselor and a conscientious Christian gentleman."

About the time our young friend was leaving the A. and M. College, Gen. Lee summed up his high estimate in a few words addressed to President Craighead, saying: "I love McGee like a son, and it is hard to give him up; but a wider field is open to him in South Carolina, and I recommend him to you in unqualified terms. You will find him a man in whom you can place implicit trust."

Even in childhood he discovered those characteristics, which later on developed into a noble young manhood, into a life of early usefulness and all that was richer still in hope and future promise. He was loving and obedient to his parents, affectionate to his sisters and brother, truthful and honorable.

While yet a youth he joined the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of Rev. J. S. Oakley, becoming permanently located at the A. and M. College at Starkville, he identified himself with the church at that place; and for a year or two before he left he was an official member of the church.

As his pastor and presiding elder for several years at Starkville, it was my pleasure to know Prof. McGee personally, to note his many estimable qualities, and to witness his loyalty and liberality toward the church.

In South Carolina he maintained his Christian character above reproach, taking part in Sunday-school work, and leading, in his turn, the morning chapel exercises of the college.

In a memorial address delivered at Clemson College, President Craighead portrayed the character and death of Prof. McGee in words of very high commendation and of tender pathos. He spoke of his forgetfulness of self and thoughtfulness of others. "He forgot nothing, he remembered everybody, this heroic man, as he lay there breathing his young life away." He called over the names of his colleagues, grateful for their many kindnesses; repeatedly expressed his gratitude to the noble boys, his students, who stood around him to the last, striving by affectionate ministries to alleviate his suffering. He even remembered the little children whom he had so often made happy, and longed once more to look into their bright, innocent faces. The humble shoemaker and the negro boy who waited on his room were not forgotten. His pastor, Rev. Mr. Zimmerman, was kindly mentioned. "I always liked him," he said; "pay him fifteen dollars." He referred to his work in the college, saying he had tried to be unselfish and to work for the good of the whole college. "And so he did," said the president. "He gave all the strength of his noble young manhood to Clemson College." "He was unselfish, he was brave, he was magnanimous." "A man of the George Washington type," he was "clear-headed, perfectly poised." "Modesty was one of his distinguishing characteristics. Though a man of extensive information, he was yet simple as a child, modest as a woman." "Take him all in all, we shall not look upon his like again."

In the midst of his suffering, and while the tide of life was ebbing out, his thoughts turned again and again to the home of his childhood, to his sisters and aged father and mother. Of these latter he said, "You know I am their only living son, and they are old and infirm." He said he was ready to die; he was ready." "Such serenity," said President Craighead, "such self-composure, such forgetfulness of self, such thoughtfulness of others, I never witnessed in any men struck down without a moment's warning. No soldier on the field of battle, no martyr at the stake, ever displayed more heroism and fortitude in the face of death."

The death of our noble young friend was the grand culmination of a life based upon the principles of the gospel. It was a sublime scene of melting tenderness and Christian triumph, most assuring to every humble believer. His life should be an inspiration, an incentive to all to nobler and better living.

His remains, attended by President Craighead and three other members of the faculty of Clemson College, was brought to Acona, Miss., for burial. These were joined at Durant by Gen. S. D. Lee and two other members of the faculty of the A. and M. College. Funeral services were held on the twenty-fifth of October, attended by a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends. After a sermon by Rev. W. W. Mitchell, and tributes by Presidents Lee and Craighead, the body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Acona.

To the stricken ones, called to pass through "the deep waters," the memory of such a son and brother is a precious legacy. They are comforted by the assurance that he has only gone on before, having passed out into the brighter world beyond. T. C. WIER.

NELSON—Mrs. CORNELIA E. NELSON, daughter of Rev. R. G. and Mrs. Ann T. Christopher, was born in Greene county, Ala., May 11, 1824. In 1843 she was married to Col. Jas. M. DeLoach, who, in 1858, triumphantly passed from earth to heaven, committing his wife and four children to the care of that Father whom he had loved and served so faithfully. In 1872 Mrs. DeLoach was married to Mr. William Nelson, of Abbeville, Miss. After twelve happy years following this marriage she was again left a widow. On the evening of Jan. 3, 1897, she died in the home of her son-in-law, Rev. S. M. Thames, Aberdeen, Miss. We say she died; 'twere better written, "She walked with God, and was not, for God took her."

These graphic words fitly portray a career which, if not dazzling to the eyes of the world, was lovely in the sight of God, for it shed only good upon all who came within the radius of its influence. No sin, paroxysmal manifestations of religious zeal marked her Christian life. With lamp always burning, with a bright and steady light, she quietly awaited the coming of her Lord. The memory of our glorified friend abides with us, even as the perfume of some rare, sweet flower lingers after the flower itself has faded. Her deeds of kindness, her words of love, reared for her a monument more lasting than towering shaft or costly mausoleum. To all a friend, to God's itinerant servants she was doubly so, never tiring of ministering in anywise to their comfort or necessities. Many call her blessed, many weep tears of genuine love and sorrow that we see her face no more; still we will not wish her back. We can not know with what alluring accents the angels whispered, "Come, thou blessed of my Father!" We must not question the wisdom of God. A LOVING FRIEND.

BORNS - Died in Hazlehurst, Miss., Jan 28, 1897, Miss MARTHA ANN, daughter of John M. and Nancy Borns, in her fifty-third year. She was born in Smith county, Miss., Sept. 4, 1844. She was constitutionally afflicted from her birth; never knew good health. She was never married, and was the first-born of the family, and lived with her parents all her life. As such, she was like a mother to the younger children; was doubly dear to parents and children. She joined the Methodist Church when young, and knew only to be a Christian all her life. She was of the most affectionate disposition. Everything about the home looked to her as their friend, from a poor little wounded chicken to the largest domestic animal; looked to her and loved her. She was sick but a short time. Her last expression while dying (she could not speak) was to press her father's hand, as much as to tell him good-by. She fell asleep in Jesus without a struggle, and rests from affliction and sorrow; leaves her aged parents to follow on.

MAGRUDER—The subject of this memoir, HENRY A. MAGRUDER, was born in Madison county, Miss., Dec. 8, 1841, and died at his home in Camden, Miss., Dec. 18, 1896. Mr. Magruder was happily married to Miss Virginia Scott, of Madison county, Miss., May 10, 1871, who, with two precious little girls, mourn his loss. He was the father of seven children, five of whom preceded him to the glory world. Mr Magruder was not a member of any church, but was a nice, genteel, and courteous gentleman. I learn from his wife that he was converted a short time before his death, and intended uniting with the church soon; but the Lord called for him. May the blessings of God abide with the bereaved and heart-broken loved ones!

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Bible

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

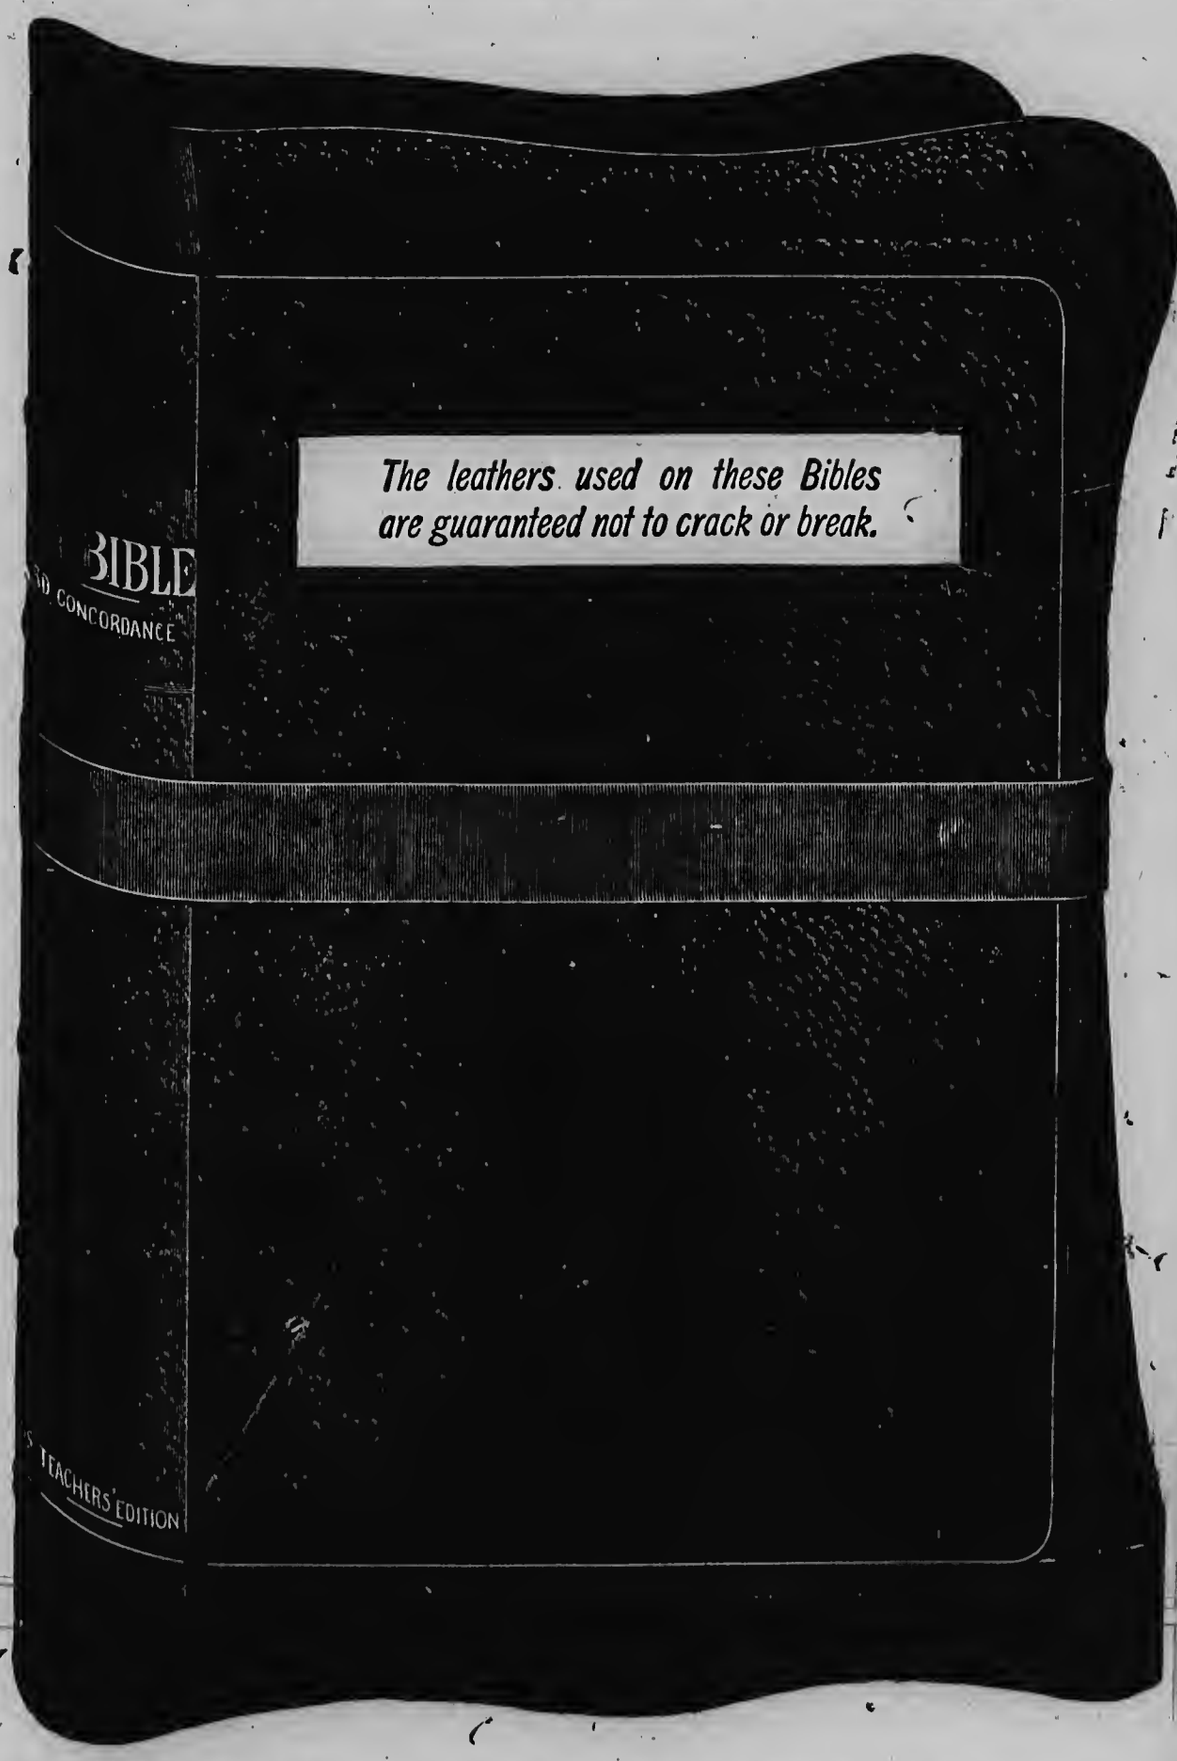
Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"



The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2 35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3 15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1 15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to February, '98 (A little later it will be March, '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Last month I cleared, after paying all expenses, $355.85; the month previous $264, and have at the same time attended to other duties. I believe any energetic person can do equally as well, as I have had very little experience. The Dish Washer is just lovely, and every family wants one, which makes selling very easy. I do no canvassing. People hear about the Dish Washer, and come or send for one. It is strange that a good, cheap washer has never before been put on the market. The Iron City Dish Washer fills this mill. With it you can wash and dry the dishes for a family of ten in two minutes without wetting the hands. As soon as people see the washer work they want one. You can make more money, and make it quicker than with any other household article on the market. I feel convinced that any lady or gentleman can make from $10 to $14 per day around home. My sister and brother have started in the business and are doing splendid. You can get full particulars by addressing the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Dept A 5 Sta. A, Pittsburg, Pa. They help you get started, then you can make money awfully fast.

Pastors who are really anxious to develop their churches in missionary activity would find it an excellent thing to have in every church a religious paper, putting an acute accent on religious. A paper that goes to the hearts of the people and into the homes of the people, to breathe a spirit of consecration and convey information, is the pastor's best helper. When we were a pastor, at our own charges often, we put a good paper into every home under its pastorate and found that nothing contributed more to the success of every line of work undertaken. Any pastor would do well to see which side of his bread is buttered in this business.—Missionary Messenger.

There is nothing useless to men of sense: clever people turn everything to account.—La Fontaine.

The office of the Pittsburg Post was burned on Feb. 14. The loss is $60,000.

The jury in a recent divorce case in South Dakota was composed of six men and six women.

The Department of Agriculture has estimated the corn crop of this country for last year at 2,283,000,000 bushels.

Selling cigarettes in Tennessee will be unlawful after May next, the Senate having indorsed the House bill to that effect.

The recently terrible cold weather has closed down almost altogether the work in the oil fields near Parkersburg, W. Va., throwing temporarily thousands of men out of employment.

Enormous purchases for the pulp mills will make this year's lumber cut in Maine larger than ever. The Kennebec Journal says that two mills will buy 15,000,000 feet of spruce to grind up.

The City Missionary Society of Boston has been in existence eighty years, and in that time has collected for the poor $1 218 620. For many years the Rev. Daniel W. Waldron has been its efficient secretary, and last year twenty three missionaries were employed.

The monster steamship Milwaukee, of the South African Steamship Company, of Liverpool, arrived at this port on Feb. 13. The carrying capacity of the vessel is 150,000 bushels of grain, 20 000 bales of cotton, and a large quantity of miscellaneous freight.

It was given out, some days ago, that application had been made to the Mayor for permission to resume, during Mardi Gras, the quasi boxing matches, or prize fights with gloves, at the amphitheatre of the Olympic Club, where such performances were once commonly held.

The steel pool has collapsed and the iron and steel market is highly agitated over the situation. The war of the iron kings, if not ended speedily, will extend to all branches of the industry. The Illinois Central railroad has taken advantage of the cheap rates, and has bought a supply of 50,000 tons of steel.

An official enrollment of the Christian Endeavor Societies shows the whole number of members to be 2 836 746. There are now over 47 000 societies; 231,000 of the young people connected with these organizations united with the different churches during the last year. Since 1896 they have received a grand total of 1 048 235 members.

The Executive Committee of the Protestant Episcopal Church met at the Bible House, New York, on Feb. 15, and voted to hold the next sessions of the congress at New Orleans, in November, 1897. The invitation to meet in New Orleans was sent by Bishop Sessums, of Louisiana, and many of the most prominent clergymen in the State.

The Bible upon which Major William McKinley will take his oath of office on the fourth of March as the President of the United States will be a very fine and elegant volume. The book will be donated to Major McKinley for this purpose as the gift of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. It is now being printed in Cincinnati by the Methodist Publishing House.

FOREIGN.

The Christian Endeavor movement now numbers 4,183 branches in Great Britain.

All Europe is watching the Cretan difficulty with the greatest anxiety, as a spark may set all Europe ablaze. Everybody is agreed that the present moment is the most critical since the powers intervened in Turkish affairs. The daring action of Greece in sending Prince George with a torpedo flotilla to Crete has caused a tremendous flutter in the European cabinets.

Greece has been warned by the powers not to annex the island of Crete. It was supposed some months ago that the Turks would enforce the constitution, but they have not, hence the present uprising in Crete, in which the Greeks seem likely to take part, and which may endanger the concert of the powers. Greece continues to send warships to the island, and the powers have landed marines there and are preparing to send more warships into the Mediterranean waters.

Some Books Lately Read.

Last year I bought from Bro. Bailey, our Conference colporteur, a copy of "Foreign Missions after a Century, by James S. Dennis, D. D., of the American Presbyterian Mission, Beirut, Syria." This very valuable book is constituted of six lectures delivered before the students of Princeton Theological Seminary in 1893. The titles are as follows: I. The Present Day Message of Foreign Missions to the Church; II. The Present Day Meaning of the Macedonian Vision; III. The Present Day Conflict of the Foreign Fields; IV. The Present Day Problems of Theory and Method in Missions; V. The Present Day Controversies of Christianity with Opposing Religions; and, VI. The Present Day Summary of Success. Each of these lectures was read with the avidity with which I devoured "Robinson Crusoe" when I was a boy of ten or eleven years of age. Each lecture is a masterpiece, strong, clear, instructive, and thrilling. Some passages are superbly eloquent. The whole book is helpful and suggestive, and he is a dull preacher who can not find therein suggestions and helps for at least a score of stirring missionary sermons. The price of the book is $1.50.

To my good friend and brother, Bishop Galloway, I am indebted for a copy of Cole Lectures for 1896—"Modern Missions: Their Evidential Value." These lectures are also six in number, their titles being as follows: I. The Question Stated; or, The Answering Voice of History; II. Christianity and Other Religions; III. Portable Evidences from Many Lands; IV. Fruits from Various Fields; V. The Message of Missions to the Church; VI. Lessons from Some Master Missionaries. This book was issued by our Nashville Publishing House, and is a good specimen of good printing, type, paper, and binding. It costs only $1. These lectures do not indicate the long time preparation shown by Dr. Dennis' lectures, nor the full experiential, personal knowledge so apparent in the latter; but they do indicate a breadth of knowledge, a depth of love for Christ and humanity, conscientious carefulness in preparation, exactness in statement, sustained argument and fervid eloquence which make the whole book an invaluable contribution to missionary literature. Surely out of the many Vanderbilt students and others who heard these delightful lectures, there must have been not a few whose hearts were made to burn with more fervent love to God and man, and before whose spiritual vision must have appeared not the man of Macedonia, but the man of Japan, China, or Korea; and some of them, no doubt, said in their hearts: "Here am I; send me!" This book ought to be in every preacher's library and every Sunday-school library and every home in our church.

A present was needed for one of my children, and books naually are sought for such purpose in our home. Every child has her or his own Bible —Oxford, International, or Holman. I knew of no better book to get than "A Circuit of the Globe," by Bishop Chas. B. Galloway. The book was ordered, and I was the first read it. Most of it had been read in the columns of the ADVOCATE in the shape of letters while the Bishop was traveling that circuit, which was much larger than was the first circuit he traveled as an itinerant Methodist preacher. While these letters were intensely interesting, there was too much time between their successive appearances for one to keep in mind all their good points; but in the book we have them brought together, and one can, by their aid, make the circuit in a day or two. There is not a dull page in the whole book." It is good for the young and for the old. It is as bright as a new silver dollar, and as attractive. It is worth being published in paper covers, reduced in price, and so given a wider circulation than it will otherwise have. It is a cheap book at $1 for those who have the $1; but ten times as many have a quarter which would be invested in so charming a narrative of travel by a man who kept eyes and ears open, and knows so well how to tell whatever he sees and learns. I wonder that our Sunday-school secretary has not already had the book incorporated in one or more of our Sunday-school libraries.

I would suggest to my brethren in the Mississippi Conference that they buy these three volumes from Rev. R. W. Bailey, Jackson, Miss.; then read "The Acts of the Apostles," "A Circuit of the Globe," "Modern Missions," and "Foreign Missions after a Century," reversing the order in which I read them. Then will they preach with keener delight to themselves and more to the edification of their hearers on this great subject than ever before.

And, brethren beloved, let us put into every Sunday-school library in our Conference that admirable biographical set of sixteen volumes, delivered by our Nashville Publishing House for $10, the set embracing the lives of Brainerd, Martyn, Chalmers, Paton, and other heroes whose lives and labors were honored of God.

And let us provide our respective districts with several of the circulating libraries which may be ordered of the Publishing House.

A Leaf from the Diary of the Rev. Thomas Nixon.

BY REV. J. M. WEEMS.

I returned home and remained on my father's farm, going occasionally with my uncle, John Cragg, to his appointments on the Richland circuit, until Oct. 3, 1812, when I was licensed to preach, and was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. At this point my mother came to me, and said: "You will have to go into all classes of society—the rich and the poor, the learned and the illiterate. Act prudently, and always be on your guard. By not attending to a few commonplace matters, I have known some preachers to completely hedge their way, and to destroy their usefulness among the people. Do not find fault with the people, nor speak unkindly of your food or bedding. Be sure not to become impatient with the children, but make friends of them. In holding family prayers, do not test the patience of the family by long searching for a chapter and a hymn, then read the longest chapter and sing the longest hymn you can find, and pray long and spiritless prayers. Always be ready for this service, as well as show your appreciation of everything done for you, and the women and children will be glad to see you come into their homes; and with these on your side you can not fail." After all these years I find these words of my now-sainted mother remain true.

The Tennessee Conference had just been organized, and held its session at Fountainhead. Here, for the first time, I met Bishops Asbury and McKendree. At the close of the Conference I was sent to the Somerset circuit in Kentucky, with James Given as my presiding elder. We had some gracious times, and several joined the church. Our next Conference was held at Reese Chapel, near Franklin, Tenn. All the preachers dreaded the New Madrid circuit, in the Missouri Territory. Just before the appointments were read I went off alone and prayed that I might be reconciled to my appointment. While at prayer New Madrid was suggested to my mind, and I said, "Yes, I will go there." Sure enough, I was sent out for this circuit, with Jesse Walker as my presiding elder. My father's family were greatly distressed when they learned where I was sent. We were then at war with Great Britain, and the Indians had murdered several families in the Territory. The night before I left we wrote mementoes for each other. The next morning, after praying for each other, I started alone for my circuit.

Our next Conference was held at Norvel's Camp Ground, in Logan county, Ky. Here, on the second of October, 1814, I was received into the Conference and ordained a deacon by Bishop Asbury. Here, also, I saw and heard Valentine Cook preach on the fall of Judas. At this Conference the Bishop called for volunteers for the Mississippi country, but the preachers were slow to offer for this work. I noticed the Bishop would fix his half-shut eyes on me, and watched me so long and so closely that I was becoming much embarrassed. Just before Conference adjourned I saw him take up his cane and broad-brim hat, and he asked, "Is Thomas Nixon in the house?" Some one said he was, and the Bishop replied, "I want to walk with him." As we were walking the following questions were put to me in rapid succession, and my answers given:

"Where is the place of your nativity?"

"South Carolina."

"Where did you travel last year?"

"The New Madrid circuit."

"Were you sick?"

"I had measles."

"Ah, you would have had that disease anywhere. Where does your father live?"

"In Murry county, Tenn."

"From your answers I would judge you to be a proper person for the Mississippi country."

To this I replied I was not of age, and could not volunteer to go; but if he sent me, I would go, though my father would regret it, as he thought that a very sickly country.

As we returned to the house he said to me with great emphasis: "I do not know but the very judgments you are afraid of will fall upon you elsewhere."

I was appointed to Lee circuit in Virginia. I traveled over the mountains at the head of the Cumberland river, and crossed over into Tennessee, with Bro. Axly as my presiding elder.

Epworth League Echoes.

BY REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD,
President Mississippi State Conference of Epworth Leagues.

Have reverence for sacred things.

Don't worship the church building, but yet remember that it is a house set apart for the worship of God.

Loud talking and gay laughter prior to the sanctuary services, as indulged in by some congregations, is sacrilegious.

The Epworth League stands for the "spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound mind," and then will follow, as a natural sequence, a spirit of humble devotion.

We have seen (in some places) young men light their cigarettes before leaving the house of God. How revolting! We hope none of the Leaguers smoke cigarettes anywhere.

Look at the minister while he preaches, and if you can consistently do so, say Amen! occasionally. This old-time Methodist custom seems to have "gone out of fashion" in many parts. We pray that it may never "die out."

As we shoulder the obligations of to-day and march forward to the music of celestial song to meet the responsibilities of to-morrow, God grant that we may not lose the holy fire and spiritual power which characterized the ministrations of our fathers.

Surely we all believe that the rescue of John Wesley from the flames during the conflagration at the Epworth rectory was providential. God had a great work for him to do.

Follow-Leaguer, have you been raised from a bed of sickness or saved from some approaching danger? Perhaps the Lord has already indicated the work he would have you do. Take up the cross at once, and "whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

We hope that our State Conference will be a veritable Pentecost. Come praying, believing, expecting, and God will not disappoint us.

God not only requires our time, but calls for some part of all the material things that pass through our hands. As we understand it, no one can afford to give less than one-tenth.

"Will a man rob God?" This is a terrible interrogatory. Examine yourself and see if you have withheld that which belongs to your Lord.

Send ten cents from each Leaguer to J. U. Rust, treasurer, Nashville, Tenn. This is the general assessment, and means ten cents per member per year to defray expenses of the central office at Nashville.

We hope that each League in Mississippi will send as much as five cents per member to Rev. J. A. Randolph, Macon, Miss., who is treasurer of the State Conference. This is not an assessment, but amount agreed upon and asked for by the State Executive Committee to defray the expenses of the State Conference. We hope this small amount asked for will be sent at once.

Be true to the principles of our holy religion, have faith in humanity, be loyal to the church and all her institutions—and by every means in your power hasten the "coming kingdom."

We thank Bro. Wynn for his kind remarks in Epworth League column anent our work.

Several Leagues have recently been organized in the bounds of the Grenada district, North Mississippi Conference. We hope to hear of others.

Water Valley, Miss., Feb 20, 1897.

Correspondence.

Letter from China.

DEAR FRIENDS: I have never written to you about our new appointment off up here in the "country." Over a year ago I laid myself liable to appointments, and Mrs. Fearn followed my example last April by giving over all her claims to Dr. Anne Walter into my keeping. We felt a little sad the night we got on our boat and started for our new station, for we had been so happy in our first home in China. We were happy, though, in the fact that God had given us this new work and responsibility, for we surely understand the passage, "For the laborers are few." Dzang Zoh has had several members of our Board, but none have ever stayed any number of years, so the work has suffered on account of having to change hands so often. We pray to stay here and be used of God in bringing these people to a saving knowledge of our Master.

Mrs. Fearn had to have a cry when we first saw our new home, and I had to admit it was not what one could desire, for it is a native house with some foreign improvements to make it more comfortable. We put our "little feelings" aside, got to work in earnest, and in a few days had things looking like home, and it looks more and more like home every day, for we are happy in living where God would have us, though it be not a palace. At the same time our native preacher, Bro. Ng, was engaged in renovating his home, which is also the chapel and day-school building. His living-rooms and the day-school are on the second floor; below is a room surrounding an open court, which is used as a chapel. Thus was the spacious firmament above the covering for the greater part of our chapel; consequently, when we had rain, these in the court had to raise their umbrellas, crowd into the narrow room around and opening into the court, or stay out in the street. I pray that God will put the needs of this work in Dzang Zoh on some brother's heart, and that I may soon hear from him in some definite way. Neither house belongs to the mission, but is rented, and is not adapted for the work in the least. We spend money remodeling and making comfortable these houses, which is all lost when we give them up, for the landlord allows nothing for these improvements. The lease on our house is up in two years, and I pray that before then a church and a parsonage may be near on to completion. We have a small room at home which we have converted into a dispensary, where we see patients every day. Our native preacher comes every day and preaches, while we see the patients, and talk to them about "our country," and then of "our Savior." We are so happy as we learn more and more of the language, and are able to tell them of "Jesus and his love." Dear friends, pray for us, that we may ever glorify our God among a people who know him not.

Dzang Zoh is a very pretty walled Chinese city of some eighty thousand souls. The wall makes a very pretty picture winding over the mountain, which is right near us. We climb the mountain quite often, and enjoy the beautiful view. On a clear day we can see the "Big Pagoda"—the largest in the world—in Suchow, thirty miles south, and on the north the Yangtse river, only ten miles away. There is only one family living on the part of the mountain near us, so we go to see them whenever we go up, and tell them we have come to visit them and help them to be less lonely; and then we tell them of a Friend who wants to stay with them always. We find they are very attentive, and with God's help we will lead them to Jesus. We find the Chinese are like all others, in the fact that if you get near the children, the parents become your friends; so, when we find a family like this, we give the children some pretty picture cards, an inexpensive toy, and we always are welcomed by the parents. I wonder if there are not a lot of little friends who could send us a lot of pretty picture cards, and thus help us reach the children, and through them the grown-up folks. Send what you have through the mail. You can find out what the postage rates are to China, and some one will weigh your package for you, so we will get them all right.

We are opening work in another city, some ten miles off, by going there every month to preach and hold a clinic. In the near future we hope to start a day-school, and thus place the gospel in another city in China. We both being doctors makes it easier for us to gain a hearing from the people in these strange cities, so we pray God may use us wonderfully. Pray for us, dear friends, as we labor for the Master.

Yours in his name,
J. B. FEARN.

Third International Convention of the Epworth League.

The First International Convention of the Epworth League was held in Cleveland in 1893; the second in Chattanooga, Tenn., in 1895, and the third will take place in Toronto, Canada, July 15-18.

Toronto is beautifully located on Lake Ontario, only a couple of hours' run by steamboat from the Niagara river. It has a population of two hundred thousand, and is a typical English city, very few of its people having been foreign-born. Its public parks are numerous and beautiful, the churches spacious and comfortable, and a number of the public buildings unusually large and attractive. Apart, however, from the natural beauty of the city, there are several features of special interest to the visitor.

Toronto has, by general admission, the best type of Sabbath observance of any city in America, if not in the world. On the Lord's day not an open shop or a moving street car is to be seen anywhere. The church attendance also exceeds that of any city on the continent. On a recent Sunday, by count, there were found to be 110,000 persons in the churches at the two services, 36,000 of these being in attendance at the Methodist Churches.

Toronto claims to have the largest and finest Methodist Church in the world, known as The Metropolitan. It occupies the centre of a square, and presents a most imposing appearance. Many of the other churches are spacious and beautiful.

There may be seen in Toronto an object-lesson in the form of a united Methodism. A few years ago there were six denominations of Methodists, but they have been happily unified into one great church, and the various branches of Methodism are now dwelling together in peace and prosperity.

The first International Convention, at Cleveland, was attended by five thousand delegates; the second, at Chattanooga, by ten thousand; and if the same ratio of increase be realized, there will be an attendance of at least twenty thousand at the third. Toronto is quite capable of handling this crowd, having a number of colleges that can be used in addition to the hotels. The citizens will open their homes to the visitors, and accommodation will be provided at reasonable rates. Very good board can be had from one to two dollars per day.

Instead of having one great place of meeting, it is the intention to utilize several audience-rooms that will seat congregations of not more than four thousand each. It is impossible for any speaker to make more than about that number hear with any comfort to himself or his hearers. The principal place of meeting will be the Massey Music Hall, which has seats for four thousand persons, and is said to be one of the most magnificent auditoriums in America. This splendid building was presented to the city about two years ago by the late H. A. Massey, who desired that Toronto should have a spacious and convenient place for holding oratoric concerts, lectures, etc., at reasonable prices. It has proved of great value in bringing conventions to the city. Two blocks from the Hall is located the Metropolitan Church, which will hold twenty-five hundred persons, and one block further on Cooke's Presbyterian Church, with a similar capacity, and Bond Street Congregational Church, scarcely less capacious, which have freely been placed at the disposal of the convention. In addition to these five buildings, it is the intention to fit up a large skating-rink, and provide it with chairs for four thousand people. Taking the Metropolitan Church as a central point, all the convention buildings are within two blocks. The Executive Committee having the local arrangements in charge is enthusiastic over the convention, and determined to spare no pains to make it successful. Any one desiring information should write to the secretary, Dr. W. S. Willmott, 41 Shuter street, Toronto.

The railway arrangements are not yet complete, but it is expected that single fare will be granted by all the companies. Efforts are being made to have all tickets good to stop over at leading points, and as long a limit as possible will be asked for, so that delegates may see something of Canada besides the beautiful city of Toronto.

VESPERS.

That chime of the bells! Its melody awaits
With an echo of infinite love!
It falls on my ear—I'm waiting to hear
The message it brings from above.

Let earth all be still; I bow at His will,
In response to this sweet vesper call;
The voice of His love speaks now from above,
In wonderful peace over all.

No evil to fear, my Shepherd is near,
With a rod and a staff for my stay;
The cool shadows fall, my last vesper call;
He'll keep me through all the dark way.

Church Song.

Why do we sing at a preaching service at all if the preached gospel is paramount to everything else? For the Lord has purposed, "by the foolishness of preaching, to save the world." He said also: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature;" "And lo I am with you alway, even to the end of the world." Church-houses are built and dedicated to the solemn service, and men are called, set apart, and heavenly inspired, to preach "the glorious gospel of our blessed God." The most important theme in all the universe is this blessed story proclaimed by God's own messenger with a heart warm with love to God and man, and a tongue aflame with burning eloquence, "touched with a live coal from off the altar of God." God made it thus, and millions of souls in glory now are praising him around the throne for the wondrous plan, and millions more yet on this side the river are rejoicing for its saving power. Then, indeed, if preaching is the one great plan to proclaim the glad tidings to a lost and ruined world, why sing at all at a preaching service? Surely we are not to engage in any service independent of the preaching, and that is not a part of the theme to be proclaimed that hour. All the services of reading the Scriptures, prayer and song are to be to the preached Word what John the Baptist was to Christ—introductory—and to prepare the way before the coming of the living gospel. They are helpful in this, but in this only. Any other service than preparatory would tend to distract the minds and hearts of the people from the subject of gospel proclamation, and would weaken instead of emphasizing it. But ever since the angel hand ushered into this world the "Word that was made flesh and dwelt among us," with the song of "Peace on earth, good-will toward men," singing has been an important attendant on the preached Word. But let not the spirit of this musical age betray us into the notion that the music of the song is of all importance. Music is heaven-born, and, we suppose, is to be our employment forever, and should have right of way over many things in this world, but not over the preached Word. Music has its own accent, its own pronunciation, its own arrangement of verse, and its own construction of sentences, to suit its different measures and musical arrangements. In some arrangements nothing can be intelligently rendered but the music; nothing understood by the listener but the music; and some of these songs are grand, breathing the melody and pathos of eternal love, and it seems that one would have to be void of even a soul not to enjoy them; and a number of these songs rendered at a concert or regular song service would be greatly enjoyed, and productive of much good; would be a blessing here and lead to eternal joy. Would we had many such services! But some choir leaders have not studied any part of the gospel but the song, and can not understand that the singing, to be helpful to preaching, must be of a different style of music. They seem to think the better and sweeter the song, the more appropriate on all occasions, and that the singer, being a good judge of music, ought to have full control of church song; and sometimes they do not take it kindly if the preacher prefers to select his own songs. They seem to think it a reflection on the singer's skill and taste.

Let us see. How is the world to be saved? "By the foolishness of preaching." Why do we sing at a preaching service? To help preach the Word by preparing the way. Who has charge of the preaching service? The preacher is called and inspired of God for that purpose. Then who is responsible to God and man for the success of that hour, and will have to give an account at the judgment for its failure? Of course, more than anyone else, the preacher. Then would it not be presumptive of the singer to ask the preacher to surrender to him the place that God called the preacher to without his consent, and to offer to take the responsibility that the preacher can not surrender to him if he would? He may give him the place, but he can not give him the responsibility. The preacher is the only one who can know exactly the theme to be emphasized, and that part that he expects the prayers, the songs, the Scripture lessons each to emphasize, to halt him in his plans may be at the loss of immortal souls. The songs should breathe the thought and spirit of the sermon to be helpful to it; therefore, the words of the hymn must speak something of the subject of the sermon, and the tune it is sung to must permit these words to be plainly and easily heard by the audience, or the song will not serve its true purpose. Sing it solemnly, sturdily, tenderly, for immortal interest hangs on every tone and every accent. Let us feel that the spirit of eternal truth is walking on every measured tone, and breathing his holy power on the wings of every word.

God bless the sacred song! May it girdle the earth and bear on its wings of eternal love souls for whom Christ died, up to the home of the blessed, to sing his praise forever and forever! J. H. SMITH.

Which Is It?

Is it the aim of the M. E. Church, North, in Southwest Louisiana to save souls or to gain territory? Are they careful to preach the gospel to them that have it not, lest they should build upon another man's foundation? It seems conclusive to us from some existing facts that to gain territory is their aim in the strict sense of the word. Especially so is this noticeable in the parts of the parishes of Acadia, Vermillion and Lafayette, that have fallen under the writer's observation. Their manner of procedure in these parts warrants the assumption that they, in a very considerable degree, have resorted to those means so threateningly and fearfully condemned in the Scribes and Pharisees by our Lord in Matt. xxiii, 15.

As a converting energy, they have thrown their influence more directly, if not wholly so, into that channel that is productive of denominational conversions rather than a turning of men from unto sin God.

Not far from here stands a monument that tells the tale too plainly to admit of other than a true conclusion. If you were to examine her register, you would find that her membership, to a very large degree, consists of members gathered—I will not say decoyed—from the M. E. Church, South; men and women that have been reared up in the Methodist doctrine, or faith, from infancy, knowing no other.

Now, if their true mission and aim is to save souls—which alone is the true glory of Methodism—why do they strive so eagerly to shepherdize a flock that have shepherds, and do offer them the very same kind of pasturage as they have been feeding on all their lives, if they be true representatives of the M. E. Church, North? If we were compelled to take the impression they would make upon the people as true premises, our only logical conclusion would be: The M. E. Church, South, is reprobate concerning the faith. Their smooth-worded and crafty way of representing their members of the great body of Methodism is in substance like this, e. g.: With open arms and flattering speech they extend the poor, deluded people the golden opportunity and pressing invitation to turn from their awful state of bondage and find rest from all their bitter strifes and contentions in the open arms of the dear old "mother church."—Yes, come, we know you are at enmity with brother or sister, and that you can not afford to give in, or ask their pardon. We know, too, that envy and strife are of the devil; but the devil is in that branch of the church, and not in you; so, come, and be identified with us. And so it happened that many of them went, and, I suppose, with the impression that they were leaving the devil behind. Of course, all such impressions (not to use a stronger term) are fallacies.

Times of Discouragement.

Times of discouragement have fallen upon many of God's most faithful servants, and for the time being the future looked dark. We cite some of these trying times.

Joshua vii, 7, 8: Joshua, after the defeat at Ai, cried out to God: "Alas, O Lord God, wherefore hast thou at all brought this people over Jordan, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to destroy us? Would to God we had been content, and dwelt on the other side Jordan! O Lord, what shall I say, when Israel turneth their backs before their enemies!" God bid him arise, cleanse the camp of sin, which was done, and God now said to him, "Fear not, neither be thou dismayed!" The sacred historian records his grand success, even subduing thirty-and-one kings.

Elijah was so heart-broken over Israel's condition that it is written of him (I. Kings xix, 4): "But he himself went a day's journey into the wilderness, and came and sat down under a juniper tree: and he requested for himself that he might die; and said, It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers." God fed him in a miraculous way, and told him there were seven thousand in Israel who had not bowed to Baal, and bid him go forth and anoint Hazael king of Syria, Jehu king of Israel, and Elisha to be prophet in his room. The most telling part of his remarkable life was after he fled from Ahab.

Job, third chapter: Job cursed the day in which he was born while he was passing through his deep affliction; yet he came forth to see a clear sky and to enjoy greater tokens of God's favor than ever before.

In these instances the discouragement arose from different sources. The first from disobedience of some who were under his authority, the second from the wicked rule of those in authority, and the third in a providential dealing with him in a secondary sense, i. e.: God permitting it, to develop greater faith, and to give the afflicted world an example of patience that would be a comfort for all time to come.

We ought to contend against discouragements, remembering that even in the midst of dark days the Lord can help and relieve. David inquires (Psalm xlii, 11): "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God." When the brethren met Paul (Acts xxviii, 15) "he thanked God, and took courage."

C. MCDONALD.

Caseyville, Miss., Jan. 28, 1897.

From "Aunt Betsey."

I am sorry that "C. M. P." did not read my piece with more care before attempting to answer it. If he had done so, he would have found that I made no objection to choir or new songs. I said, "We all like new songs, but some old ones should be mixed in with them." I said also that it is nice to have the choir sit on the front seats to lead the airs.

No, Alice Cary, I am not convinced against my will, as I had thoroughly weighed the matter before writing; not that I consider my opinion of any importance, only as it is voiced in that of others. Before writing, I heard a great many express themselves as I did. I did think that when "C. M. P." expressed himself as not having any veneration for grey hairs, if he would read his Bible more carefully, he would find that God expects us to respect the old.

Many thanks to Alice Cary for coming to my rescue. I was rather hard on solos. I suppose if Patti had sung a solo in the church, that would have been sufficient to consecrate her voice, in some people's opinion, as many of the less noted do not consecrate themselves any more.

"C. M. P." seems to think that envy is all that can cause anyone to object to solos or choirs. I think there is less cause for envy than any other vice. Life is too real and the world too large for envy. God gives to us all more than we take. Our lives are too full of blessings to be pining for the blessings of others.

Mrs. R. R. Parker, of Mississippi Conference
Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, of Louisiana Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Will you kindly allow me a small space in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to ask a question of the preachers of the North Mississippi Conference—the presiding elders, the station preachers, and the circuit riders? The question "that perplexes me" is this: Why is it that these preachers do not, or will not, help the district secretaries to organize and carry on the Parsonage and Home Mission work? We district secretaries go to the annual meeting each year, and listen to the different Conference officers make their reports of the great needs of the work; of the many, many calls for help that are constantly being made to the society. And our worthy treasurer, Mrs. Thayer, who is heart and soul thoroughly interested in this work, tells us, with tear-dimmed eyes, it is impossible for her to respond to these appeals for help, because of "lack of funds." Then our honored president will rise and say the "responsibility rests upon the shoulders of the district secretaries to raise these funds, and the only sure way it can be done is to organize new auxiliaries, and thereby replenish the treasury by an increase of paid-up dues." We district secretaries are impressed with the full import of this charge from our president, and are filled with renewed zeal and greater determination to try, by the help of our heavenly Father, to get "our district" throughly organized in this grand work.

We return home fully determined to do more work, and better work, than ever before; but, being total strangers to the members of the different appointments—not even knowing the name of a single woman of the church—we feel the first thing to be done is to ask the "preacher in charge" to help us; so we get the name of every preacher in the district, and write each one of them, specially and personally, the very nicest letter we are capable of doing, telling them how our hearts are enlisted in this "work for Christ," and how anxious we are to be fruitful servants in the Master's vineyard. And we ask that they will "kindly help us," for without their aid and cooperation we feel it is impossible for us to push the work onward. Will they not call the attention of the women of their congregation to the importance of every Christian woman enlisting in this home mission work? "Get them to appoint a time and place, and we will gladly come and help them to organize." But if they (the preachers) can not do more, will they only send to the district secretary the names of some of the women who are interested in church work? And thus we district secretaries send forth these appeals to the preachers, earnestly hoping and praying that they will meet with a hearty response, and result in much good done for the Master. But, alas! for our hopes and expectations of help from the preachers. Never a word do we hear from a single one of them. Surely common politeness would prompt our letters being at least acknowledged. And why this indifference on the part of our preachers? No class of men in the world seem to more fully appreciate the little word of four letters, h-e-l-p, than the itinerant, who so often owns "no spot of ground," or "cottage in the wilderness" It is hard to conceive how a Methodist preacher could be indifferent (much less opposed) to this work that does so much to provide comfortable homes for them and their loved ones. And if you think this a small work, only look at the report of the work done by the Parsonage and Home Mission. How many nice, comfortable parsonages to-day stand where less than five years ago stood only a rude hut, with so many ventilations on every side! It was impossible to keep out the wind and snow in Winter, or burning sunrays in Summer. And in many cases not even a hut could be had to shelter the preacher and his family; consequently, they were forced "to stay around" from place to place, which was anything but a pleasant arrangement. Certainly our preachers are not a selfish race of men, because pleasantly housed in a well-furnished, comfortable parsonage themselves, are indifferent, or care nothing for the needs of their less fortunate brethren.

It may be that some preachers are opposed to this woman's work, fearing it will take from their own collections; but what a mistaken idea! Does not the statistics show that the best reports on every line of church work come from those places where the women have the best organized Foreign and Home Mission Societies? We have been told that in some appointments here in our own district they have never heard of the Parsonage and Home Mission work. Whose fault is this—the preacher's, or whose? We firmly believe if every preacher in our Conference would only rally to the help of the district secretaries, and give the aid that Bro. Cogdell and a few others do, the day is not far distant when there would be a wide-awake, well-organized Parsonage and Home Auxiliary at every appointment within the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference, and the happy sequel would be a neat, well-furnished parsonage for every presiding elder, station and circuit rider. There would not be so many "needy preachers out West." We could more firmly establish and carry on our "mountain white" and "Cuban schools." There would be more "City Missions" and "Doors of Hope" for the poor, unfortunate, fallen outcasts.

Will not everyone of our preachers lay this to heart, and prayerfully consider their individual responsibility in this Home Mission work? For wide open stands the door of opportunity to do missionary work without having to cross the sea. Come to the help of the district secretaries, and help us to make this "decennial year" a year of glorious victory in this grand "work for Christ."

Mrs. J. S. Parker, president First Church Auxiliary, Jackson: "The W. F. M. S. of the First Methodist Church observed the Week of Prayer. Services were held each day at 10 A. M. These were well attended, and proved both interesting and profitable. A different leader was appointed for each service, and the work and the workers in our mission fields were the subjects of prayerful consideration.

"On Sunday evening a thanksgiving service was held in our church; Bro. Watkins, with his usual kindness, giving us the hour, and in his own delightful manner taking part in the exercises. We shall miss his ever-ready helpfulness and his cheery words of encouragement, though we doubt not our new pastor, Rev. Dr. DuBose, who is already winning golden opinions on every side, will be in full sympathy with our work.

"Our auxiliary is steadily increasing its membership. We have now seventy names on our roll—less one. So you see we are trying to do our part in the canvass for 100,000 members. Our lamented foreign secretary once said, 'No great movement, particularly if intended to be far-reaching in its results, can be nurtured in the lap of ease.' We must push the crusade with might and main.

"The attendance at our monthly meetings is good, but not what it should be. Oh, when will our women everywhere learn to come to the meetings, and to subscribe for the Woman's Missionary Advocate? I wish to call special attention to the December number of this, our official, organ, as being unusually full of articles replete with interest to our members. I believe if copies of it could be scattered broadcast among the auxiliaries, it would result in a greatly enlarged list of subscribers. The Woman's Missionary Advocate is opulent in the coinage of 'great hearts and great brains.'

"If we could, like Joan of Arc, evermore hear heavenly voices, and, if hearing, we heeded them, then the Voice of all voices would say to us, 'Go forward,' in tones we could not misinterpret."

Mrs. Trueheart's reports, December, January, February—Now adult auxiliaries: Meadville, 14 members; Rehoboth, 20 members; Woodville, 6 members; Perry Creek, — members; McNair, 9 members; Providence, 18 members; Madison (reorganized), 18 members; Millsaps College, Jackson, Miss., 20 members; Terry, 17 members; Scarritt Bible and Training-school, January: Mrs. E. J. Davis, $2.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY ADVOCATE.

Mrs. F. A. Butler, in February number: "Will the friends of our own missionary work remember that its prosperity depends largely on the financial success of the Woman's Missionary Advocate? It is not necessary to argue this question. Then, in the beginning of this new year of 1897, please renew your subscriptions, and try to secure new subscribers. Think how much is dependent on each renewal; think how many thousands of members there are—good, faithful members—who pay their dues, but never have subscribed even the small sum of fifty cents a year to this magazine, the only full exponent of our whole work! It is impossible to succeed as a missionary society and not keep well informed. Knowledge gives enthusiasm, and enthusiasm means working with God. When we work with him we can not fail. He, with all his power and might and majesty, can not save the world without the co-operation of his people, because, like the act of breathing, it is drawing in and giving out. Like faith and works, to believe and to do is his own law, and we must work together with Him."

The Reading of the Word.

A few striking incidents have recently come to our knowledge, from over the sea, of how simple reading of the New Testament, without a word of comment, has been blessed to the conversion of individuals of God's ancient people, the Jews. A young Israelite in the Crimea, a highly cultivated man, and thoroughly instructed in his own faith, became acquainted with several Christian families, and conceived the idea of writing a novel in which the families of the Jews and Christians should be contrasted. The better to understand the latter, he bought a New Testament, and had not long studied it before he became convinced that Jesus was the promised Messiah of his people.

In Berlin a Hebrew artist, desiring to find new subjects for pictures, began to search for them in the New Testament. As he read the moral beauty of the Savior made a deep impression upon him. The more he read the deeper was the impression, until he came to the profound conviction that Jesus was the Son of God.

Such, when once they begin to study it, is the influence of the New Testament upon those who have never known it. And yet how many of us Christians, who fancy we know it well, fail to find any decided evidence in our lives that we are gaining anything from it. We read it, but we do not grow by it. Is the reason that we are looking in it rather for doctrines, for truth, perhaps we may call it, than for Jesus Christ, who is the Truth? To know him, this is life eternal.—American Messenger.

Did it never occur to you that if you do not hear God's answer to prayer it may be not because he is dumb, but because you are deaf; not because he has no answer to give, but because you have not been listening for it that you might hear what that answer was? We are so busy with our service, so busy with our praying, that it does not occur to us to stop our own talking and listen if God has some answer to give us with "the still small voice."—Lyman Abbott, D. D.

It is a mistake to think that billingsgate, either in the pulpit or in the press, is a mark of genius. The slang-whanger may attract attention, but he can not command respect and admiration. Chasteness of language is the best clothing for vigor of thought. Extravagance and coarseness of speech will mar thought that is valuable in itself.—Recorder.

The warm sunshine and the gentle zephyr may melt the glacier which has bid defiance to the howling tempest; so the voice of kindness will touch the heart which no severity could subdue.

You help a man in proportion as you strengthen his faith. You injure him in proportion as you weaken it.—J. D. Kilburn.

To Whom it May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,
Editor Christian Advocate.

Agents Wanted

For War in Cuba, by Senor Quesada, Cuban representative at Washington. Endorsed by Cuban patriots. In tremendous demand. A bonanza for agents. Only $1.50. Big book, big commissions. Everybody wants the only authentic, reliable book. Outfits free. Credit given. Freight paid. Drop all trash, and make $200 a month with War in Cuba. Address to-day, THE NATIONAL BOOK CONCERN, 352-356 Dearborn St., Chicago.

I have used the "Mul-en-ol" for several years and can testify to its efficacy in "Colds," "Sore Throat," and especially in applying it externally for Rheumatism. Several friends have found it an almost immediate relief in Rheumatism. I have personal experience as to its healing properties in "Colds" and the throat diseases.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. L. Anderson, Rural Hill circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "We came to this charge in December from Holly Springs circuit. The sad parting from true, tried friends there was only compensated by the many evidences of love for God's servants here. The usual Christmas turkey and pounding came in season. The good cheer of open-hearted welcome to the neat, but unfinished parsonage thawed us out of our misgivings and for the time overcame previous discouragements. Our first Quarterly Conference convened on the twelfth instant. Presiding Elder J. H. Mitchell in full trim. Preacher's salary increased over last year. Pretty fair showing so far. Some improvement of churches and parsonages in progress. Pray for us. We need a Holy Ghost revival."

Rev. W. R. Williams, Brown's Creek, Feb. 9, 1897: "I have been received very kindly on Brown's Creek circuit. I was told before I got here that Brown's Creek was a hard place, and that my family would starve. I am proud to say that was a very sad mistake. We are faring sumptuously, and the prospects bid fair for a good year. I find many noble, good people away out in these rural districts. All they want is development and culture. I found no parsonage; but if all things work well, we will soon have a good parsonage all paid for. I found one Sunday-school. We have now three, and hope to soon have eight. That will be one at every church. I am putting my Conference claims before my people; have some in hand, some in subscription; hope to be able to get every dollar. Brethren, if we don't put this matter before our people in these rural districts, they will never know anything about it. Let us ask God to help us explain this matter to our people in a spiritual manner—in that way that will take no denial. There are many people that are all right if we will take just a little time to educate them on this subject. Bro. Thames once said to me I need not fear to talk to my people about this matter if I would always take God with me. That is the secret of success along this line."

Rev. W. J. Burt, Tyro, Miss., Feb. 9, 1897: "I have just returned from the wedding, where I officiated at the marriage of Mr. J. H. Carter and Mrs. Augusta McGinnis. The fee was nice and the dinner unsurpassed. Wife was with me. This makes the fifth couple we have joined in holy wedlock since we reached our new field of work. The first was Mr. Walter Balmer and Miss Ella Moore, the second was Mr. Wallace Oneal and Miss Ella Ragsdale, the third was Rev. Willie Atkins and Miss Susie Ragsdale, and the fourth was Mr. O. I. Grady and Miss Ella Jackson. But while we have enjoyed the pleasure of attending these nuptial feasts, we have also had to perform the painful duty of burying some of our dead. The first to die was Sister Matilda Eubanks, the next was Sister Amanda Jackson, and the last was her mother, Sister Henry Jackson. We were kindly received by the good people of Tyro. Our first quarterly meeting is a thing of the past. The weather was good; so was the attendance. The stewards made a good report. Dr. T. C. Wier, our presiding elder, was on hand, and preached Saturday and Sunday. His preaching was fine and appropriate. He did us all good. The occasion was one of interest and profit. We are meeting all our appointments. We are collecting some money for the improvement of the parsonage, and we are getting subscribers every week for The World for Christ. We have just bought Matthew Henry's Commentary and a half dozen volumes of Biblical Illustrator. We selected them from Bargain List No. 1 of the Christian Advocate."

Mrs. A. E. Boatner.

Mrs. A. E Boatner, relict of Col. I. H. Boatner, was born in 1833, and died Oct. 19, 1896.

On Monday, Oct. 19, at one o'clock, Mrs. Boatner passed peacefully to her eternal home after long years of waiting for her release. For a decade she had been an invalid, expecting her summons home at any day. She had so long been ready and expecting death, that there was no terror in the thought to her. A life of unselfish devotion to her husband in his long illness, to raising his orphaned nephews and nieces and self-sacrifice for her own children, was finished by many years of suffering, waiting on the edges of the river for her summons home. So intense the pain and suffering, sometimes she longed to go, but no murmuring or rebellion escaped her lips. She who had sacrificed and toiled for her dear ones for years, in suffering was administered to by loving hearts, while she dreaded the thought of being a constant cause of trouble to them.

For many years a devout member of the Methodist Church, having joined in her girlhood, her home was the minister's home; they ever were welcomed with a royal hospitality. With unclouded faith and repose upon her Savior, she was very clear and strong in her spiritual life, Though full of humility, yet when occasion demanded she courageously declared her convictions. Full of that spirit of forgiveness, which though wronged often and felt it deeply, yet forgave readily and harbored no resentment. Presiding over her household with a firm, but gentle and loving sway, which ruled without being felt. In the midst of long nights and weary days of suffering there was cheerfulness and no complaint at the Providence that caused her to suffer. So often had the shadow of death come to her door, that when she did go it was with a glad surprise she met her Lord waiting to welcome her home. Conscious up to within a few hours of her departure, she gave the same assurances of her readiness to depart and be with her Savior forevermore. Her last care was the welfare, spiritual and temporal, of her sister and children. In all the intense pain for two days before the final breaking up of her system these loved ones were on her heart, and to them she gave her dying commissions, wholly forgetful of self and her excruciating pain.

Before the war accustomed to all the luxuries of the successful planter's life, with many servants to superintend and do her smallest wish, when the war ended and swept away her wealth as in a night, freeing all the slaves, she entered into the new regime with that fortitude and true heroism of the Southern women all over the Southland. The work of raising out of the ashes a new happiness and prosperity was begun with full hope and vigorous endeavor, putting her hands to whatever was necessary for success.

She was made perfect through suffering—for a long voyage with many buffetings with disease and suffering was endured before the sweet release was given. Her large circle of friends will long remember her patient suffering, her cheerfulness in the midst of her invalid life, her gentle, but firm character, her unobtrusive, but clear Christian course that has been finished. She rests from her labors; her works will follow after. Happiness, peace, joy forevermore is her lot on the other shore.

S. S. KEENER.

FOOSE—MAUDE ADELE, little daughter of Rev. D. N. and Mrs. Hettie J. Foose, was born Dec. 22, 1892, and died Nov. 10, 1896 A strong, robust, vigorous child, no one thought that her life would be so short; but an obstinate membraneous croup took away the precocious child.

Little Maude, though less than four years old, loved the Sunday-school. Every Sunday she came with her hand full of flowers, her face full of sunshine, her heart full of interest. How we miss her presence in the infant class room! Is it strange that God wanted such a spirit to join his infant class in the skies?

But Maude's special attrahent quality was her fervid fondness for music. God richly endowed her with a musical mind. The mocking bird, under the inspiration of our southern skies and sunny gardens, never possessed a fuller fountain of melody than burst from this song filled soul. She carried a tune perfectly, caught every air that fell upon her ear and kept it in her memory. When death was in her face and her voice had died to a faint whisper, her grief-stricken father tried to sing "At the cross," and when his sobs would displace the words the dying child, with her undying love for song, would fill in the broken stanzas. Her favorite song began with these words: "A little childish voice is stilled."

Now, she's gone! Is it strange that God wanted such a voice to sing in his choir? Her voice always attuned to song, she sings a sweeter strain to-day. With a sense of personal grief, I commend the loved ones to the unfailing love of God.

J. C. PARK.

REILY—On Jan 31, 1897, our heavenly Father, who doeth all things well, allowed the angel of death to enter the home of Bro. and Sister Cason Reily, at Collinston, La., and snatch from their fond embrace their little cherub, LILLIAN, aged one year three months and ten days. The fair flower thus plucked in the freshness of its exquisite bloom, is not doomed to wither, but is borne away to take its place in the bouquet that Christ holds, which fills heaven with its eternal perfume. "Suffer little children to come unto me," is the welcoming voice that rings through the ages like sweet bells of consolation.

Little Lillian, though so young, had by her sweet baby ways entwined herself around the hearts of papa and mama. Only it seems so hard to give up our little darlings; we should never murmur or complain. Though the hand of death hath closed Lillian's eyes, yet they will be opened wide again by the shining spirit of the resurrection, and he waiting and beckoning to sorrowing papa and mama to come up higher.

May God give Bro. and Sister Reily grace and strength to bow with resignation before the stroke that has fallen so heavily, and may the blessed Savior in his own time make you an unbroken family in heaven!

Nervous

People wonder why their nerves are so weak; why they get tired so easily; why they do not sleep naturally; why they have frequent headaches, indigestion and Nervous Dyspepsia. The explanation is simple. It is found in that impure blood feeding the nerves on refuse instead of the elements of strength and vigor. Hood's Sarsaparilla feeds the nerves pure, rich blood; gives natural sleep, good digestion, is the true remedy for all nervous troubles.

Cupid's arrows fly straightest in the light of a clear complexion, bright eyes and rosy lips. The woman who is vigorously healthy is sure to be attractive. She will have beauty and magnetism of health. As she loses health, she will surely lose beauty. Hollows in the cheeks, dullness in the eyes, muddiness in the complexion—one or all—are sure to result from ill-health.

Nine times in ten ill-health in women means an unhealthy condition of the organs distinctly feminine. A slight disorder here will put the whole woman out of order. Ordinarily when a woman is sick, she will find that the trouble is here. Headaches, neuralgia, sleeplessness, nervousness generally come from the same cause. These things are serious, but they can be cured. Any disease or weakness of the female organism can be surely and completely cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Thousands of grateful women have testified to its beneficial results. Among them Mrs Roscoe Vanover, of Robinson Creek, Pike Co., Ky., who writes:

"I wish to express my thanks to you for the good I have received from your 'Favorite Prescription.' I have used it at different times for the last five years, and always with the most gratifying results. But the greatest good received by the 'Favorite Prescription' was about four months ago when my last baby was born. I was afflicted with 'child-bed fever.' Instead of sending after the doctor, I used the 'Prescription' and was cured. A lady friend of mine was similarly afflicted and sent after the doctor and took his remedies and died. I am now 27 years old, weigh 147 pounds, the mother of five children, and am enjoying the best of health."

If you would like to see more of these testimonials, and to find out all about Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, you should send for a copy of the "Common Sense Medical Adviser." This is Dr. Pierce's 1,008 page book, 680,000 of which have been sold at the regular price, of $1.50 per volume. The new edition, paper-bound, of half a million is being distributed absolutely free to those who will send 21 one-cent stamps, to pay cost of mailing only, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y. If French cloth binding is desired, send 10 cents extra, 31 cents in all.

For labor, the common lot of man,
Is part of a kind Creator's plan,
And he is a king whose brow is wel
With the pearl-gemmed crown of honest toweal.

Some glorious day, this understood,
All toilers will be a brotherhood,
With brain or hand the purposes one,
And the master workman, God's own Son.
—Myra Goodwin Plantz, in S. S. Times.

It is better to whistle than to whine.

Sometimes the best way to remove an obstacle that lies in your pathway is to climb over it.

It does not pay to stop and kick every canine that barks at you as you march along the highway of duty.

It is not so much our difference of opinion that does us the mischief, but the mismanagement of that difference.—Philip Henry.

If the machinery of Christian service does not work smoothly, oil it with love. Then shall you be able to "do the will of God on earth as angels do it in heaven."

The next duty for you to perform is the one that lies nearest at hand. Perform it to the very best of your ability, and you will be in better shape for taking up the next.

Tasso replied to a proposition that he should take vengeance on a man who had injured him: "I do not wish to deprive him either of his goods, his honor, or his life. I only wish to deprive him of his ill-will."

Some read books only with a view to find fault, while others read only to be taught; the former are like venomous spiders, extracting a poisonous quality, where the latter, like the bees, sip out a sweet and profitable juice.—Exchange.

It may become your duty sometimes to brush a fly off the nose of a brother, but a sledge hammer is not the best thing to do it with. And in like manner it is not best, as a rule, to correct a brother by breaking his heart or damaging his influence.—Baptist Standard.

Almost the whole life of Jesus of Nazareth was spent in "doing good"—ministering in one way or another to the happiness of men. And those to whom he ministered were, for the most part, not good men, not lovely men, not personal friends; they were of all classes of society, and many of them were as unlovely persons as you would meet in a day's travel. No matter; our Savior saw in each a soul made in the image of God. If you want to learn the secret of a happy life, sit at his feet. First, get your own soul and life in harmony with the divine law, and then do whatsoever your hands find to do to promote the happiness of your fellowmen, regardless of the artificial distinctions created by the conventionalities of a godless world. Try this for one year, and you will never abandon it.

Self-Denial.

Self-denial, though an unpopular and much-neglected duty, is as necessary to the maintenance and development of a sound Christian experience as is prayer or the study of the Scriptures. It is ever the companion of true worship, which, without it, is an offense unto God. Says Dr. Marcus Dodds: "If the Christian indulges in the pleasures of life as freely as other men; if he is unconscious of any severity of self-restraint; if he denies himself nothing which others enjoy, he proves that he has no higher aim than they, and can, of course, win no higher prize." He who, in his eagerness for self-gratification, is unwilling to practice self-restraint, or to forego some temporal good for the sake of others, is a stranger to the spirit of Christ. For "they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." The Master performed none of his miracles for his own benefit or glory. They were all wrought for the diseased and the suffering, the hungry and the heart-broken.

To be a Christian means above all things to be a self-denying man—that is, not only an unselfish one, but also one who controls his passions and appetites, and brings them into subjection to the will of God. The practice of self-denial signifies such regulation of our habits, desires and inclinations as to promote the work of grace both in our own hearts and in the world. The Christian must ever be on his guard against the excessive gratification of his desires and appetites, else what is natural and innocent will become sinful. We are to seek, not the suppression of self, but of selfishness. The grosser forms of sin have little attraction for many of our race. We are all, however, more or less under the dominion of selfishness. It is so insidious and prevalent a sin that its presence is scarcely noted. Like the magic skin that was supposed to invest its wearer with the power to obtain whatever he wished, but with every gratification shrunk in dimensions until it crushed him to death; so self-indulgence produces an atrophy of the moral and spiritual faculties, and at last spiritual death. How exceedingly strong is the temptation to exalt our own gratification and advancement above the claims of God and the needs of humanity.

We are not to suppose for a moment that by the practice of self-denial we can merit the divine favor or forgiveness. Imbued with this idea, the monks and hermits of the Middle Ages resorted to fasts, penances, and numerous austerities, hoping thereby to satisfy conscience and climb the heights of holiness. Many in the Romish Church to-day thus believe and act. Probably no class of people in the world are more rigorous in the observance of self-denial than are the Buddhists of the East, but with them self-denial is an end in itself. As an act of self-denial a man might "bestow all his goods to feed the poor," or renounce every known pleasure, and yet not find peace with God. Neither asceticism, nor any form of self-denial, can of itself secure pardon and the comfort of the Holy Ghost. To the Christian, self-denial is but the outward expression of unreserved devotion to Christ. There is no sharper test of our possession of the Christ-spirit. The church of to-day is not suffering from the lack of members, of machinery, of wealth, or influence; but how great is the lack of self-denial! While by no means all fail to practice self-denial, a vast multitude scarcely know the a, b, c, of this highly important duty. Some persons are religious so long as their religious duties do not conflict with business or pleasure, but as for self-abnegation, they will have none of it. It is amazing with what a small amount of self-denial and liberality the average Christian contents himself. Influenced by the teachings and example of Romanism, many Protestants seem to have the idea that a short season of prayer and abstinence from ordinary pleasures will atone for sins and shortcomings during the rest of the year. This is entirely contrary to the teachings of the New Testament. Christ demands joyful, but constant obedience and habitual as well as willing self-denial. Whatever other qualities we may possess, if there is no spirit of self-sacrifice, no practice of self-abnegation, the spiritual life will be dwarfed, unfruitful and joyless.

Riches have so increased, and comforts and luxuries have so multiplied in this age, that the Spartan simplicity and hardihood of our forefathers are almost forgotten. As civilization advances, wants increase, nor is the temperate gratification of these sinful. These new wants and conditions, however, must be met by new forms of self-restraint and self-denial. To live in the enjoyment of the countless blessings and advantages of modern civilization without denying ourselves some pleasures and luxuries from time to time, without making sacrifices for the good of others, is to prove ourselves Christians only in name.

The church has a goodly number of well-to-do members who give liberally of their substance; but how small is the number whose gifts involve self-denial—that which makes an offering precious in the sight of God. What a shame that thousands who dress in costly apparel, and live in comfort and ease, give but a pittance for the spread of the gospel! We are not making a tirade against personal adornment, or generous living; but we are sure that many, perhaps we might say most, church members spend far more in needless extravagance in the way of hurtful self-indulgence than for the support of the church. Strangely enough, when people begin to economize, they usually start with the church. Rather than practice a little self-denial themselves, they let their pastor go unpaid, and force the missionaries to cut down expenses to bare necessities. Our present missionary debt could be paid in a very short time if our members would practice even a very moderate amount of self-denial. Yea, we believe that this debt could be paid within a few months without any self-denial worthy of the name. The fruit and confection bill of many a household for a single month is far in excess of its total contribution to religious purposes for a whole year. Some who claim to be too poor to pay anything to the Lord never think of doing without a single accustomed luxury. Many spend five times as much for amusement and pleasure—theatricals and the like—as for the cause of Christ. Dollar after dollar goes for worthless, if not hurtful, fiction, for mere ornaments, for cigars and tobacco, while the cause of missions—the grandest work of the church of God—gets but a few dimes and coppers. Such thoughtless selfishness is a monstrous sin.

What a rebuke to the extravagance and self-indulgence of many in our Zion is the devoted self-denial of some recent converts from heathenism! As Bishop Galloway remarks, "There can be no doubt of the sincere faith of those humble Christians in Ceylon, who are giving their labor when needed, and tithing their poverty for the Lord, taking out a handful of rice from every day's meal, and consecrating it to God."

In some instances, far more self-denial is involved in the gift of one's time to some noble enterprise, or to nursing the sick, than in the gift of sums of money. The mother who foregoes the pleasures of society in order to devote herself to the intellectual and religious teaching of her children exhibits self-denial of the noblest type. Equally praiseworthy is the conduct of parents who, coveting an education for their offspring, make all sorts of sacrifices that the means may be forthcoming. He who foregoes a pleasure trip that he may wait upon the sick, or that he may give the money thus saved to some benevolent cause, practices the true self-denial.

A great deal passes for self-denial that is not the genuine article. To part with that which we do not esteem, or which costs no effort, can hardly be called self-denial. The offering most acceptable to God, whether of time, money, labor, represents some measure of sacrifice. David once refused to offer sacrifice of that which cost him nothing. Says Dr. Joseph Parker: "Do not say that you have given yourselves to Christ, if you are keeping back anything from him. We do not want the things which you are ready to give; we want things which you are not ready to part with." The beggar appealed to the cardinal for a penny; the cardinal gave him his blessing; the beggar returned the blessing, saying, "If the blessing had been worth a penny, you would not have given it to me. Can a man give who does not feel it? He may part with his money, but has he given it? Only he gives who smarts, who feels, who gives out of his poverty and beyond his poverty."

The Law of Appeal.

A writer in the last issue of the ADVOCATE, who sees two stars, announces a doctrine of appeal that is rather novel in Methodism. He argues that a man's conduct toward the court below and its sentence have no effect upon his right to have that sentence revised and reversed by a higher court. It is true, he admits that the Manual of the Discipline says the sentence must be "submitted to" as one condition of appeal, but answers that by saying, "The Manual is not law." Just so, as everybody knows; but after the test of twenty-eight years its expositions of law and commentaries upon law have been almost invariably accepted as correct and authoritative. Bishop McTyeire had a judicial mind, and was profoundly versed in both the history and philosophy of ecclesiastical law. More clearly than any law writer in Methodism has he saved us from mistakes of those who would push to the extreme the parallelism between civil and ecclesiastical jurisprudence. That is the natural, but fatal, error of "Two Stars."

He quotes paragraph 309, which reads as follows, "The records of the trial in the Quarterly Conference shall be laid before this committee, which records only shall be the evidence;" and asserts that "the appeal must be heard on the 'records' alone." That position is manifestly incorrect and unsustained by a single precedent. When the Annual Conference determines to entertain the appeal, then, of course, the case proceeds to trial on the records, "which records only shall be the evidence." Other evidence, outside the records, can not be introduced in an appeal trial before a higher court. But the Annual Conference—the court applied to for appeal—is not confined to the records in determining whether or not the appeal should be entertained. If not, why should the question ever be put to vote, whether or not an appeal should be heard? According to the doctrine of "Two Stars," the record should go to the "committee" and the appeal heard, without ever raising the question of the right to be heard by the higher court. On that point the Manual of the Discipline says that "the court appealed to, and not the court appealed from, judges whether he has a right to appeal." And that view certainly obtained in that General Conference, at Richmond, to which "Two Stars" refers, where a long and heated debate was heard over the question of entertaining an appeal from the North Texas Conference.

And this is also the practice in the Methodist Episcopal Church, whose body of law is almost identical with our own. Bishop Merrill, in his "Digest of Methodist Law," page 238, says: "A member may forfeit his right of appeal by absenting himself from the trial, . . . by contumacious treatment of the church and its authority. . . . The idea is held that whoever would avail himself of the right of appeal must conduct himself so as to be in condition to enjoy the benefit which the successful prosecution of his appeal would bring to him." Here we have the two great jurists and commentators on church law in in both branches of Episcopal Methodism in perfect accord on the doctrine of appeal. And their views are sustained by abundant precedents and broad practical wisdom.

The other position of "Two Stars" that, in continuing to preach, a man is not contumacious if he surrenders to his presiding elder his license and parchments, would be amusing if it were not monstrous. An expelled preacher has only to tender his parchments, therefore, in order to continue uninterrupted and with approval his ministry of preaching. According to this doctrine he simply becomes a layman, and, like other illustrious and saintly men, can preach right on as a layman.

There are two fatal objections to this novel contention: (1) The preacher can not become a layman in the church who has been expelled from the ministry and membership of the church. (2) He could not very consistently ask for the restoration of authority to preach when he has never ceased preaching. The Manual of the Discipline very properly says: "The appeal does not suspend the operation of the decision or sentence appealed from, but only its finality." So much for the law of appeal about which there can hardly be two opinions.

"Two Stars" is eminently correct when he says the use of "illegal methods to right wrongs" would bring upon the church "deeper disaster" than the wrongs themselves. But in this assertion he assumes that "illegal methods" have been employed in the case discussed, which is as emphatically denied by those entrusted with its administration. Whether or not "illegal methods" were used would have been passed upon by the court of appeal had not the brother forfeited his right by contumacious conduct.

SOUTHERN METHODIST.

Bishop Galloway Interviewed.

In an interview with a reporter of the New Orleans Picayune, Bishop Galloway, chairman of the Mississippi State Prohibition Executive Committee, spoke as follows concerning the effort now being made by the whiskyites to bring on a local-option election in Hinds county:

"This plea for the privilege of opening saloons does not come from the citizens of the county, or from the moral elements in our city, but from those who see 'millions in it,' and want an occupation.

"The enemies of prohibition have labored in season and out to create the impression that the law is a failure. This complaint comes not from sober, law-abiding people, but from the would-be owners and frequenters of saloons.

"Their cry is, 'The law is a dead letter—there is as much drinking now as when we had saloons!' That will necessitate two inquiries: First, is it a fact that there is as much drinking now as under the reign of the open saloon? Second, who is responsible for any laxity in the enforcement of law? And unless I am greatly mistaken, before the campaign is over, somebody will come to visions and revelations.

"Of course, nobody believes the cry of whisky advocates. There is not one-third the amount of drinking in Jackson as when we had open saloons, and every man not an idiot or a whisky partisan knows it. The 'jugs,' about which we hear so much, are smaller and fewer than the barrels that used to roll into our city. Compare the quiet of our last Christmas with the horrors and tragedies of other years. But I will not now enter into the argument, or even intimate what stores of facts will be forthcoming at the proper time. Of one thing I am certain, that the good citizens of Hinds county who expressed their honest convictions on a great moral issue two years ago will not go back on them at the behest of a few men who want to run saloons in Jackson. We will repeat the victory of two years ago.

"The friends of good morals in Hinds county will at once begin a thorough organization, and arrange to draw the lines of battle. We have everything to gain from open discussion. There is nothing on our part to conceal. If our cause is not righteous, it ought to die. But if it is right for us to restrain evil as far as possible—to help the unfortunate, to lift up the fallen, to rescue the perishing—we have no occasion to fear the final results."

[We heartily endorse what Bishop Galloway says on this subject. We believe that a local-option election in Hinds county will result in an increased majority for prohibition. Moreover, we think it would be good policy for all prohibitionists to refuse to sign the petition for an election. Let prohibition continue long enough to test its efficacy. The Bishop hits the nail on the head when he says that the whole movement originates with a handful of men who want to run saloons in Jackson.]

Rev. E. W. Yancy.

The following note from Bro. Banks brings tidings which will be received with sadness by a large number of people in various sections of the Louisiana Conference:

JENA, LA., Feb. 15, 1897.

MR. EDITOR: I write to inform you that another one of Israel's great men has fallen. Last night, at ten o'clock, death claimed as his victim Rev. E. W. Yancy, a superannuated preacher of the Louisiana Conference. He was transferred from the Tennessee to the Louisiana Conference in 1840. He died of pneumonia. Our loss is his gain.

H. M. BANKS.

A subscriber writes: "The dear old ADVOCATE has not lost its capacity for growth; it grows brighter and better continually." And this is a sample of scores of letters recently received.

The National Conference of Charities.

As previously announced in our columns, the National Conference of Charities will hold its annual session in this city, beginning on Thursday, March 4, and closing Sunday, March 7. Two sessions will be held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall. Addresses will be delivered on various phases of charity work by distinguished speakers from various sections.

NOTES.

The postoffice of Rev. H. D. Howell is Scranton, Miss.

***

Bishop Galloway lectured at Macon, Miss., on the seventeenth.

***

Rev. W. T. Currie, who located at the last session of the Louisiana Conference, was received into the M. E. Church in this city last week.

***

Bishop McCabe was greeted by a crowded house last Sunday afternoon at Rayne Memorial. His address on "Foreign Missions" was exceedingly entertaining, and fully met popular expectation.

***

Rev. J. M. Alford has taken hold of his work with a firm and vigorous hand. He expects during the year to build two houses of worship—at Tchoupitonlas Church and at Goulds-boro. He is universally esteemed and beloved by his people.

***

Hon. W. L. Wilson, Postmaster-General, has accepted the presidency of Washington and Lee University. He will enter upon the duties of the position on the first of July, the date at which the resignation of the present incumbent, G. W. C. Lee, takes effect.

***

Rev. Charles Taylor, D. D., of the North Alabama Conference, died at Courtland, Ala., on the fifth. Dr. Taylor was a good preacher and a most excellent man. He was at one time a missionary to China. He was widely known as the author of an excellent tract entitled, "Baptism in a Nutshell."

***

Mr. W. H. Wright, father of the distinguished educator and philanthropist, Miss Sophie B. Wright, died on the seventeenth, and was buried from the Lafayette Presbyterian Church, the funeral services being conducted by his life-long friend, Dr. B. M. Palmer. He was a man of excellent character, and enjoyed the respect and confidence of all who knew him.

***

Under the energetic and skillful leadership of Rev. R. H. Wynn, our church at Algiers is making gratifying progress in the direction of erecting a new house of worship. A building fund of several thousand dollars is already in hand, and work will commence at no distant day. The architect's plan agreed upon ensures the handsomest, though not the largest, Methodist Church in the city. The cost will be about ten or twelve thousand dollars.

***

The Y. W. C. T. U. of this city—better known as the Bella Kearney Y's—will give a concert on Thursday evening, Feb. 25, at Upper Bethel, on Fulton street, between Jackson and Philip, for the benefit of the North Louisiana drouth sufferers. Those who attend will be regaled with good music, vocal and instrumental, and will also contribute to a most worthy cause. The admission fee has been placed at a very low figure to give everybody a chance to lend a helping hand.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

By Rev. Robert H. Wynn.

Prayer Meeting Topic for February.

THE CHRIST OF ISAIAH.

FEB. 28—THE RESURRECTED LORD.
(Isa. xxv, 6-8.)

The prophet does not, in this passage, make any distinct reference to the subject of the resurrection, nor even to the personal Messiah, but predicts certain glorious results that should be accomplished in the "fullness of the Messianic times." They are blessings which our experience has realized, and which our faith apprehends as purchased through the atonement, and as flowing from our risen and ascended Lord.

I.—RICH SPIRITUAL PROVISION.
(Ver. 6.)

The glorious provisions of salvation are here, as elsewhere in Scripture, represented under the symbol of a rich feast. The feast shall be spread in the mountain of Zion, or Jerusalem, by the Lord himself, and shall include the choicest foods—"fat things full of marrow," and "wines on the lees well refined."

Notice some of the many passages which are parallel. (Prov. ix, 1-5; Isaiah iv, 1, 2; Matt. viii, 11; John v, 35-51.)

II.—REMOVAL OF HEATHEN DARKNESS.
(Ver. 7.)

In verse 6 the prophet declares that the feast will be spread "unto all people"—an invitation will be given to all people to share in the feast of Zion, and thus the glorious missionary character of the church is incidentally foretold. Now, in verse 7 the same thing is emphasized under another figure. The condition of the heathen world is that of spiritual darkness; but the "covering," or "veil," that shuts out the light will be removed when the great work of gospel proclamation shall begin.

Our resurrected Lord says to the apostles, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." The light that shines in the face of our risen Lord is even now penetrating the densest darkness of the earth. (Isaiah ix, 2; xlii, 6, 7; Luke i, 78, 79; Acts xxvi, 17, 18.)

III.—SORROW AND DEATH REMOVED.
(Ver. 8.)

The empty tomb of our Lord is the symbol of hope, the prophecy of the Christian's victory over mortality and corruption—his resurrection to eternal fullness of life and joy. With faith in our risen Lord, we therefore have a hope that alleviates all the distresses and trials of present experience. (Hosea xiii, 14; I. Cor. xv, 54-57; Rev. xx, 14; xxi, 4.)

A Doctor's Visit.

DR. HARTMAN'S FREE VISIT TO EVERY FAMILY IN THE UNITED STATES.

How can that be? you ask. How can Dr. Hartman visit every family in the United States? This is the way: This little article goes into every home. Everyone has the privilege of reading it. Through this article Dr. Hartman speaks to every family. He asks if any in this house is sick. If so, would you not like to consult me as to the nature of your disease and its treatment? If you would like me to do so, I will give your case careful attention. I have a large institution and many assistants and am in a position to detect the nature of diseases where they could not possibly be detected by the ordinary physician. If you want to consult me, just write me and give a description of your case, and I will answer you free of charge, giving you full directions for treatment. This is the way Dr. Hartman makes a free visit to every family in the United States. He has just called on you. Do you wish to consult him? Or you may send and get a question blank to fill out if you prefer. All letters received by him are strictly confidential. Have you catarrh of the head, throat, lungs, stomach or any other organ of the body? If so, write to him at once. He will send you directions for treatment without charge.

If you desire to, you can send for a free copy of Dr. Hartman's latest book on catarrh and the other climatic diseases of winter—64 pages instructively illustrated. Sent free to any address by the Peruna Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio.

ONE GIVES RELIEF.

NO MATTER WHAT'S THE MATTER,

ONE OF THESE WILL DO YOU GOOD.

Rev. Frederic R. Marvin, long time pastor of the First Congregational Church, of Great Barrington, Mass., and at one time a practicing physician, a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, says of Ripans Tabules: "The formula has long been in favor with medical men, and the method of preparation in the present form is modern and a great convenience. I always keep a vial of the Tabules upon my dressing table, and use them with confidence whenever occasion arises for a disturbed condition of the digestive organs. I know of nothing so good, and for an 'all-round' family remedy I do not believe there is anything better to be had."

THE GRUDGES.

Lay them all away in the tomb,
For away from the homes of men,
Where yew trees cast their deepest gloom
In the deepest and darkest glen.

The grudges that darken your life,
They grow and grow each passing day;
They will bring but evil and strife,
And woe and pain—lay them away.

Yes, I know how closely they cling,
Of your inner life they are part;
I know of their poisonous sting
That enters the brain and the heart.

The grudge against neighbor and friend
But adds to the life-burden weight;
A weight under which you will bend—
The life's path should ever be strait.

As the blind, in darkness you grope,
For your sins have shut out the light—
Ask Jesus for peace and for hope,
And a life-path cheerful and bright.

—Moss Rose, in Wesleyan Methodist.

The Value of Mistakes.

This would seem to be a contradiction in terms, because mistakes are errors, and errors are not generally considered profitable to bank upon. Still we can not help but give some measure of indorsement to the dictum of a recent writer who says: "It is certainly a pleasant thing to be right, but it is generally a much more needful thing to be wrong." The man who never made mistakes is yet to be born and those who have achieved the most have been greatly indebted to the errors of themselves and others. The man who oracularly declares that he never makes mistakes is a good one to steer clear of having any close relation with, for he is apt to put his foot into a pit while he is loudly maintaining that it is impossible for him to make a misstep.

The fact that one makes mistakes need not necessarily be discouraging. If the proper lessons are learned from these errors they will prove but the stepping stones to success otherwise impossible. It will not do, however, when one has made a mistake to go on heedlessly to other blunders. The thing to do when you find you have been wrong is to ascertain why you made the error and how a similar one can be avoided in the future. Don't be ashamed to acknowledge that you have been wrong and insist upon continuing in your erroneous way simply to show that you don't care or to deceive yourself or others. You will only get deeper in the mire and will have to stop whether you will or no and strike for the proper path, and the sooner you recognize the true situation the better. The value of a mistake consists in the wisdom you draw from it, and the sooner you acquire this the greater the benefit it will yield.

Valuable discoveries have resulted from the mistakes of chemists and others, who have come upon new and useful compounds and principles through an accidental error in their experiments or researches, so that in these cases mistakes have actually proved of great value. The mistakes of the union and rebel officers during the early part of the war were of great value to Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and their able lieutenants, who, by profiting by them, were enabled to bring the conflict to a successful termination. The mistakes of one man are often the salvation of another. Wellington and Blucher won Waterloo because of the mistakes of Napoleon and Grouchy, and but for the mistakes of Burgoyne, Gates would not have had the Saratoga triumph.

Don't be cast down too much therefore if you make mistakes, but be sure that you turn them to account when made and make them valuable, for if you do not, then you are sure to score a failure. It is not so much the errors you commit as your insistance on repeating them in spite of the light of experience they shed that is the source of unnumbered evils and irretrievable failures.—Pittsburg Times.

Life without an Aim.

Those of you who are familiar with the shore may have seen, attached to the inundated reef a creature, whether a plant or an animal you could scarcely tell, rooted to the rock as a plant might be, and twirling its long tentacula as an animal would do. This plant-animal's life is somewhat monotonous, for it has nothing to do but grow and twirl its feelers, float in the tide, or fold itself up on its foot-stock when that tide has receded, for months and years together. Now, would it not be very dismal to be transformed into a zoophyte? Would it not be an awful punishment, with your human soul still in you, to be anchored to a rock, able to do nothing, but spin about your arms or fold them up again, and knowing no variety, except when the receding ocean left you in the daylight, or the returning waters plunged you in the green depths again, or the sweeping tide brought you the prize of a young periwinkle or an invisible star-fish?"

But what better is the life you are spontaneously leading? What greater variety marks your existence, than checquers the life of the sea-anemone? Does not one day float over you after another, just as the tide floats over it, and find you much the same, and leave you vegetating still? Are you more useful? What real service to others did you render yesterday? What tangible amount of occupation did you overtake in the one hundred and sixty-eight hours of which last week consisted? And what higher end in living have you than that polypus? You go through certain mechanical routines of rising and dressing and visiting and dining and going to sleep again; and are a little roused from your usual lethargy by the arrival of a friend, or the effort needed to write some note of ceremony. But as it curtseys in the waves, and vibrates its exploring arms, and gorges some dainty medusa, the sea-anemone goes through nearly the same round of pursuits and enjoyments with your intelligent and immortal self. Is this a life for a rational and responsible creature to lead?—Exchange.

Parent and Child.

Nothing is sweeter than sometimes finding a father who confesses himself a child with his children, a mother who is a young girl with her daughters.

There is no question of authority or infallibility with these, yet somehow there is always obedience, always harmony; dignities are not sacrificed, while something better than blind homage is rendered. There are no harsh judgments, no moral reactions. Each recognizes that the thing to be attained, the quality to be expressed—as, for example, beneficence, love, courtesy, charity—is forever greater than possible human attainment, yet that each individual grows in knowledge, perfection and understanding while he strives; grows without pain, development being normal, and grows without effort, the impetus being from within and recreative, not from without, coercive and destructive. True respect each for the other—and this the vital point—true respect each for the other, for even the opinions and the standards of the other is at last attained. Certainly this is something better than any obedience born of the exercise of blind authority, or cultivated by a parent's personal pride in his position.—Harper's Bazar.

A Few Thoughts on Reading.

It is better to master the thoughts on one page of a good book than to run through all the pages of many poor books. A writer says he "has never known any cares that were not lightened by an hour's reading." The literature of a country is its most enduring monument. Solid structures may crumble and decay, but thoughts embalmed in literature are as fresh as when they came from the brain of the author. Books are spectacles through which to read nature. How much pleasure may be given by reading aloud! A little attention and daily practice will make one, who can read at all, read pleasantly and intelligently. Surely an art so calculated to afford pleasure and profit is worth learning. If our minds are enriched by good reading, nature, the great book whose Author is divine, teems with beautiful lessons for us. A blade of grass is a volume, a handful of flowers is a library. It is true that we can find "books in the running brooks, tongues in trees, sermons in stones, and good in everything." A great reader is a valuable friend, and a good book is a priceless treasure.—Herald and Presbyter.

A Cougher's Coffers

may not be so full as he wishes, but if he is wise he will neglect his coffers awhile and attend to his cough. A man's coffers may be so secure that no one can take them away from him. But a little cough has taken many a man away from his coffers. The "slight cough" is somewhat like the small pebble that lies on the mountain side, and appears utterly insignificant. A fluttering bird, perhaps, starts the pebble rolling, and the rolling pebble begets an avalanche that buries a town. Many fatal diseases begin with a slight cough. But any cough, taken in time, can be cured by the use of Liquor Arithmetic Object-Lesson.

"Boy at the head of the class, what are we paying for liquor as a nation?"

"Nine hundred millions annually."

"Step to the blackboard, my boy. First take a rule and measure this silver dollar. How thick is it?"

"Nearly an eighth of an inch."

"Well, sir, how many of them can you put in an inch?"

"Between eight and nine."

"Give the benefit of the doubt; call it nine. How many inches would it require to pile these nine hundred millions in?"

"One hundred million inches."

"How many feet would that be?"

"Eight million three hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three feet."

"How many rods is that?"

"Five hundred and five thousand and fifty rods."

"How many miles is that?"

"One thousand five hundred and seventy-eight miles."

"Miles of what?"

"One thousand five hundred and seventy-eight miles of silver dollars, laid down, packed close together, our national liquor bill would make. This is only one year's grog bill."

Reader, if you need facts about this temperance question, nail that to a post and read it occasionally. It would take ten men with scoop shovels to throw away money as fast as we are wasting it for grog.—Observer.

Victor Hugo's Creed.

The following is a part of the religious creed of Victor Hugo, the great French literatus, touching the immortal—the soul and the life that is beyond the grave: "I am conscious within myself, of the certainty of a future life. The nearer I approach my end, the clearer do I hear the immortal symphonies of worlds that call me to themselves. For half a century I have been outpouring my volumes of thought in prose and in verse, in history, philosophy, drama, romance, ode, and ballad, yet I appear to myself not to have said a thousandth part of what is within me, and when I am laid in the tomb I shall not reckon that my life is finished; the grave is not a cul-de-sac, it is an avenue; death is the sublime prolongation of life, not its dreary finish; it closes in the twilight, it opens in the dawn. My work is only begun. I yearn for it to become brighter and nobler, and this craving for the infinite demonstrates that there is an infinity."

Scolding is mostly a habit. It is often the result of nervousness, and an irritable condition of both mind and body. A person is tried or annoyed at some trivial cause, and forthwith commences finding fault with everything and everybody within reach. Scolding is a habit very easily formed. It is astonishing how soon one becomes addicted to it, and confirmed in it. It is an unreasoning and unreasonable habit. Persons who once get into the way of scolding always find something to scold about. If there is nothing else, they begin scolding at the mere absence of anything to scold at. It is an extremely disagreeable habit. It is contagious. Once introduced into a family, it is pretty certain in a short time to affect all the members.

Every man, every woman, every child has some talent, some power, some opportunity of getting good and doing good. Each day offers some occasion for using this talent. As we use it, it gradually increases, improves, becomes native to character. As we neglect it, it dwindles, withers, and disappears. This is the stern, but benign law by which we live. This makes character real and enduring, this makes progress possible, this turns men into angels and virtues into goodness.—James Freeman Clarke.

HYGIENE.

Air as a Medicine.

No list of medicines—no materia medica—is complete if the consideration of the atmosphere as a remedial measure is left out. Air as a mechanical mixture of oxygen, carbonic acid and the vapor of water, elements which, in one way or another, enter into or concern largely all other remedies. A trace of ammonia is also present in the air; at some seasons—the Spring, for instance, and at some places—low ground with decaying vegetable matter, for example, there may be more than "a trace."

When air is breathed in the process of breathing, the oxygen passes into the blood and the carbonic acid, vapor of water, ammonia and some organic matter pass out. The sick need more air space than the healthy, and this fact should not be lost sight of by those who have the care of them. High sanitary authorities claim 1,000 cubic feet of air necessary for a healthy adult, and the amount should be doubled for a sick person, for owing to the necessary precautions taken to avoid draughts, the renewal of the air is less rapid than that breathed by the healthy person may be. When the air of a sick room is for some unavoidable reason too still, movement may be caused by placing a burning lamp in the chimney. The sick room should contain a fireplace if possible. In all fevers, eruptive diseases, diphtheria, dysentery, an abundant supply of air is of great remedial value, while in consumption—that disease whose seat is at the breathing center, and whose worst effect comes through an interference with the oxygenization of the blood, it appears on the surface that all other medication would be worse than useless unless a generous supply of the purest air can be secured as a never-failing adjunct. Diabetes, gout and rheumatism are diseases in which there is a defective oxidation of products in the body, and hence an abundant supply of air is not of the least importance here, while all wasting maladies and all bloodless conditions call loudly for air. If iron is given to a patient who has a scant supply of air, the chances are it will not be assimilated, but pass out of the system unused. In short, I know of only one affection where diminished air seems to be remedial, and that is acute bronchitis. In this affection it seems as if the patient does better in a close room, where the air, however, is moist.

OBITUARIES.

TABB—Among the many prominent Christian gentlemen which Chickasaw county, Miss., has given to the world, WINFIELD F. TABB was one of the most useful.

He was born April 17, 1858, near Houston, Miss., in the home of his parents, Jno. H. and Margaret Tabb. He was a youth whose reliable character promised in the future a man of worth. In his twelfth year he professed faith in Christ and joined the M. E. Church, South, of which he was a consistant member until the day of his death. In November, 1882, he was married to Miss Scottia Bates, daughter of Judge W. S. Bates, of Houston, Miss. He had been a faithful clerk in a store up to this time. He now embarked in the drug business for himself. He had developed into the strong man which his boyhood character had promised. If he entered into a contract, he fulfilled it in letter and spirit; if he assumed a relation, he discharged the obligations thereof. He was loyal to right, and steadfastly followed the leadings of his conscience. He, therefore, prospered in business. A happy family, as the years grew apace, gathered around his fireside, and greeted him in his pleasant home when he returned from the store. He was active in the church, performing the duties of steward, Sunday-school teacher or any other required of him. He was a kind, considerate husband; a father who, by daily example, led his boys into right ways of thinking and acting. He had grown up in and around Houston; was loved and esteemed as one of her best citizens; but in 1894 Mr. Tabb, considering the pecuniary interests of his boys, severed these pleasant associations and moved to Texas—first to Henrietta, and afterwards to Waco. He found friends there and prospered, but discovering that he had undertaken too large a business at Waco, after consulting his wife, had determined to sell at the opening of the new year, 1897, and in some other place begin a work commensurate with his strength, and which would give him more time with his family. "Man proposes and God disposes." The new year came and Mr. Tabb did enter upon a new work, but not a work full of care, of toil, of disappointments and vexations; a work of love, of praise, of rest.

After a short illness Winfield F. Tabb, at precisely 12 o'clock, Jan. 1, 1897, bade farewell to loving wife and devoted children, and his spirit winged its flight to God who gave it. His family, with his remains, returned to Houston. After an impressive funeral service conducted by Rev. Anderson, pastor of the M. E. Church, all that was mortal of W. F. Tabb was interred in the Houston Cemetery. The people of Houston and Chickasaw county mourned a loyal friend, his relatives a cherished kinsman, his Sunday-school class a conscientious teacher, his sons and little daughter an affectionate father, his wife the strong, sustaining arm and loving counsel of a devoted husband; but "all things work together for good to them that love the Lord."

KENT—FRANCZA LAVONIA ADAMS was born in Selma, Ala., Oct. 5, 1832. She was married to B. F. Kent, Nov. 16, 1852. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in Selma when she was eighteen years old. She moved to this county, together with her husband and children, in the year 1878. She died at Coushatta, La., Nov. 13, 1896.

Sister Kent lived a faithful member of the Methodist Church for forty-six years. It was my privilege to serve her as pastor for four years, and found her to be an earnest Christian, faithful to her church and faithful to her God.

Sister Kent was a woman of few words, but her faith was of that strong, firm type that did not falter. I have visited her when her trials were very great, but never heard a word of complaint from her. She has gone to be with her Savior, who was her guide and comfort here.

Sister Kent leaves one son and four daughters to mourn her departure. They will miss their dear, kind mother, but they have her Christian example and unwavering faith, which is a rich legacy she has left to them.

"A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled;
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.
God in his wisdom has recalled
The boon his love has given;
And though the body slumbers here,
The soul is safe in heaven."

J. B. WILLIAMS.

HENDERSON—Mrs. SARAH H. HENDERSON departed this life in the town of Wilson, La., on the day of Aug. 28, 1896, after a long and trying illness, during which she exhibited the patient submission of the ripe and rounded Christian character. She was returning from New Orleans, whither she had gone for medical treatment, to her home in Utica, where she had lived for many years, and where, by her Christian deportment, her kind ministrations to the needy and distressed of all classes, and her helpful labors in the church she loved—the M. E. Church, South—she had gained the confidence and esteem of all who enjoyed her acquaintance. She died in the triumphs of a living faith. The Savior whom she loved and trusted verified his promise to "never leave or forsake" her; and just before her departure she spoke of her transition "as falling upon sleep." She has entered upon rest, has crossed the turbid stream, and "walks in white" with those in the presence of the Lamb.

"No chilling wind, nor poisonous breath,
Can reach that healthful shore;
Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and feared no more."

Farewell, fond mother, devoted sister, faithful friend. The bereaved children and sorrowing sister can never cease to remember thy noble nature and rare virtues, and a host of sympathizing friends will drop a tear of sympathy upon the flowers that bloom upon thy grave.

WELLS—DEWITT TALMAGE, infant son of W. R. and Maria Wells, was born at Union, Newton county, Miss., Nov. 1, 1896, and died Jan. 23, 1897.

The death of this little one is peculiarly sad. In the Summer of 1893 little Haden, a bright little boy and their only child, was taken from these fond Christian parents. In January, 1894, little Addie came to them to gladden their hearts. She was sunshine in that home. But in August, 1896, God was pleased to take her home to himself. It was so hard to give her up. But these Christian parents bowed submissively to God's will. Then came little Talmege to comfort those sad hearts; but how short his stay, and how fleeting was the sunshine he brought! Only two months and twenty-six days God permitted him to remain, and again the loving parents were left desolate and childless. Thank God his grace is always sufficient for us, even in sad bereavements like this. For the fond parents, in writing to me, said: "We know that God is good, and does all things for the best. Our chain in heaven is growing longer, and it is a consolation to know that we can all be united in that bright, beautiful world, where there will be no more sad partings."

May that Savior who said, "Let not your hearts be troubled," comfort those sad hearts and bring them all to that glorious reunion in that place he has gone to prepare for us!

W. M. WILLIAMS, Former Pastor.

Gallman, Miss.

ZINN—She is gone! My mother, Mrs S. A. ZINN, wife of W. S. Zinn, died Jan. 20, 1897.

Yes, she has crossed over the valley of death. One by one the links that bind us to this hard, cold world are broken. My mother was a noble, loving Christian woman, full of kindness and loving devotion to all her kindred and friends, and sympathy and charity for the poor and helpless. She has lived a life of about seventy years of usefulness and Christian fortitude, and to such is given the promise of eternal life beyond the grave. To-night, could she speak to her loved ones, she would say: "All is well; grieve not for me." With all this, and the goodness of God, my way seems dark. She has been with us so long, prayed for us so often when I was dead in sin; but, it seems that I can not get along without my mother's prayers. Her prayers have helped me all along through life. Many, no doubt, have been led to Christ through her influence. The church at State Spring, Miss., had its origin through the influence and help of my mother. In the work of the church here my mother stands prominent. Her queenly spirit has taken its flight to God who gave it. She will live in the hearts of my dear father and sisters. O Father in heaven, sustain and help us in this sore trial, give us grace to be ever life my prayer.

Heaven, A. J. ZINN

PARNELL—Mrs. CORNELIA ANGELLA PARNELL, wife of Eugene Parnell, and daughter of Robt. H. and Rebecca Sorrell, was born May 20, 1870, and died Feb. 3, 1897.

Sister Della Parnell professed faith in Christ and joined the M. E. Church, South, in the eleventh year of her age. We have been her pastor for three years. She was faithful and constant in her Christian duties; not demonstrative, but quietly and unassumingly walking in the path of duty as a Christian. She was a beautiful character. As a wife and mother, she seemed to fill the sacred place to a high degree of perfection, always kind, faithful, and hopeful. She was devotedly loved by all who knew her. She leaves four precious children, all small, in the hands of her kind husband and her heavenly Father. May the Holy Spirit direct the bereaved husband and father in his responsible position! Our dear sister died in perfect peace; not a cloud on her moral sky. What a glory to leave sorrowing kindred and friends! We here extend our sympathy to all the sorrowing ones, and exhort that we all so live that we may meet the dear one in heaven.

W. M. YOUNG.

EASON—Little ANNIE MAY EASON, daughter of Thomas and Effie Eason, died at their home at Bro. Wm. Sharp's, Wall Hall, Miss., June 12, 1897, being thirteen months old.

Her father preceded her just two months to that home prepared for all the good. Thus one by one we are going home. A mother, two sisters and grandparents and many others sorely miss her smile and prattle. But be patient a while longer, broken hearts; not long this will be gathered home to part no more. Let us all so live that we, too, may go in peace. J. H. SMITH, Pastor.

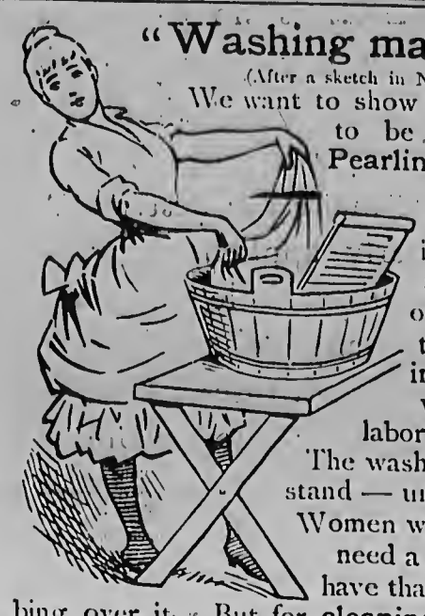
"Washing made graceful."

(After a sketch in New York Truth.)



We want to show it, because this seems to be a woman who uses Pearline. She's doing no work to speak of, you see—she doesn't look as if she ever had to. She appears to be rinsing out the clothes, after letting them soak in Pearline (no soap) and water, which is about all the labor required.

The washboard we don't understand—unless she's washing it. Women who use Pearline don't need a washboard. They don't have that tiresome, wearing rubbing over it. But for cleaning washboards or wood work or paint or anything of the kind, then they want Pearline. Washing can't be made graceful unless it is made easy. Of all the ways of washing the easiest, quickest, most economical, is with Pearline. 495

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Bible

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

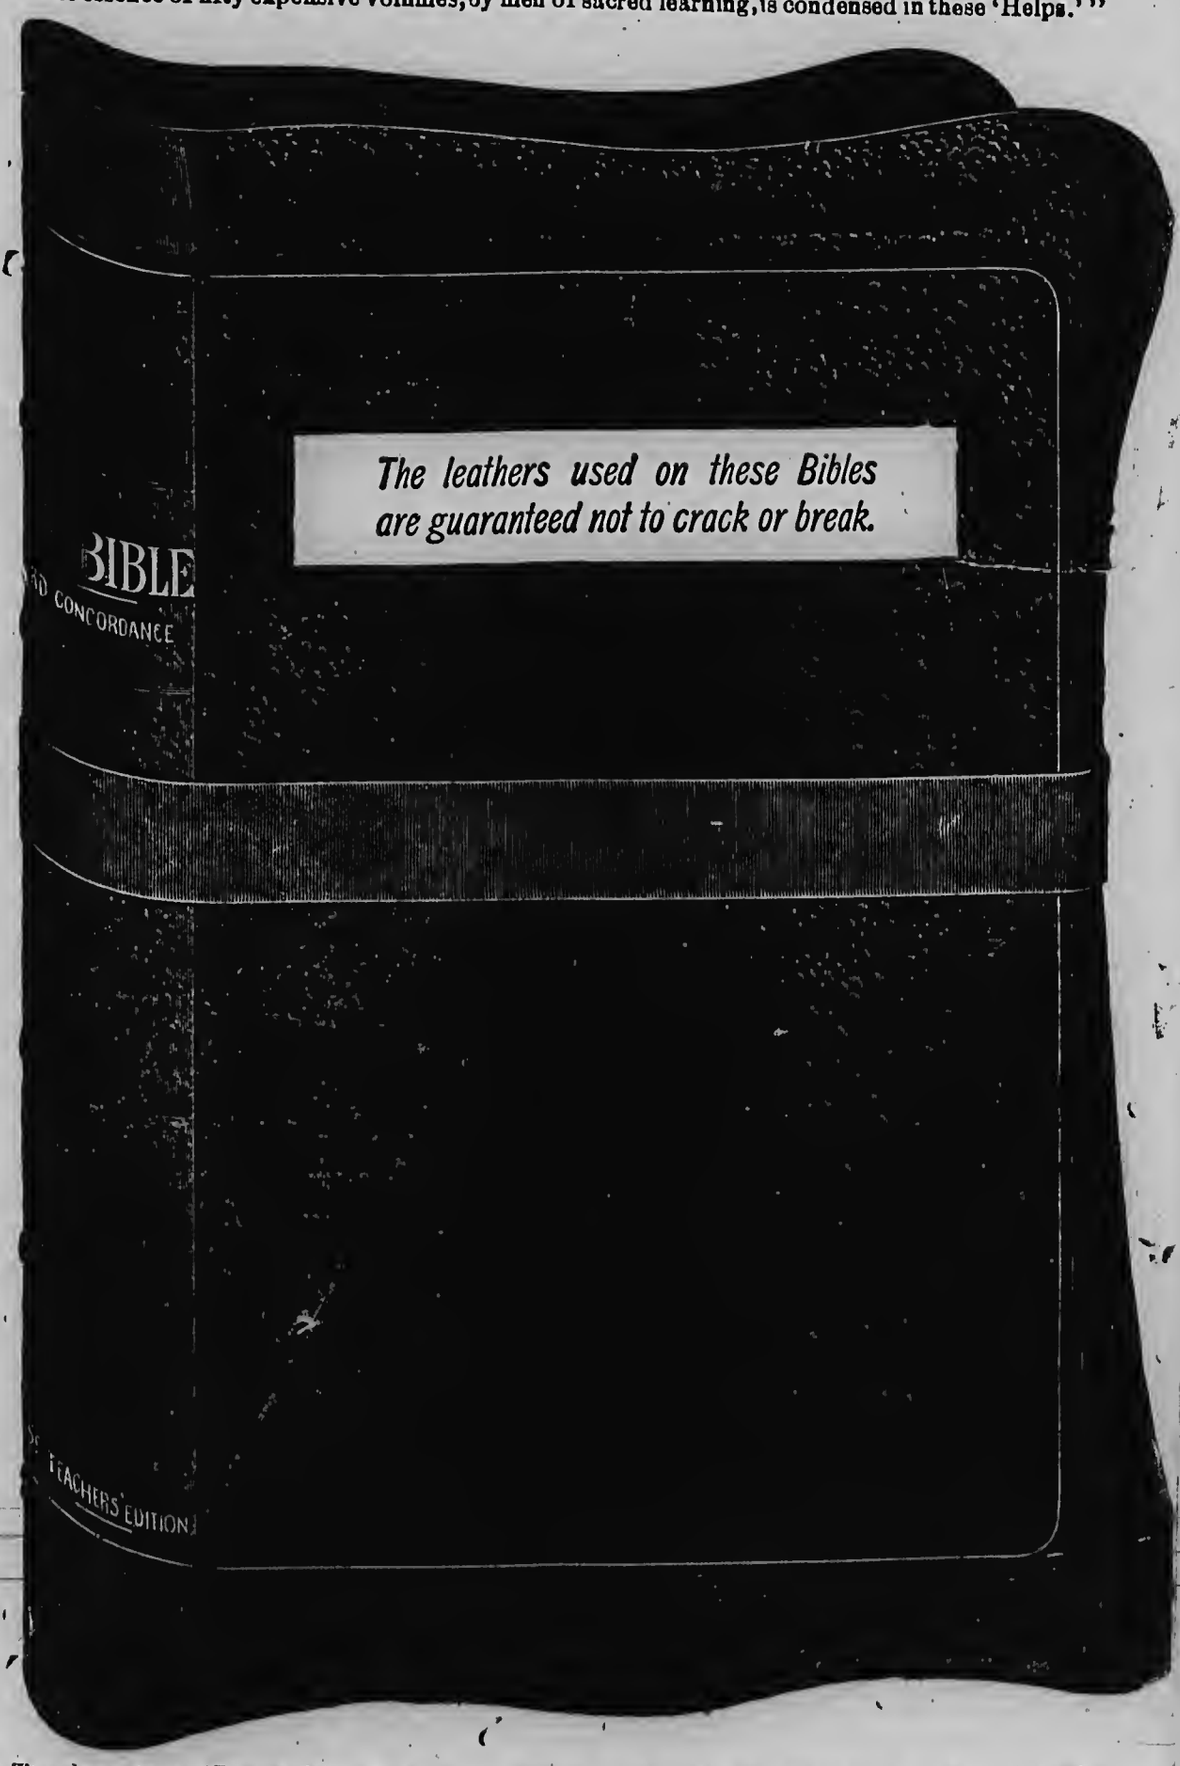
Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"



The leathers used on these Bibles are guaranteed not to crack or break.

The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2.35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3.15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1.15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz. to March, '98. (A little later it will be April, '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

THERE is no getting away from the fact that Pure White Lead (see list of brands which are genuine) and Pure Linseed Oil make the best paint.

Properly applied, it will not chip, chalk or scale off, but will outwear any of the mixtures offered as substitutes. It is, therefore, by far the most economical.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

A Dandy Thing for Our Readers to Sell.

Why be idle when you can make lots of money acting as our agent right in your neighborhood? We have one of the greatest inventions of the present day, in the nature of a lightning butter maker, and it is the easiest thing on earth to sell. It makes butter in two minutes and the color is yellow as gold. The churn is easily operated; just fasten it to the kitchen table and turn the wheel. In two minutes you have nice butter, and by using our churn you get considerable more from the same amount of cream than with the old fashioned churns. Every farmer who sees our "lightning butter maker" work, buys one at once. Anyone can make $25 a week selling them. We will mail particulars and testimonials from those who use it to anyone who will write us at once. We will give full instructions how to use the churn and give you a start in the direction to make money. Address Dep't A 5, W. H. Baird & Co., Sts. A, Pittsburg, Pa

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Over 122,000 persons visited the recent bicycle show in New York City.

Governor Foster, of Louisiana, who made a three weeks' visit to Central America, has returned.

The people of the United States read and support as many newspapers as England, France and Germany combined.

The New York Board of Education has decided to ask the Legislature for an appropriation of $10,000,000 for new school buildings.

On Saturday the United States Senate passed a resolution expressing its sympathy with Greece in her efforts to seize Crete.

It is proposed to divide Boston into eight districts for the issue of liquor licenses, in each of which the principle of local option shall prevail.

A bill has been introduced in the New York Legislature providing that but half-fare be charged passengers who are unable to secure seats in the cars.

William Lampson, the banker of Leroy, N. Y., who died last week, left the bulk of his estate to Yale University. The estate is said to be valued between $750,000 and $1,000,000.

The naval appropriation bill for the present year has been completed, and will no doubt be considered by the House of Representatives early during the coming week. The bill carries with it an increase in the total appropriation of something less than $3,000,000, all of which is due to appropriations for the prosecution of work on vessels under construction and previously authorized. The total amount of the appropriation will be in round figures, $33,200,000. The committee decided to strike out all grants for the construction of new dry docks, the Algiers dock sharing the same fate as the others.

FOREIGN.

The Transvaal bill of indemnity asks of Great Britain the sum of £1,677,988 as damages for the Jameson raid.

In consequence of disturbances among the students the universities of Rome and of Naples have been closed by order of the government.

A great emigration movement of Russian Jews from the Vistula provinces to Africa is taking place at present. The movement has reached such proportions in several districts of these provinces that the Jewish male population is greatly diminished and business in shops is principally carried on by women.

Dispatches from Ciego de Avila say that the Cuban insurgent commander-in-chief, with 4,000 men, has recrossed the military line in the province of Puerto Principe, extending from Jucaro to Moron, and that he is going eastward through Puerto Principe and in the direction of the capital of that province, also called Puerto Principe.

Over 40,000 persons participated in a demonstration on University Square in Athens, Greece, in favor of the union of Crete with Greece. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed. An address was adopted declaring that the king and people were ready for any sacrifices of blood and treasure to bring the present Cretan policy to a successful issue. The crowd then marched to the palace, and a deputation presented the address to the King.

According to the latest dispatches, the condition of affairs in the Island of Crete has assumed a very serious phase. The obstinacy of the Cretan rebels in refusing to lay down their arms, and in persisting in their operations against the town of Canea, has apparently exhausted the patience of the powers, and it is reported that last week the warships shelled the rebel positions around the town named. The foreign naval commanders also notified the commander of the Greek troops that he would be promptly bombarded should he attempt to advance into the interior of the country.

If you are a man or a boy, and wear a hat or use an umbrella or a cane, you should read the "ad." of Meyer the Hatter in another column; and if you happen to be a minister who wears a hat, he will give you ten per cent. discount on all purchases made of him. Mr. Meyer is a leader in his line, and we take pleasure in recommending him to our readers as a thoroughly conscientious business man who can be relied on to do just exactly what he says he will.

VOL. 44.—NO. 9. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 1897. WHOLE NO. 2115

Rev. W. C. BLACK, D. D., EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. } PUBLISHED FOR THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

IF I COULD SURELY KNOW.

If I could only surely know
That all these things that tire me so
Were noticed by my Lord—
The pang that cuts me like a knife,
The lesser pains of daily life,
The noise, the weariness, the strife—
What peace it would afford!

I wonder if he really shares
In all my little human cares,
This mighty King of kings!
If he who guides through boundless space
Each blazing planet in its place,
Can have the condescending grace
To mind these petty things.

It seems to me, if sure of this,
Blest with each trial would come such bliss
That I might covet pain;
And deem whatever brought to me
The loving throb of deity,
And sense of Christ's sweet sympathy
Not loss, but richest gain.

Dear Lord, my heart shall no more doubt
That thou dost compass me about
With sympathy divine!
The love for me, once crucified,
Is not the love to leave my side,
But watcheth ever to divide
Each smallest care of mine.

Pressing Forward.

The following sermon was preached in Carondelet Street Church some time since by Rev. W. M. Leftwich, D. D., and was stenographically reported for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE by that expert in her profession, Miss Alma M. Sawtelle:

"This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Philippians iii, 13, 14.

Of the myriad stars in the heavens astronomers tell us of less than twenty that are of the first magnitude. Of the myriads of men of the human race history tells us of less than half a hundred who were of the first magnitude, and the greatest of these is Paul. Blot out of human history the record of any other mere human life, and the world would not be so impoverished. He was not only the greatest exemplar of Christianity, but the greatest benefactor of his race. His path crosses every man's path, and his life enriches every man's life, and his heroic faith has lifted the generations of man to higher levels. To understand the lesson of his life and the secret principles that underlie his wonderful achievement is worth more to us, is worth all the gold that glitters, worth all the diamonds that sparkle, worth all the pleasures that charm, for it made his life divinely regal, and gave him a name and a fame which will last long after the faithful sentinels of the skies have kindled their last watch-fires, and the angel of the apocalypse shall proclaim that time shall be no longer.

What St. Paul was in Christ we may be. What St. Paul achieved through Christ we may never hope to achieve, but the lesson of his life the humblest of us may study with profit. In his conception Christianity was a high calling of God in Christ Jesus. High because holy; and yet, in contrast with this high calling, he had a profound sense of his own incompleteness. Looking at this high calling of God in Christ, and profoundly impressed with his own insufficiency and the incompleteness of his own life, he makes the remarkable declaration: "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect; but I follow after." I am approximating. I have not reached it. This is not only an expression of the sense of incompleteness in his own life, but it is an expression of the fact that the Christian life can never be a completed product; that it is like those great problems in higher mathematics, the exact answer to which can never be given, only approximated. We can never reach a point, however high and holy in Christ, from which we cannot advance higher, go further and deeper. We can be always approximated, but never reaching the end of the Christian life. Understanding this expression of incompleteness as I do, I always hesitate to make any declarations that indicate any advanced attainment in the divine life I am approximating.

Now, St. Paul gives us, in the lesson that I read you, both the object and the law of his love. "This one thing I do," not two things. No, in his view human life is too small a thing to be divided, and time is too short to be wasted on experiments. "Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." What was his unreached mark? It was perfection. It was Christian perfection, and no Christian can afford to aim at less. But it was not the prize; it was the mark for the prize, and in that you find a very radical difference, and a difference, I apprehend, that causes many a man to fail. Many a man, in seeking the prize, misses the mark. I said the mark is not the prize, but it is the mark for the prize. Did you notice that language? Let me make a distinction for you. A teacher here in your public schools offers a prize for perfect scholarship, and, in trying to determine the prize winner, has graded marks. The mark of 100 is perfection; 100 is not the prize. The prize may be a copy of Shakespeare, but 100 is the mark for the prize, and St. Paul's mark was perfect character; not experience, not blessedness, not happiness, not heaven, but character, out of which would come experience and blessedness and happiness and heaven. Christianity is being, not doing. Christianity is not what a man is, not what he does, not what he feels, not what he experiences, but what he is. Christian character is what a man is in Christ. "Put on the Lord Jesus Christ;" "being conformed into the image of his Son, Christ," in character. Perfect Christian character is the perfect moulding of character on Christ, and that was the object of St. Paul's life, and the only legitimate object of any Christian life. It is perfect character and perfect Christian character. It is what a man is in Christ and of Christ and for Christ, and that was the mark for the prize. The truest philosophy of life is more concerned about what a man is than about what he does. Character is being; being is first, doing is next. We understand what a man is by what he does. "By their fruits ye shall know them," and that is the final test, not only of character, but it is the final test of everything. All the systems of philosophy and all religion and all science in the world are valuable to us, and vital only in the character they create and affect. Christianity makes bad men good men, and good men better men. Infidelity makes bad men worse men, and no man a better man; and "by their fruits ye shall know them."

Study the history of St. Paul, and you will understand what the Christian life is in its highest exemplification. St. Paul was caught up into the third heaven, and I reckon Christian character never gets higher than that; and yet, after that, he was not beyond the reach of temptation. For fourteen years he was buffeted by Satan with a thorn in the flesh, and he prayed three times that it might be taken away from him; but his prayer was not answered. Yes, it was. "My grace is sufficient for thee." Better have a thorn in the flesh, and grace to bear it, than to be delivered from the infirmities of man, and be independent of God, and trying to work out the problem of life without Christ.

Now, you take St. Paul's conviction and expression of the incompleteness of his life, and you will be prepared to study the law of his life. "This one thing I do"—one thing. He put his life upon one thing, and his life was held to that one thing by the power of a moral purpose, by the royalty of a moral and heroic faith; and that purpose, that faith, are the only elements that could lift his life above the incidental casualties, and make his life command its circumstances and its facts, and master its philosophy; and no human life is prepared to advance to its highest conditions until that is the case.

St. Paul had another law that I want to suggest to you. The law of progress in life with him was to "forget the things that are behind and reach forth to those things that are before," and the fact is, growth is by oblivion of the past. No man can be successful in the Christian life while he carries the dead weight of his past life with him. Oh! there is profound philosophy in that as it applies to the laws of human life, "Forgetting the things that are behind." Bad as the guilt of sin is, brooding over it is worse, because it produces despair, and despair is the opposition of faith and repentance. Brooding over past sins and regretting past life fixed Judas in unalterable despair. St. Paul's theory was different from that. He said: "Forgetting the things that are behind." The folly of youth, the sins of riper years, all the sins of a lifetime, what are they when they are pardoned? Turn your back upon the pardoned past and let its whole history go into oblivion, and stand upon the very ruins of your past life and turn your face to the future, with a heroic faith that will rid yourself of all that which is in the past. Turn your back upon the past.

The gospel gives us hope by teaching us more of what we may be than of what we have been; and if you want the hope that the gospel inspires, you have it in the promise of what you may be in Christ, and what your character can reach when your character grows into Christ.

Oh, how we need to have a higher conception of the Christian life! I will tell you the lessons we may draw from this impressive law of the apostle, and the first is a very high conception of Christianity as a high calling of God in Christ. The lowest and the meanest conception of what Christianity is intended to do is just simply to save a man from the guilt of sin in this world, and from hell torments in the life to come.

Get another lesson, and that is the incompleteness of one's own life. You may think you have a very perfect life, but the nearer you come to the life of Christ, the deeper and stronger will be the consciousness of your imperfection in Christ. I think the purest and holiest man I ever knew in my life was the late Chancellor of Vanderbilt University, L. C. Garland. No human life, no man, has ever put such honor upon me as the confidence that that man gave to me over since I was connected with the Vanderbilt University. I want to say I have never been impressed with the purity of a man's heart and life more than with his heart and life, and yet, when you talked to him about his attainments, he would look upon himself very much as St. Paul did—as the chief of sinners.

Now, there is another lesson. I want you to get the inspiration of this regal purpose; one single purpose—"This one thing I do"—not two things. No man, no woman, can succeed in the highest forms of Christian life until his or her life is centered upon that one thing, and he or she makes everything contribute to that.

I want you to get the inspiration and the authority of the moral conscience. No man ever had a keener conscience or ever used that conscience with such terrific effect upon himself than Paul; and then I want you to get the inspiration of his faith—a heroic faith. Do you know what it is? It is not only faith in God, but faith in yourself, and faith in your future. No man will ever succeed in this life until he finds faith in God, faith in himself, and faith in his future; and if you can have this faith, it lifts your life above the incidental casualties. Little men can live for themselves as they tread the narrow round of cheap and shallow pursuits; great men live for humanity, and grow greater as they mould their lives upon grand purposes, and put under the forces that mould their characters—the inspiration of a moral life. I love to see a human life that is just simply dug up out of its little narrow egotism, and broadened out into the splendid faith of Christian altruism until every power of his being is committed to the service of his fellow-man; and then you can understand the instrument (?) that moves to melody such a grand love as we are talking about to-night.

"David a Man after God's Own Heart."

(Acts xiii, 22.)

This is a quotation by St. Paul from I. Samuel xiii, 14. I have often heard it quoted against the inspiration of the Bible, because it seems incompatible with the character of God as set forth in so many statements that he is holy and abhors sin; yet David was at one time a great sinner. We think this apparent discrepancy should be cleared up for the enlightenment and relief of some minds. Several things are to be considered. First, sacred history reveals to us that when the extreme wickedness of men becomes so great as to be incompatible with civil and social order, God cuts them off; as when the antediluvian world was filled with wickedness, God destroyed them all, save one righteous family. So of Sodom and Gomerrah, "because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous." The destroying angels said, "We will destroy this place because the cry of them is waxen great before the face of the Lord." So of Jerusalem forty years after Christ. Josephus and the Roman writers describe its wickedness as extreme and insufferable, and so it was destroyed. So we learn that the cup of the iniquity of the Canaanites was full. Lev. xviii, 27, "The land was defiled, and spued them out." There was no conserving "salt" to save them. God determined to exterminate these corrupt Canaanite tribes for their insufferable wickedness, and to prevent the bad influence of their example upon the tribes of Israel. Saul, when he became king, spared these foredoomed idolaters, and Samuel was commissioned to say to him that because he had failed to execute the divine purpose in the utter destruction of these idolatrous and corrupt Canaanites, "his kingdom should not continue;" that the Lord had sought him "a man after his own heart." St. Paul (Acts xiii, 22) adds, "who shall fulfill all my will," in relation to the doomed Canaanites. Now, this was said concerning David early in David's life. It was many long years after this—more than a score of years—when David fell into temptation and committed various aggravated sins, for which he was deeply and sorely penitent, and for which he was in various ways severely punished.

From all these facts it is obvious that there is no damaging discrepancy as to the holy character of God in the statement that "David was a man after God's own heart;" no more of a contradiction than there was when God created Adam in his likeness and image, and pronounced him, with all his newly-created works, "Good, and very good," although Adam afterwards grievously sinned, and was punished with spiritual death, and had passed upon him the sentence of physical death, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

So it will be found of other apparent discrepancies and contradictions in the Bible, that when all the facts and environments are duly considered and understood, the apparent discrepancies will disappear, and the Book of God will always be found consistent with itself; so we may confidently say of God, "Thy Word is truth," and the "law holy, just, and good."

Missionary Matters.

The Missionary Board of the Mississippi Conference, pursuant to the recommendation of our Missionary Secretaries, continued the office of Conference Secretary; and the Rev. Thomas L. Mellen, of Canton, Miss., was continued in that position. He did much efficient work in that capacity last year, as his anual report showed. Being contignous to Jackson and Millsaps College, it is understood that he can occasionally get his pulpit filled, and go out in the interest of the great cause that lies so near his heart. The appropriation made to defray his office and traveling expenses is small, and brethren utilizing his services may extend the possibilities of his labors by defraying the expenses involved in serving them. Without detracting one iota from the interest of our collections for foreign missions, which is of paramount importance, permit me to speak a word in behalf of our domestic work. The assessments on the various districts for this cause for the year 1897 aggregate $3,636. This amount is covered by appropriations. No margin is left to provide against deficits. A failure to collect the whole amount assessed means a failure to pay the whole amount appropriated. Last Conference we were able to pay only about 70 per cent. on these appropriations. This worked a real hardship to many devoted missionaries who had done full and efficient work. I believe our Board is alone in this failure to have a margin to provide against deficits in collections. The Joint Board of Finance has a margin of over $1,000, besides the amounts that come into their hands from the Publishing House, the Colvin Fund, and the Conference Endowment Fund, to provide for the full payment of apportionments to Conference claimants. Let it also be remembered that these appropriations were made on the lowest possible plane. The presiding elders asked for more than was granted. Hours were spent in scaling the amounts they asked for to bring the appropriations down to what the Board had agreed upon as an assessment. Let me then urge all our pastors to bring up full collections for domestic missions.

And let us also look diligently after our assessments for foreign missions. It is a humiliating fact that while God is enlarging our borders, opening up new and inviting fields before us, and prospering our foreign work as never before, our great church seems to be waning in her zeal for the evangelization of the heathen. Last year our collections for foreign missions fell several thousand dollars short of what it was the year previous. The secretaries report that the work has suffered seriously by the pruning made necessary by this shortage, and that the Board can prune no further; that the extreme minimum of appropriation has been reached. Listen to their earnest appeal: "We beseech you to let nothing divert you from immediate and continued effort to secure your full assessment at the earliest possible day. In the name of the Master, who loved us and redeemed us by his blood, and has committed to the church the salvation of the world, we appeal for prompt action on your part." Let us all respond to this appeal by early and full collections.

In this connection let me call attention to the following resolutions presented by the Board and adopted by our late Conference in Port Gibson:

SECOND RESOLUTION.

We will take our missionary collections early, and strive to secure every dollar in cash and subscription during the first quarter.

SIXTH RESOLUTION.

That all money raised for foreign and domestic missions on regular assessments be promptly forwarded to our own treasurer.—Rev. B. F. Jones, of Brookhaven.

W. B. LEWIS,
Pres. Conf. Bd. of Missions.

Epworth League Echoes.

BY REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD,
President Mississippi State Conference of Epworth Leagues.

Don't forget the date—April 29 to May 2.

The State Conference at Water Valley.

We hope that every pastor and League president will respond promptly to the letters that will shortly be sent them.

We have recently seen Judge L. H. Estes, of Memphis. He promises to be present and take his place upon the programme. You can not afford to miss hearing him.

The Epworth League department of our church is taking on new life in many parts of Mississippi. We rejoice and are glad thereof.

The Columbus District Epworth League Conference will have convened in Macon, Miss., ere these notes are read. Who will be the next presiding elder to arrange for a similar meeting?

The Grenada Leaguers have recently invested $30 in good books for their library. Good! They have also organized a League choir with 25 or 30 voices.

At Sardis, a few days since, we met the Leaguers and found they were already planning to attend the State Conference at Water Valley. They also asked many questions about the trip to Toronto. Shipman, their sunny-souled pastor, attends the League Conferences, and enjoys them. He was at Chattanooga, and will (D. V.) be at Toronto.

Rev. W. M. McIntosh recently held a meeting in the bounds of a circuit many miles from the railroad. It resulted in the conversion of a large number of sinners, and the organization of four missionary societies and an Epworth League. Amen.

Recently we met on the train some young lady Leaguers who said they were members of the "Mission Class." They meet every Saturday afternoon and study the lives and labors of missionary heroes, and also the field in which they labored.

The spirit of missions is the spirit of the gospel, and our hearts are thrilled as we think of the wonderful opportunities which will be embraced by these consecrated young women who are now being thoroughly trained for active service.

If you have not already obtained the League reading course, be sure to send at once to Barbee & Smith. Four excellent books for $2.30.

"In League with Israel" is creating much interest among the Leaguers. They are in some places having literary socials to discuss the book, and many are being profited thereby.

In many of the great revivals now being held the Leaguers are playing an important part. A pastor informed us last week that his League was conducting the preliminary services. Having been present at one of the services, we can testify to the great interest they were manifesting in the meeting. The League helps the pastor.

Water Valley, Miss., March 1, 1897.

Prayer should be just what one feels, just what one thinks, just what one needs; and it should stop the moment it ceases to be the real expression of the need, the thought, and the feeling.—H. W. Beecher.

SHINE WHERE YOU ARE.

Would you have the world better and brighter?
Then light upon the way as you go;
Make some little part of it lighter
With beams from your life's steady glow.

Make the world that you live in your debtor,
As through it you journey along;
Be good, and the earth will grow better;
Be right, and the right will grow strong.

Trim the lamp that is left in your keeping,
And fan it with breezes of hope,
Lest shadows your life overcreeping,
Leave others in darkness to grope.

A Leaf from the Diary of the Rev. Thomas Nixon.

BY REV. J. M. WEEMS.

While on the Lee circuit, I conceived the idea of building a large shelter for our camp meeting services. I saw this would protect the congregation from the sun and rain, as well as afford a sleeping-place for people from a distance who were not provided with tents. We planted the posts twelve feet apart, and built our shelter 60 by 40 feet. But while we were putting on the last course of boards, the rafters gave way, and the entire roof fell to the ground. But early next morning we went to work to replace the roof, and, under the leadership of good Bro. Wynn, we were ready for the meeting to begin the next day. It was in August, 1815, and several preachers from a distance (among them Bro. McAnnally) came to the meeting, and they were so well pleased with our shelter they all resolved to build them for their camp meetings. It is supposed ours was the first ever built.

Bro. Axly, my presiding older, was a holy man, but was very peculiar in his manner. After reading the rules of the camp meeting, he said: "Now, I want to state a few simple rules for the government of our worship: All will stand while we sing, and kneel while we pray, except the hypocrites, who will take their seats, and wicked men who will stand during prayer." Neither class materialized during our meeting. On one occasion he was regretting that everything he did or said seemed to give offense, though he tried hard to avoid doing so. I told him the first time I conversed with him I thought he cared but little who he offended. To this he replied, "Then, sir, you thought lies!" This convinced me that he was a careless user of words. At the close of the year I returned to my father's, and assisted Bro. W. Hart in a two days' meeting at Mt. Pisgah.

The Tennessee Conference met at Stillwall's Chapel, and Bishops Asbury and McKendree were both present. The Conference opened on the morning of Oct. 20, 1815, and we had a harmonious session, with the exception of a slight discussion of the slavery question, which was quieted by the wise words of Bishop Asbury. A few days before the close of the Conference Bro. I. Manifee and I agreed to go to the Mississippi country. Bro. James Dixon was also appointed to go with us. I was appointed to the Wilkinson circuit, Bro. Manifee to the Pearl River circuit, Bro. Dixon to the Chiborne circuit, and Bro. S. Sellars was my presiding elder. The Conference adjourned on the twenty-eighth, and on the twenty-ninth I heard Bro. Miles Harper preach in Franklin from Rom. viii, 29, 30.

On the second day of November, 1815, Bros. Sellars, Dixon, Manifee and the writer left my father's house for Mississippi. We traveled together until the night of the sixth, when I was taken quite ill and could not travel for several days. Fortunately, if not providentially, Sister Cosby, with her son-in-law, Dr. Hays, passed in on their way to Mississippi, and the doctor's kind attentions and skill soon had me ready for the work again.

Bros. Sellars and Dixon had gone on to their work, leaving Bro. Manifee to take care of and to accompany me. On Nov. 13 we reached Mr. Breshare's, in what is now Madison county, Miss., where we spent the night. The next morning we parted company; Bro. Manifee going to Natchez, and I to my uncle, Col. Nixon's, on Pearl River, whose home I reached on the sixteenth. After a much needed rest of a few days, I went on seventy-five miles to Bro. Graves', one of the appointments on my circuit. On the twenty-fifth of November, 1815, I went to the home of, and for the first time, met Bro. Winans. I can never forget my first impressions of this great and good man. He was not only the man for that time, but for any and for all times, except for one fault: he was careless of his dress.

During the year we had gracious revivals and a large addition to the church. But the chief event of the year was meeting with and hearing Dow preach. His text was Eph. ii, 8. He spoke of the various kinds of grace, and concluded with what he called irresistible grace. He said: "Some people think God must put them in a wagon and drew them up to heaven without will or effort on their part, and then say to them, 'Well done, good and faithful servant.'" Then with great energy he stamped his foot, and said, "Let that doctrine go to the devil, its father."

Where Are the Twenty and Four?

BY REV. T. H. HOLLOMAN.

MR. EDITOR: Reading the earnest appeal of Miss Addie Purnell—president of the P. and H. M. Society of the Mississippi Conference—in your issue of the eleventh ultimo, I was led to look into the statistics of the Mississippi Conference in the matter of pastors and parsonages. According to our last Minutes, there are 128 active men on districts and charges, and the Minutes show only 104 parsonages, leaving of our number twenty-four men who are living in "hired houses," or boarding. In a few instances these are unmarried men, but the great majority are men of families.

To one who has had a like experience, the appeal of Bro. Breland comes with added force. There is an emphasis and a pathos in his two short sentences which should impress them upon the mind and heart of every reader, and especially every preacher: "I have a wife and four small children. We have no parsonage."

Stop, brother; read again, sisters of the church—you who sit beside your comfortable fire with your little one happy about you. Here is a man—yea, twenty-four brethren—unprovided for by the church to whom they cheerfully have committed themselves, their wives and their children. How much may be done in this field is suggestive even from the figures themselves. Here is a wide door into which much of our idle brain and heart may enter. Here is a school in which may be learned lessons in growth in grace.

The point as made by Miss Purnell in her eloquent appeal for the great work which she represents is well taken: "It happens always that the preacher who needs the house is the preacher who needs the salary." In this wooded country in which we live, cutting its millions of feet of lumber annually, there is no valid reason why every pastor should not have a comfortable home.

I am persuaded that the one and only great need is information for the people.

Let our women understand the needs and plans by which the necessities may be met, and the work will have been accomplished. With a membership of 340 (as per last Minutes) the P. and H. M. Society of the Mississippi Conference, with less than $500 at their disposal, have within the last three years aided in the building of five parsonages within our bounds. Neat, comfortable homes, all of them. The treasurer has received from the beneficiaries of these homes many letters of unfeigned gratitude. With as many women at work and collecting for the parsonage and home mission cause as we have for the foreign mission cause in our boundaries, this sad state of affairs would soon cease to exist.

Our Minutes of 1895 show 120 pastors and only 100 parsonages; those of 1896 show 128 preachers and 124 parsonages. Thus, while we have an increase of four parsonages, we also have an increase of four homeless preachers. "Watchman, what of the night?"

Natchez, Miss., Feb. 15, 1897.

A Protest.

Being positively certain that I am not the preacher's wife referred to at different times in the ADVOCATE, I feel like entering a protest. I will first state why I am positive that I am "not guilty." I always make herculean efforts to leave everything swept and garnished; but the most convincing argument is that no preacher's wife has seen the inside of a parsonage that we have vacated until the magic working hands of some of the elect sisters had put everything in perfect order. Now, I hope this strong argument will convince all that I am not writing because "the cap fits." If some "Aid Society" member were to write such a piece, I might quake and tremble a little, although fully conscious that I had done the very best I could. I do not think it altogether kind or charitable to be telling tales on the family in this way; making others feel at liberty to spread and increase the complaint. Furthermore, the wrong person might be suspected, and then we should feel more sympathy and try to shield our less fortunate sisters. If the object in writing is to benefit the erring, why not write a private note making all the suggestions you wish and all the advice you think necessary; then the right person would be enlightened. We are getting to be regarded as erring along this line; and if these criticisms continue, we will have distressingly bad reputations; not the guilty only, but those who in no wise deserve this harsh censure. Then I think many excuses could be reasonably made; one poor little woman can't do everything. There is the planning, packing, getting together a suit of clothes for each member of the family, seeing that each has a bath, etc.; and right in the midst of the last meeting with the dear friends, the tearful good-byes, just for the sake of a little more scrubbing? Very probably there has been no servant in the family; but at the last some untried or inefficient help is called. No matter how careful the instructions, nothing is well done. Frequently the excited children have to be depended upon to help. They are thinking more about the pleasure and fun than of what the next preacher's wife is going to say or do. We are getting hints from too many sources on this subject; while I doubt if other families had to move under the same circumstances, if they could or would so well. Other families carry all their effects with them, while preachers leave the articles in daily use (dirt and all). I had never thought of receiving unkind criticisms from a preacher's wife; published, too, in a paper with such an extensive circulation in Methodist circles as the ADVOCATE. I should rather have expected sympathy and excuses. My dread has always been the "Aids;" now I see they are kinder than our own family. Once, when leaving a parsonage in not so good a condition as I wished, because of sickness, I spoke of my regrets to a good, true woman. She said: "Don't you worry one bit; any sensible person will know that you can not move and leave a clean house. If you had it clean, by the time the draymen got through tracking in and out your labor would be lost. I will be here when the Aids meet, and no one must dare say a word." Imagine the comfort this thoughtful speech gave me. Honestly now, did any of you ever know a family to move into a house, vacated by others than preachers, that you did not hear the wail: "I am so tired. This was the dirtiest place that I ever saw?" I know things are sometimes woeful; but have a care, sisters. Some one may have you in mind as they read your article. You know we can very easily frame excuses for our own carelessness, and even our own dirt does not seem so dirty as that of some one else, for we know the whys and wherefores.

Now, sisters, do not post us up as a target for censure and adverse criticisms, attracting unnecessary attention to the weakness of others. Hold your nose, if necessary, work off your wrath and indignation while scrubbing pots and pans, throw the mantle of charity over your sister's faults; but, above all, let your pen rest, for we be one in reputation.

ANOTHER PREACHER'S WIFE.

Another View.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of two weeks ago "Preacher's Wife" brings very vigorous complaints against others of her guild for their slovenly housekeeping. I think our sister must have followed all the wretched housewives, or poor, helpless invalids in her Conference, for her "as usual" would certainly be very unusual to most of us. I have been a preacher's wife for twenty years, and am glad to record a very different experience. Indeed, I feel persuaded that such shocking uncleanliness as she describes is very rare. While there is room for improvement in many of us (myself among the number), preachers' wives, I think, are at least average housekeepers, while some are exquisitely neat. The moving of heavy trunks and boxes across the floors, and other work incident to moving, necessitate a second cleaning up after the house is vacated. Sometimes the departing housekeeper leaves the means to have this done with some friend. This we think the most self-respecting course; but it is by no means expected by the considerate members of the Ladies' Aid or W. P. and H. M. Societies. Our irate "Preacher's Wife," in bringing railing accusation against her sisters, forgets that her rebuke must fall with almost equal force upon these noble allies of the preacher's home, whose duty and pleasure it is to prepare for each incoming family. They usher the strangers into a clean house, cheer them with bright fires, a nice meal, and sometimes a generous start in the pantry. Under such genial treatment little wonder that the "strangers" soon melt away. God bless these dear women for their kindness! Indeed, he does bless them. I know their own homes reflect the streams of sunshine they have let into the parsonage home.

Dear sisters, we hold our husbands' letters far too sacred to be scattered about our premises. If in the hurry of moving one should slip out of the "letter-barrel" before it is headed up, we would expect it to be reverently handled and consigned to the flames unopened. Let us be careful to leave no worse litter behind us, and let us each see which can be the neatest and most careful housekeeper during the year of grace 1897.

The blessed Master has made many provisions for our comfort here by the hands of self-sacrificing and heroic women—members of two worthy branches of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society. I accept the trust with a grateful heart, and would use it with a careful hand. In doing this, and feeling thus, I believe I represent my predecessors here and elsewhere, and the wives of many—I hope all—of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference.

From the West.

It is quite a relish to get the ADVOCATE away out here in the West. I appreciate it more and more. It gets better and better. I wish every member of the church in the three Conferences would subscribe for it. A person can not be an intelligent church member if he does not read the literature and periodicals of his church. It cures, to a great extent, narrow-mindedness, bigotry, selfishness, etc.; broadens him out, qualifying him for more successful work. There are many local preachers even who do not subscribe for a single church paper. I do not believe that a man ought to be allowed to have license to preach or exhort if he don't subscribe for his church periodicals.

I go into many homes—some wealthy—and find not a single religious paper or book; large families, too. They will get up in class meeting and say they are happy on the way to heaven, and training their children in nurture and admonition of the Lord, etc. Sometimes they have a large family Bible on the center-table that is only opened when the preacher comes. I have seen children from such homes converted; but can they develop into intelligent Christian characters when about the only literature they have access to is the "Saturday Blade," or "Trilby," and such like? The Lord have mercy on the people!

I think every pastor ought to enquire into and find out what his people read, and prescribe the remedy. I believe that if every preacher would make a canvass of this matter, making thorough inquiry, he would find an alarming state of affairs right in the "sheep-fold." The wolves are there, brethren, in gay clothing.

Well, I did not intend to write along this line when I started, but I have. We are having a very fine meeting out here; crowds are immense. The Word is taking hold of the people. We are expecting a great victory.

I will be at home about the first of March. I have some engagements to fill in the South. If any of the brethren desire my help for revival work in Spring or Summer, they can write me at Terry, Miss.

P. and H. M. S. of the North Mississippi Conference.

Dear sisters of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society, it has been so long (through no fault of mine) since I have talked to you through our department in the ADVOCATE that I feel that many threads have been dropped that will be difficult to pick up; but the work has gone on, and other pens have told you of its progress. Did you read carefully the Convention numbers of Our Homes, so full of information in regard to the work that has been accomplished and of noble plans for the future? Did you read the P. and H. M. S. pages so kindly given by the Nashville Advocate, with the many encouraging words from the brethren? If you did not, I can only say, Great has been your loss.

This has been a very trying season in nearly every town and community in our Conference. Grippe and pneumonia have had many victims. To some of you, dear sisters, heavy bereavement has come. My heart goes out in loving sympathy to those of you who have passed through these deep waters of affliction, and I pray that our Father may comfort and bless you in your sorrow. It has been an exceedingly cold Winter, and the severity of the weather has interfered in some places with auxiliary meetings, but the Winter is passing and the Springtime is almost here, with its budding flowers and balmy breezes. Let us take courage and go forward, determined to make this the best year that our P. and H. M. S. has ever known. Let us set our aim high and try to reach it.

Our district secretaries have not been idle. Two new auxiliaries are reported from the Greenville district, with the prospect of another on the Grenada district. Mrs. W. W. Magruder, who was elected secretary of the Columbus district, declined, but a lady of fine capacity and great energy has consented to fill the vacancy. Her name will be announced next week after the appointment is formally made. The vacancy on another district will also soon be filled.

I have just had the pleasure of reading a letter from one of our most experienced presiding elders, who says in regard to our last appropriation that it "was well bestowed, as it was much needed." Other parsonages equally needy are awaiting our help. We must not fail them. Let us help at least two more this year. We can do it. A little more energy, a little more self-denial will accomplish wonders. This year we will complete our S. Myra Smith scholarship. After that North Mississippi expects to do much more for the general work and much more at home than she has yet undertaken. We must go forward. The value of our work is too generally recognized, and our opportunities are increasing too rapidly, for us to falter now.

The request of our president in last week's ADVOCATE is a very reasonable one. We have outgrown some things that were expedient in our pioneer days, and I feel confident there is not a woman in our North Mississippi Society—whether in a regularly organized auxiliary or a Ladies' Aid that has become connectional—who will be unwilling to pay the small sum of ten cents per month, with a small contingent fee, when she reflects that this will give her an interest in the work accomplished by our Cuban and City Missions and our mountain schools, to say nothing of the privilege of aiding needy parsonages in our own Conference. These grand purposes will be carried out—there's no doubt about that. Do not let us retard them by our indifference, or lose a blessing to our own souls by failing to take part in them.

We call the attention of the Missionary Societies to the following editorial, which appears in the February number of the Woman's Advocate. Please read it. Those of you who do not subscribe for the paper will possibly do so, and those who may be induced to renew their subscriptions or send a new subscriber. Our little paper needs your support, and you need the blessing to be derived from the valuable little paper.

"Will the friends of our missionary work remember that its prosperity depends largely on the financial success of the Woman's Missionary Advocate? It is not necessary to argue this question. Then, in the beginning of this new year of 1897, please renew your subscriptions and try to secure new subscribers. Think how much is dependent on each renewal; think how many thousands of members there are—good, faithful members—who pay their dues, but never have subscribed even the small sum of fifty cents a year to this magazine, the only full exponent of our whole work! It is impossible to succeed as a Missionary Society and not be well informed. Knowledge gives enthusiasm, and enthusiasm means working with God. He, with all his power and might and majesty, will not save the world without the cooperation of his people; because like the act of breathing, it is drawing in and giving out; like faith and works, to believe and to do is his own law, and we must work together with him."

Different members have taken up this work, and have been indefatigable in sending in new subscribers—some as many as a hundred. Our society agent, Mrs. Denham, has sent a great many subscribers and renewals to Mrs. Butler, and deserves honorable mention for her zeal. We want such women to spring up in every society all over the State. Rally to the support of the Missionary Advocate.

An Orthodox Appearance.

In nearly every church there will be some members who—like old "deceiving ships" in navy yards—are dry-rotted with love of the world. They lie moored at the dock of formalism, and present an orthodox appearance. If sent to sea, and struck by a gale, they smash into a wreck. There is a certain sense in which every Christian should live for the people of the world as Christ lived, whom he died to save them, or as Paul did when he consecrated himself to bring the world to Christ. But in trying to draw the world toward God we must beware lest it drag us down into sinful conformities with its habits, its pursuits, its practices. It is not love for sinners' souls, but love for sins that endangers a Christian's character. Christians were put into the atmosphere of this world to purify it, but not to be poisoned by it. "Ye are the salt of the earth," says Jesus to his followers. But if Christians do not salt the world, then the world will rot them through and through.—Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

The Sanctity of the Home.

Major McKinley, addressing a company of aged men and women, "old settlers of Northern Ohio," said: "It is a proud pleasure to me to be able to credit to my wife and to my mother whatever good things my fellow-countrymen ascribe to me. To wife and mother mankind is indebted for those high moral qualities, gentleness, truth, and virtue which are so indispensable to a character, good citizenship, and a noble life. Our whole political future rests upon the sanctity of the American home, where the true wife and mother preside. They teach our boys and girls purity of life and thought, and point the way to usefulness and distinction. The world owes them more than it can ever pay. The man who has a pure and true love for mother and wife acquires no bond for his good behavior and can be safely trusted in every relation in life."—Western Christian Advocate.

Infinite toil would not enable us to sweep away a mist, but by ascending a little you may often look over it altogether. So it is with moral improvement: we wrestle fiercely with a vicious habit which could have no hold upon us if we could ascend into a higher moral atmosphere.

To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,

For the Drouth Sufferers.

MR. EDITOR: I will drop you a line or two concerning our doings up here in Tensas. We are getting along reasonably well with our circuit work. This country is very muddy in Winter; hence it is difficult to travel much in the early part of the year. I have been very busy the last ten days raising money and clothing for the benefit of the drouth sufferers. I will say of the people whom I serve, they have responded most liberally. We have collected two hundred dollars in cash and one box of shoes and clothing valued at forty or seventy dollars. Our police jury has appropriated five hundred dollars for the same purpose. The good people of Saint Joseph and elsewhere in the parish are contributing also. I think the people of our patronizing conferences ought to be asked to help in this matter. Some of Louisiana alone is able to care for the destitute. Perhaps it is perhaps not. Christian charity ought to know no State lines. I received a letter yesterday from an adjoining parish where great destitution prevails and many of the people sick. I am satisfied now is a good time to show our faith by our works.

Church Members.

Let us remember there are too many foes to oppose the Christian work, and to endeavor to pick flaws in everything pertaining to the sacred truths. No matter how all-important it is for us to be nice in word, to be nice in manners, and let our daily walk show to the world that we have been freed from sin and impurities of both word and deed, and are now living in God. Though it is as a great many parents are unconscious concerning the lasting impressions they are making upon the minds and hearts of their children from words and acts they are daily making and performing before them, so in the same way we find a large number of church members, both preachers and laman, making impressions upon both old and young. And one has failed not in directing them the great truth, that wrong words and deeds are followed by the same. And while it may not be considered but by a few, nevertheless it is true that a part of the shame and disgrace and ruin of the human family is traceable to some of those who claim to be followers of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Shortly before he died Sir Walter Scott said: "I have been, perhaps, the most voluminous author of my day, and it is a great comfort to me to think that I have tried to unsettle no man's faith, to corrupt no man's principles, and that I have written nothing which on my deathbed I should wish blotted out." We are aware of the fact that many who live to-day can not be able to say as he said at the last day. But we need not fail making the same record from this day forward to the end of life.

G. W. BARR,
A Country Steward.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. C. Mimms, Arcola and Hollandale: "After an absence of twelve months we were returned to our old charge, where we labored three consecutive years. We were joyously welcomed back by old friends and co-laborers. We were not a little glad to have our lot cast among familiar faces. We have been pounded by the good people till we are well nigh 'snowed under.' These are truly the kindest and most thoughtful people of their pastor and his family I have ever known. We are laboring earnestly and prayerfully, and are expecting great things of the Lord. We love the ADVOCATE, and wish it continued success. Pray for us."

Rev. E. H. Rook, Feb. 21: "I will give you some dots concerning my work on the Paris circuit. This is my second year on this work, and I have held two revival meetings up to this date this Winter. Now, this is a new thing back here in this part of the country, but not a bad thing, as results have shown. On the second Sunday in January I commenced a meeting with the help of the Lord, Bro. J. A. Braswell helping me. It was a good meeting, reviving the church—that, too, in the dead of Winter. The second was in the school building at Tchula, for Liberty Church on this work, and was assisted by Bro. McIntosh, the financial agent of the Grenada Collegiate Institute, with Professor Bell, his singer—and singer he is, too. He can come as nigh singing the gospel into the people as any man I ever saw. The meeting was a great success; over half a hundred conversions, and some thirty members received into our church. Twenty-five were received into the Baptist Church—these mostly by letter or restoration. My first venture with Winter meetings in the country have been so successful that I shall continue to have them. I have always thought that the Winter—the best part of the year for work—was being turned over to the devil. Brethren, you can have as good meetings in Winter as Summer. Try it."

Rev. J. W. Roper, Montpelier, Miss., Feb. 16, 1897: "We have gotten able to go to work after ten weeks of ill-health. Thank God we are able to be at the post of duty. This (the Sparta) circuit is in good condition. There is not a kinder people anywhere. This charge has the ability to become one of the best charges in North Mississippi. We had a good old-time pounding on our arrival here. It is doing good yet. If a preacher could get a pounding of that sort about every two months, it would be an easy matter for him and his family to live on the amount assessed. We have had all the attention that we needed up to this time. We are not any way inclined to want to swap places with any one, for we think this is one of the best in the Conference. Of course, many would say not so, because others pay more; but other things are to be considered. It was a bad day, and we had no Quarterly Conference at the first appointment, but will have one soon. We are putting forth our best efforts to get a parsonage on this charge, and by the help of the good Lord we will have a home bought and paid for by Conference. We have already contracted and are doing what we can to get money to pay for a home. We have bought most of the furniture for the home, and are raising money to pay for it at this time. We are looking, working and praying for a good revival of religion at each appointment on this charge. We ask an interest in the prayers of the brethren. May the blessings of God be with the brethren! The weekly visits of the ADVOCATE to our home are becoming more and more pleasant. Success to the ADVOCATE and love to the editor."

Bro. C. H. Bodkin, Potts Camp, Miss., Feb. 17, 1897: "About three weeks since our good pastor, L. D. Worsham, announced to his flock that a 'revival meeting' would begin on Friday night, Feb. 5, at this place under the leadership of Evangelist W. D. Bass, of Corinth. It has repeatedly been said, and even so by a few ministers of the gospel, that Potts Camp was beyond redemption. Bro. Bass arrived at the appointed hour, and was met by a few of the faithful, who did not for a moment anticipate the joy and gladness that the gracious Lord was about to and did send them. It is a well-known fact that until this meeting it was utterly impossible to get our people to agree to or do anything that would result in good. We were in debt for our parsonage, the outlook for money to pay our dear good pastor was gloomy; but Jesus Christ, the Son of the ever-living God, has been here, the balance due on the parsonage was raised in a few minutes, and in addition to this $100 was raised for Bro. Bass, and $300 in cash and subscription (every cent subscribed will be paid promptly) for our pastor—this being double the amount paid heretofore by this church. Now, I will tell you of a few of the good things accomplished by this meeting, namely: All of the backsliders have been reclaimed. Every particle of hatred, envy and strife has been driven from our midst. Men who ten days ago would have resorted to bloodshed at the slightest word, can now be seen, arm in arm, talking joyfully of the Savior of the world. We have 75 new additions and, in general, the greatest revival in the history of our town. Potts Camp is now one of the most religious towns in the State of Mississippi, and may the great God of the universe keep her thus. We are now a band of brothers on our way to heaven. Pray for us."

Rev. Wm. G Evans, Patterson, La., Feb. 17, 1897: "I have made a very good beginning on this year's work, and the indications now are for a successful year of soul winning. I have made over 80 visits to about 40 families of the Protestant community. I have received nine persons into the church, baptized two children, and buried one adult. All branches of church work have taken on new life. The Sunday-school has been reorganized and graded, and being well supplied with our literature, having a good set of officers and teachers, and being up to date in methods of work. I have reason to expect much good work from this quarter. Since Conference the Sunday school has nearly doubled in membership, including the members of the Home Department classes. One of the strongest features of our Sunday-school work is our teachers' meeting. The Epworth League is well organized, and all their meetings are well attended. As an outgrowth of the League work we now have a very fine and spiritual young men's prayer meeting held in the church every Saturday night. The W. P. and H. M. Society are laying their plans to raise a small balance due on our parsonage debt. The finances of the church are about up to date with preacher and presiding elder. About one-half of the assessments (foreign missions, Bishops and delegates to General Conference) made on us by the district stewards have been paid in full, and about $125 have been expended for other objects. Our people have not forgotten their more unfortunate brethren in the drouth-stricken section of North Louisiana, but have given liberally to supply their needs. As might be supposed from the above, the congregations have been large (for the place) and attentive. 'Lastly,' we have been 'pounded' and 'quilted;' so we are more than cared for. The last was for 'Laura, the parsonage baby.'"

Sickness makes a man's hands useless. General and nervous debility holds him down just as surely as a great weight. He feels that he is down, but he hasn't strength or energy enough to get up again. His whole body seems tired out. His head is heavy. All effort is distasteful. He is as tired in the morning as he was when he went to bed. The sleep he gets is heavy, dreamful, and unrefreshing. His body is full of turgid, healthless, impure blood. He is subject to headaches and dizziness and palpitation of the heart at the least exertion. He is on the direct road to serious sickness. Few men appreciate how serious is their case when they say: "Oh, there is nothing the matter with me. My blood is a little out of order; that is all."

Pure blood is essential to life. The more impure it becomes, the stronger hold disease has on the system. If, instead of containing health-giving, life-giving properties, the blood is full of disease-breeding impurities, how is the daily waste of the tissues to be replaced? It is perfectly natural that the man will lose vitality and nerve force—that he will lose flesh and vigor. He will be useless to himself and to everyone else.

Impure blood comes from perfectly reasonable causes, and if the proper measures are taken, it is easy to purify it. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the greatest blood-purifier that was ever known. It is more than this. It is a cleanser and invigorator for the whole system. It strengthens the digestion, works directly on the liver, restoring it to healthy, normal action. It soothes and strengthens the nerves, makes assimilation easy and nutrition perfect. It drives all impurity out of the blood, and substitutes just the material needed to bring the whole body back to the highest state of life.

When constipation is one of the symptoms of debility, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets should be used to clear the system of effete matter, and permit the "Discovery" to do its best work. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative, and two a mild cathartic. These two medicines may be had at any good drug store, and full particulars concerning them will be sent, on request, by the World's Dispensary Medical Association, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

So brief the time to smile,
Why darken we the air
With frowns and tears, the while
We nurse despair?

Stand in the sunshine sweet
And treasure every ray,
Nor seek with stubborn feet
The darksome way.

—Celia Thaxter.

No company is better than bad company.

The best way to obtain promotion is to deserve it.

If all liars should meet the fate of Ananias, the undertakers would soon be millionaires.

If an angel should spend a night under your roof, would he find congenial company? If not, why not?

Never hunt trouble. You are very likely to get your full share without your lighting a candle to search for it.

"If some people knew that the sun has spots in it, they would almost worry themselves to death."—Ram's Horn.

We go to the grave saying, "A man is dead;" but angels throng about him saying, "A man is born."—Henry Ward Beecher.

Do not conclude that a man is your enemy because he tells you of your faults. To do so is sometimes the very best evidence of friendship.

One secret of success in the pastorate is the ability to discover and utilize latent talent. There is much more in this than the average eye will see.

A four-legged porcupine in a menagerie may serve a good purpose, but a two-legged one walking around thrusting his bristles into everybody he meets is a nuisance.

Regard every man as your brother—a son of your own heavenly Father—and treat him accordingly, and you will solve a thousand problems that are too hard for the scientist and the philosopher.

If we must hear disagreeable sounds, give us the moan of the screech-owl, the squall of an irate feline, or the grating twang of the saw-filer as he plies his trade, but deliver us from the croak of the pessimist.

Don't lie awake of nights sighing for a larger field unless you are sure that you have killed all the grass in the little patch you have. This applies to preachers and Christian workers no less than to agriculturists.

The verger of St. Mary's, Oxford, on being congratulated by his rector for his constant attendance to duty, said: "I have heard every sermon that has been preached from this pulpit for fifty years, and, thank God, I am a Christian still."

Spirituality.

The very essence of true religion is spirituality. Enjoyment of religion is impossible to the unspiritual and worldy-minded. To attempt to be a Christian without being spiritual, without setting our affections more on things above than on things on the earth, is like attempting to raise a crop without planting seed. It is as foolish as trying to build a house without material. We may cultivate justice, temperance, the esteem of our fellow-men, and the outward forms of piety; but of what avail are these if we do not truly love God, if the soul has not found peace? If religion means no more than refinement, or the cultivation of the mind, how much better is it than philosophy? How is a man to tell others what he has not experienced himself? How can we commend the blessings of conversion to others when we are strangers to them and to their meaning? A liberal man may do good with his money; a wise man may instruct others; a polite, sympathetic, obliging man will have many friends; but only a spiritual man—one who lives close to God—can impress men with the power of religion and with their need of Christ. It is not enough that we impress men by our culture, generosity, honesty and courtesy. We must reach their hearts by our deep concern and unmistakable love for them, and "provoke them to love and good works" by our purity and piety. Some one has said of Sheridan that "had he possessed principle, he might have ruled the world." Similarly, it might be said that if every Christian felt the "power of an endless life," the world would soon be brought to Christ.

The chief reason why it is so unusual for conversions to take place out of revival seasons is, that the average Christian is not alive to a sense of his duty as a soul winner. How few make any effort to convert their friends and associates, or influence them for good, except during a revival season. The church is full of inert, self-satisfied people who are like an engine with the fire either unkindled or gone out. A man can no more serve God without subordinating the flesh to the spirit, without the guidance and power of the Holy Ghost, than a locomotive can run without steam. Not all can be wise, or wealthy, or great, but every believer may be and ought to be spiritual.

It is good to be loyal, diligent, orthodox church men; but to be men and women of fervent, irreproachable piety is best of all, for then shall we both save ourselves and many around us. Not a few, however, pride themselves more upon the strength and responsibility of their church than upon their personal godliness. How we should long for such companionship with God, such indwelling and outshining of the Spirit as the Scriptures portray to be the inestimable privilege of every believer! Of some it can be said that the smell of heaven is upon their garments, the light of glory upon their faces, and their very presence a benediction. It is related that when Florence Nightingale entered the hospitals at Crimea, the whole atmosphere seemed changed. From that moment the rough soldiers, though racked with pain, bore their sufferings in silence, uttering not a word to shock the most fastidious. Chateaubriand said that though he saw Washington but once, it served to inspire his whole life. What a remarkable testimony to a noble character! It is said that the presence of Napoleon on the field of battle was equal to a re-enforcement of forty thousand soldiers. Was there ever a more striking example of the force of a great personality? Somewhat similar to this should be the forcefulness of every Christian. For every true discipline may have with him continually the presence of Him to whom belong "all power in heaven and on earth," and who is "able to do for us abundantly above all that we ask or think." Every Christian may "save a soul from death," and thus perform a nobler deed than the founding of an empire.

Spirituality has manifestations and degrees as various as the tints of the sky, or as the leaves of the forest; but, like the odor of musk, its presence is unmistakable. It imparts a power and fragrance to human life that can come only from above. A spiritual man is neither selfish, proud, contentious, self-willed, covetous, nor uncharitable. To boast of superior spiritual attainments is to proclaim our lack of them.

We should make sure that we have been planted in God, and then we should grow in spirituality as naturally as a tree grows in a well-cultivated orchard. Some professing Christians are keeping watch over an empty treasure-house, deluding themselves with false hopes, and content with a fair outside long after the precious jewel of a regenerated heart has been lost. The rich man is wont to rely upon his wealth, the genius upon his extraordinary powers, the scholar upon his learning, the diplomatist upon his tact and cunning; but the Christian is undone if he puts his trust in any of these. He must lean upon an invisible arm, and strive for an invisible, yet imperishable reward. His conflict is with a spiritual foe, and victories must be won by spirit-power bestowed by the Lord of all. If spirituality be lacking, all is lacking. "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace."

Dr. J. B. Walker Dead.

Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D., died at his home near Mississippi City, Miss., on the twenty-sixth, and was buried at Ocean Springs, Miss., on the twenty-seventh, the funeral services being conducted by Bishop Keener. Dr. Walker was in his eighty-first year. He was licensed to preach at nineteen, and hence had been in the ministry a little more than sixty years. He was first a member of the Tennessee Conference and afterwards of the Mississippi Conference. With the exception of four years spent in Galveston, Texas, he has been a member of the Louisiana Conference since 1851, during all of which time until last year he was actively engaged in the work of the ministry. In his prime he was one of the pulpit magnates of Southern Methodism. He was not only a great preacher, but he was a most excellent pastor. Few men have such a capacity for making friends and holding them as with hooks of steel. We know of no man more universally beloved. In this city, where he lived for about forty years, if he has a single foe, or if there is a single person who regards him otherwise than with feelings of admiration, we have yet to hear of it. In real saintliness we have rarely known his equal. He was well known to the readers of the ADVOCATE, having been a contributor to its columns for many years. On our first page will be found an article from his pen which will be read with mournful interest, it being doubtless the last article he ever wrote for the church press. It was already in type when the message came summoning him from his labors on earth to his reward on high. Those of us who are so fortunate as to enter the pearly gates will meet him again, provided we get near enough to the great, white throne.

A memoir will appear in our next issue from the pen of Bishop Keener.

The Time Limit.

The general impression in this latitude is that the M. E. Church is rapidly moving in the direction of a removal of the time limit from the pastorate. The following from a recent issue of the Peninsula Methodist seems to indicate otherwise.

"It is now being acknowledged that the most serious mistake the M. E. Church ever did was to lengthen its pastorate from three to five years. The records of all our Conferences since the change was made give conclusive proof that more pastoral changes are now demanded than ever before, and that the work of the Bishop and his cabinet in the adjustment of the appointments grows in embarrassment with each succeeding year. It is simply awful to note the changes which are now demanded at the end of the first year of service. If there be the least complaint against a pastor, be it ever so insignificant, the people say we must have a change, and at once; we can not stand it five years. Under the old system, three years did not seem so long, and the people bore with the failings of the pastors, realising that the time was near at hand when the economy of the church would remove the pastor without any special interference on their part. In our judgment, the time is almost at hand, if not now, it soon will be, when the M. E. Church shall, by its vote, return to the three years' limit. If the time comes when the time limit shall be entirely removed, as is now seriously proposed in some quarters, good-by to Methodism in the country districts and in the smaller towns. It might do admirably with city churches, filled for the most part with competent preachers who receive splendid salaries, but it would be the death knell to the work in rural communities."

A New Venture in Journalism.

"The Visiting Friend" is the name of a paper published in this city, the first number of which bears date of Feb. 13, 1897. It is published at 631 Poydras street. It is a small eight-page weekly; price, $1 per annum. Its salutatory contains a declaration of principles, which may be briefly summarized thus: It is independent in politics. It favors a revision of our immigration laws so as to "protect our suffering fellow-citizens from the competition of foreign panperized ignorance," and "to check the flow of foreign vice and crime which now threaten to overwhelm us." "It will specially combat that sentiment which would divide the allegiance of the American to his country with any foreign prince, potentate, or power." It advocates "free, non-sectarian public schools, believing them to be the bulwark of American institutions, the corner-stone of American prosperity, and the guardian of American liberty." It advocates "the utmost liberty of conscience and the most complete separation of Church and State." From this declaration of principles it is a natural inference that this new candidate for popular favor is the organ of the A. P. A., though this is nowhere stated. It has been known for some time that the A. P. A. is in New Orleans; but that it has attained such dimensions as to sustain a paper devoted to its interests will probably be a surprise to the country at large.

Wise Words.

A short time since one James B. Wilson, of Indiana, was sentenced by a United States Court to a fine of $250 and two years' imprisonment for sending obscene literature through the mails. As is usual in such cases, a lot of goody-goody people with very small heads started a petition for the pardon of the offender, and as usual everybody in his family signed the petition. In due time the petition was returned by President Cleveland, with the following indorsement:

Denied. This convict was one of the editors and proprietors and a distributor through the mails and otherwise of a disgustingly vile and obscene newspaper. His conviction and sentence was an event distinctly tending to the promotion of public morals and the protection of the sons and daughters of our land from filth and corruption at a time when indecent newspaper publications are so dangerous and common. Everybody in favor of cleanliness should encourage the punishment of such offenses and desire that it should be more frequently imposed. While I am much surprised by the number of respectable people who have joined in urging clemency in this case, my duty seems so clear that I am not in the least tempted to interfere with the just and wholesome sentence of the court.

A Reward Offered.

An exchange says that the following notice was recently posted on the door of a church:

"Missing, last Sunday, some families from church.

"Stolen, several hours from the Lord's day, by a number of people of different ages dressed in their Sunday clothes.

"Strayed, half a score of lambs, believed to have gone in the direction of 'No Sunday-school.'

"Wanted, several young people. When last seen were walking in pairs up Sabbath Breakers' Lane, which leads to the city of No Good.

"Lost, a lad carefully reared, not long from home, and for a time very promising. Supposed to have gone with one or two older companions to Prodigal Town, Husk Lane.

"Any person assisting in the recovery of the above 'shall in no wise lose his reward.'"

Church Dedication at West Point, Miss.

Last Sunday was a great day with us. According to announcement, Bishop Galloway was here to dedicate our church, and, of course, everybody must hear him. He is nearer everybody's Bishop in Mississippi than any other man in it. He was at his best as usual. His sermon in the morning was instructive, edifying, and inspiring. After the sermon a small collection was taken, after which the Bishop, assisted by Rev. Amos Kendall, the former pastor and builder of the new church, Rev. R. A. Burroughs, and Rev. G. W. Bachman, performed the ceremony of dedication. At night the Bishop highly entertained and profited a large congregation on his trip to the Orient. His coming will ever be hailed with pleasure. W. S. LAGRONE.

Rev. J. W. Luter.

The following note from Bro. Stone will be read with sorrow by the brethren of the North Mississippi Conference. Bro. Luter was a faithful preacher and a most excellent man.

Rev. J. W. Luter passed away suddenly this A. M., about eight o'clock. He was to go with me to his quarterly meeting to-morrow morning. A good and true man has gone. How we shall miss him! We are in great sorrow! The physician says Bro. Luter had heart failure.

An Appeal.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow space in the columns of your valuable paper for me to say to the general public that the people in the northern part of our beloved State are now undergoing a condition of life never witnessed before. It is such as has brought us to beg for our daily bread. We ask that the people of the city of New Orleans send us something upon which to live. Unless we can be helped, we can not farm. Anything will be highly appreciated—food, clothes, and anything else that will do a people in a drouth-stricken district. Oblige, J. M. DADE.

P. S.—For reference: Rev. W. U. H. Wharton.

Arcadia, La.

Unreasonable and Unfair.

It is a curious fact that some readers both of secular and of religious journals may during a year read with approval hundreds of articles which have in some way helped or cheered them, and never think of writing a single line of commendation; but if one paragraph runs counter to their views, they will immediately address to the editor a stinging reproof, and perhaps refuse to continue their subscriptions. This is very unreasonable and unfair. Perhaps the paragraph complained of may be just the one most needed, and offends you only because of its personal application of truth to the conscience. But even if this is not true, and the article complained of had better not been written, is it fair to put it in the scales as of greater weight than everything that deserves our approval? An editor or a minister whose utterances are so colorless as never to offend any one, comes under the condemnation of Christ himself: "Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you: for so did their fathers to the false prophets." Christ demands faithfulness.—Michigan Presbyterian.

In some quarters there is fear that at the session of our Conference in Staunton the report that Dr. S. S. Lowell once made of his duties will be duplicated. He said: "Bishop, the people down on my district believe that in order to make a man a saint you must reduce him to a skeleton, and as the necessary consequence of that belief my preachers come up to this Conference not only with clean hands and pure hearts, but with clean teeth, empty stomachs, and pockets as light as the down on a humming-bird's wing."—Baltimore Advocate.

Last week we had the pleasure of hearing a lecture on socialism given in the Arena Club Hall by Bishop Davis Sessums. The lecture was able, thoughtful, and learned, and was characterized by that affluence of elegant diction and that easy grace of delivery which the public has learned to expect of the distinguished prelate. We are under obligations to the talented president of the club, Mrs. J. M. Ferguson, for an invitation to attend—doubly so from the fact that none but invited guests are ever privileged to hear lectures given under the auspices of the Arena Club.

President McKinley enters upon the duties of his high position with the good wishes of the entire American people. Those who opposed his election respect him as a man of integrity, and hope that he may be able so to shape his administration of public affairs as to usher in an era of prosperity. Mr. McKinley seems to have been studious of the public good in his selection of cabinet officers. His choice for the treasury portfolio is pre-eminently a wise one. It is our deliberate opinion that no better selection could have been made from the ranks of any political party. We regard Lyman J. Gage as one of the really great men of the nation, and one who possesses special adaptation to the position to which he has been called.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale, of Boston, not merely declines to subscribe to the funds of the American Bible Society, but writes a public letter in which he says that his action is based upon the fact of the Society's publishing the Scriptures in King Jamos' rather than in the Revised Version. This strikes us as being rather a small way of looking at things. The Revised Version has some points of manifest superiority, but it has not commanded the unqualified approval of the majority of scholars, and is not likely to displace King James' Version in popular use. Dr. Hale is following in the track of the Baptists, who withhold their contributions on the ground that the Society refuses to substitute the word "immerse" in place of the word "baptize."—Nashville Advocate.

MISSIONS IN THE PROPHETS.

MARCH 7—THE CALL TO WORK.
(Isa. vi, 1-10)

The passage contains a most vivid symbolic vision of invisible things. "The holy of holies in the temple, with the veil removed, is the scene where the vision occurs." The prophet beholds the dazzling spectacle of Jehovah in communion with his angelic ministers, the seraphim, and so intense is the glory of the divine presence that the very fabric of the temple is caused to pulsate. The winged seraphs, poised about the divine throne, engage in a responsive service of adoration to the holy Trinity, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory." The threefold utterance of "holy" seems to involve the mysterious Trinity of the Godhead. (Verses 1-4.)

This impressive scene was directly for the spiritual benefit of Isaiah, the prophet of the Lord, and was the occasion of God's special call for special service of the most sacred character. It was also intended to teach an invalnable spiritual lesson to every one who would be a prophet, or missionary, or servant of the Lord.

1. The call to work implies a previous call to special consecration and purification. Isaiah's vision of the holiness of God, and the holy consecrated devotion of his angel ministers, caused him to realize his own impurity and unfitness for the sacred service of God's messenger to the people. He cries out in spiritual distress, and one of the seraphs laid upon his mouth a living coal from off the altar, a symbol of purification from sin, and special preparation for the work to which he is called. So it is that no one is fitted to do service for God unless he is entirely consecrated and possessed of the purifying influence of the spirit of God. (Verses 5-7.)

2. The call to work is the "voice of the Lord," and is answered by the consecrated servant.

God calls for volunteers for service, the consecrated man or woman readily responds to the call, and then God sends the volunteer upon various missions of love. God calls in our hearing as in the hearing of Isaiah, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" And like Isaiah, the true servant eagerly cries, "Here am I, send me." (Verse 8.)

The main thoughts of our topic are, then, preparation for work, and placing ourselves in God's hands, as his willing servants, to go on whatever mission he sends us.

"Let none hear you idly saying,
'There is nothing I can do,'
While the souls of men are dying,
And the Master calls for you;
Take the task he gives you gladly,
Let his work your pleasure be;
Answer quickly when he calleth,
'Here am I, send me, send me.'"

The Combination Oil Cure for Cancer

Has the indorsement of the highest medical authority in the world. It would seem strange indeed if persons afflicted with cancers and tumors, after knowing the facts, would resort to the dreaded knife and burning plaster which have hitherto been attended with such fatal results. The fact that in the last three years over one hundred doctors have put themselves under this mild treatment shows their confidence in the new method of treating those horrible diseases. Persons afflicted will do well to send for free book giving particulars and prices of Oil. Address Dr. Bye, Indianapolis, Ind.

La Grippe.

SOME RECENT REPORTS CONCERNING RAVAGES OF THIS PREVALENT DISEASE.

Dr. Hartman is constantly receiving letters from all parts of the United States from people who have suffered from la grippe or are suffering from it. The Doctor's remedy, Pe-ru-na, is found to be of great value in the treatment of this disease. N. N. Coons, Monmouth, Ill., writes: "Last fall I was taken with la grippe and was unable to do my work. I consulted several of our best doctors, but found very little relief. I saw one of your advertisements and concluded to give your Pe-ru-na a trial. I bought two bottles and was surprised at the good it did me. I used it all and bought six more bottles and was soon able to go back to my work. I think your Pe-ru-na is an excellent medicine, and I have recommended it to others." Geo. W. Norman, 2531 Nicollet Ave., Minneapolis, Minn, was also cured of la grippe with Pe-ru-na.

Many cases of cures of la grippe are recorded in Dr. Hartman's latest book on chronic catarrh and catarrhal disease. The book contains 64 pages, instructively illustrated. It will be sent free for a short time by The Peru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio.

A Self-Supporting Widow.

About a year ago my husband died and left me in rather destitute circumstances. Just after our marriage his health failed, and for that reason he was unable to lay by for a rainy day. A friend of mine from Illinois called on me and told me how much money she was making by selling the Iron City Dish Washer, and said she thought I could at least make a good living by doing the same. I wrote the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Dep't A 5, Sta. A, Pittsburg, Pa., for a sample. Since then I have been making a splendid living for my children and myself, and still attend to my household duties. Last month I cleared over $100, and am delighted with my success. The Dish Washer works like a charm, and the distasteful work of washing dishes can be done in a few moments without soiling the hands a particle. Any one who sees it work wants one at once, so they are no trouble to sell. I would advise anyone out of employment to write for full particulars, as they started me in business and will do the same for others.

To the Stewards and Members of the M. E. Church in the Arcadia District.

Dear Brethren: I am nearing the close of my first round of Quarterly Conferences, and will begin the second round before I finish the first, as you will see from the announcement. I have been made to feel sad at each Quarterly Conference at the reports of stewards in the matter of ministerial support. I can't be mistaken when I say that somebody has neglected their duty. I am afraid that very many have done so. I know that there is not much money in this country, and that there is a great scarcity of provisions; but, at the same time, there are enough of members in every pastoral charge who are able to keep the preacher from suffering if they will. I ask the stewards to make a vigorous canvass at once, that the preachers may be encouraged to feel that the church is going to take care of them. They (the preachers) are your servants. They are to break to you the bread of heaven, to get your children and neighbors converted, and build up the church in all her interests. Will not every member that loves God and the souls of men for whom Christ died rally to the support of their preacher during this hard year? I confess, from a human standpoint, that the outlook is dark, but I thank God I am living by faith, moving on as though I was in the land of Goshen. I propose to give my whole time and labor to the interests of the church in the district. I want to meet every Quarterly Conference, and pray that God may meet his people in each service, and so manifest his presence as to dispel all doubt and unbelief.

Dear brethren, one and all, let us live in touch with Christ, walking in fellowship with the Holy Spirit from day to day, and the problem of support will solve itself. Our hope is in God. If we do our duty, he will take care of us. If we forsake him, he will cast us off. B. T. Crews.

Louisiana Conference Minute Fund.

It is well known that for many years some of us were opposed to paying for the printing of our Minutes with money drawn from funds collected for other purposes. Several years ago, at the motion of the writer, this custom was abolished, but revived in a year or two, to be continued till little more than a year ago, when, at the Jackson Conference, the custom was again suspended, a Minute Fund provided for by the assessment against the several charges of an amount sufficient to fully cover all expenses of publication. The plan was new, and did not work well; hence, when we met at Ruston, a year later, we found we had no funds for the expenses of our printed Minutes. Failing in an effort to make temporary provision, it was agreed that the preachers pay for as many copies of the Minutes as they desired at the rate of ten cents per copy, and that the previous arrangement for a collection in each charge for the Minute Fund be continued. This personal contribution by the preachers was not to interfere in any way with the Minute Fund for the next session, but persons contributing at the rate of ten cents per copy might reimburse themselves from the sale of the Minutes when received by them.

Under the resolution now standing on the records of the Jackson Conference for our guidance, no part of the "apportionment by the district stewards" to any charge for 1897 can be applied to the expenses of the Minutes of the session of 1896 The amount necessary to constitute the Minute Fund is very small in the several charges, and will be easily raised of the preachers. Think of it, and try. Let the amount for "Conference Minutes" be taken up this year, and "paid to the secretary" at Crowley at our next session. If this is done, we will be at the end of this Minute trouble.

To the Members of the Louisiana Ministerial Brotherhood.

Brethren: The death of Dr. J. B. Walker chronicles the second death in our membership. Each is urged to secure at least five honorary members by the payment of one dollar mortuary due.

Dear brethren, bring this worthy cause before your charges and secure as many honorary members as possible and send name and address of each, so they can be enrolled and credited with amounts. Each friend of Dr. Walker should join in by sending a dollar as a token of their love and veneration for him. Brethren, please forward your third assessment and all dues from honorary members at earliest possible date. My address is 2106 Baronne street, New Orleans, La.

Mrs. Mary T. Hawkins.

Mrs. Mary T. Hawkins, wife of Rev. H. G. Hawkins, of the Mississippi Conference, and only daughter of Judge S. H. Terrel, died in Quitman, Miss., Feb. 25, 1897. She was buried from the family residence the following evening at three o'clock. A large number of friends and relatives followed her remains to the cemetery. She was talented, cultured, and truly pious. Sister Hawkins was loved and respected by all who knew her.

The bereaved husband and family are in deep sorrow. We pray God to give them grace sufficient to sustain them in this time of great trouble.

A suitable memoir will be sent in due time. J. T. Nicholson.

The Drouth Sufferers.

The noble generosity of the people in behalf of the drouth-stricken sufferers is admirable indeed. It is a sad fact that there are many worthy people, aged, infirm and children, together with some who are industrious and frugal, that are in great poverty. There are (sad to say) many, very many, who from drinking, gambling, and consequent idleness, together with the fruits of the credit system, also in very great poverty. Our people have for years been making their crops on borrowed money, and failing (many of them) from year to year to pay their merchants, have brought the merchants into such straitened circumstances that they can not furnish supplies to the people, and the consequences are there are numbers of people who can not make crops at all for the want of corn to feed their teams while making it. How to meet this want is quite a problem. Many of this class are colored people, and they are now demoralized, so that it is difficult to keep them at work. It will be well to arrange so that these people can get their supplies weekly. Will some one suggest a plan.

Rev. Frederic R. I always keep a vial of the Tabules upon my dressing table, and use them with confidence whenever occasion arises. UNTIL TO-MORROW.

If you have a task to do
That seems as if you'd ne'er get through,
Believe me that the wisest way
Is to begin the task to-day.

If you have a word unsaid,
Spoken, would make one comforted,
Go find that one, and say it straight;
It is a word that can not wait.

If you can do a kindly deed,
Can heal the sick or hungry feed,
Do not leave the deed undone
Until you see to-morrow's sun.

But angry word, and selfish way,
Are best put off another day,
And then another day again;
Postpone what gives another pain.

So keep the hasty speeches down;
And make a smile chase back the frown.
In silence let ill-temper lie
For an eternal by-and-by.

Women Millionaires.

The United States claims two of the six richest women in the world. The remaining four are all of different nationalities. Senora Isidora Cousino, whose name stands first on the list of these notable women, is a native of Chile. Senora Isidora Cousino has her home in Santiago. She was an only child, and at her father's death inherited magnificent landed estates, which had been accumulating for generations, and upon which rich coal mines have since been developed. Her husband was also an extensive land-owner, and dying soon after her father, the senora was left the possessor of landed estates which, under her supervision, have increased in value until their present estimate is reckoned at the magnificent sum of $200,000,000. The revenue from her coal lands alone amounts to $80,000 a month. She is royal in her beneficences wherever her fancy leads. Some years ago, when the American fleet was at Valparaiso, the admiral and his officers were invited to become her guests. They were most royally entertained at her palatial residence.

Hetty Robinson Green is the richest woman in the United States and the second in the world. Her birthplace is given as Rhode Island. Her father was a wealthy ship owner at New Bedford, Mass., and later at New York. He accumulated hundreds of thousands of dollars from the profits of his whaleships. He died in 1864, or thereabouts, leaving an immense fortune to Hetty, which, by shrewd management, has increased to its colossal proportions. By those who have the best opportunities for judging, her fortune is estimated to be about fifty millions. Hetty Green has two grown children, a son and daughter. Her husband is an invalid, who sits in his easy-chair in their unpretentious home in Rhode Island, while his wife, in the plainest of black bonnets and gowns, flits here and there, engaged in litigation against some trust or railroad company, some executor or trustee. Life is apparently with Hetty Green one long business tangle.

Mary Garrett lives in a palatial mansion in Baltimore, a notable feature of which is a most magnificent conservatory. Among the not small army of servants in this establishment is a French cook, who receives an annual salary of $5,000. Miss Garrett is not only a good student, speaking four languages, but she is also a good business woman. She is familiar with the management of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, which her father founded, and from whom presumably she received her thirty millions. The largest part of her income is devoted to charity. She recently established a school at Bryn Mawr, in which indigent girls can prepare for college. She is ever ready to assist where poverty is an obstacle in the path of rising genius.

Baroness Burdett-Coutts inherited from her grandfather Coutts a fortune now estimated at twenty millions. Her years now number more than fourscore. She resides at Holly Lodge, a suburb of London. In 1881 she was married to William Ashmead Bartlett, now William Ashmead Bartlett Burdett Coutts, as he took her name at their marriage. He is thirty-seven years her junior. In 1871 she was raised to the peerage in honor of her public beneficence, and is notable for munificent charities.

The Marquise de Rhoda has been twice married. Her first husband, General Barrios, was assassinated in Guatamala, when she was but thirty years of age, and left her seven children and $15,000,000. She removed to New York, and resided there until her marriage with the Marquis de Rhoda. She now lives in Spain. She is a handsome brunette, and an accomplished performer on the harp.

Madame Woleska, whose name completes this illustrious sextet, is a widow who inherited vast wealth, now increased to ten millions. She is a thorough business woman, and owns village after village and town after town in the empire of Russia. She has introduced improved agricultural implements, which enable her to secure more remunerative leases than her neighbors. She lives a quiet, retiring life, absorbed in the care and management of her property.—Sarah E. Wilcox, in the Household.

A Quality Most Desired.

Among the qualities most to be desired in a young girl's character is a high sense of honor. I wish I could impress on every reader the need of being always above everything petty or small, so that one would not for a single moment ever be tempted to do a mean or underhand thing, to speak unkindly of a friend, or to repeat a conversation which was confidential.

It may happen to you, for instance, to be visiting in the home of a relative or friend, where there may be a little friction at the table, or where some anxiety arises about the course of a member of the family. No matter what you see or hear, in such circumstances you are bound, if you are an honorable person, to be silent about it, neither making comments nor looking as if you could tell something if you choose, nor in any way alluding to what is unpleasant, at any future time. A guest in a home can not be too careful to guard the good name of those under its roof, for it is an honor to be a guest, in the first place, and honor is demanded in return.

Again, a nice sense of honor in matters connected with money is very important. Polly is treasurer of a society, and has the care of the funds. She must never for an instant, or in an emergency, lend these funds to other people, or borrow them for her own use. I know a girl—Polly was her name, by the way—who was induced, being treasurer of a certain guild, to lend her brother, for one day, the money she had in her care. The brother was older than Polly, and a very persuasive person. He said: "Why should you hesitate? I'll bring it back to you to-night, and it will oblige me very much if I can take that fifty dollars and pay a bill I owe before noon to-day." Foolish Polly permitted her scruples to be overruled. The money was not brought back, and but for her father's kindness in making it good she would been disgraced as a dishonest treasurer. She told me long afterwards that the lesson had been burned in on her mind never to take liberties with money which she held in trust.—Harper's Round Table.

Our Safeguard.

Lyman Beecher, Horace Mann and other great and good men of their day saw the ruin that must overtake democracy unless public virtue was maintained; but they put too much reliance upon intellectual culture, upon general intelligence as a means of maintaining public virtue. They said that we must educate or perish. So we devised a splendid system of public schools, upon the plea that general intelligence is the basis of self-government. Well, it may be a basis, but an experience of two generations shows us that it is not the basis—at least, not all of it. Where public schools do most abound—even where they are the pride and boast of the city—we find private vice, social sins and political corruptions most abounding.

The reason is not far to seek. Our educational system exercises the sense of the youth in everything more than in the discernment of good and evil. We train them sedulously in the power to see what is correct and what incorrect in the forms of speech, in musical tones, in mathematical formulas, in everything except moral conduct. The power to discern good and evil in this domain is sadly neglected, and in many a boy is practically atrophied by the time he gets through his high school into the college. And here we aggravate the evil by handing over to the youngster the government of his own conduct, when the matter of conduct has been the least in his studies. It is this that is making our colleges such moral anomalies.

There is but one remedy; the persistent cultivation of the moral sense, from the cradle to the university. We must make this stone, so long neglected by our educational builders, the head of the corner, or our temple of liberty must fall.—B. J. Radford.

A Good Story.

Canon Farrar tells the following story, illustrating John Wesley's catholicity:

Dean Stanley delighted in a story—I know not its source, and will not vouch for its authenticity—which he called "Wesley's Dream." It told how Wesley dreamt that, wandering to the gate of Gehenna, he asked whether there were any Romanists, any Anglicans, any Baptists, any Calvinists, any Independents there, and was told in each case, "Yes, a great many," and was yet more deeply pained when, asking, "And are there any Wesleyans here?" it was still answered, "Yes, a great many." Then returning to the gates of heaven, he asked, "Are there any Romanists here?" "None, whatever." "Any Anglicans?" "None, whatever." "Any Baptists?" "None, whatever." "Any Calvinists?" "None, whatever." "Any Wesleyans?" Still none whatever. "Whom, then, have you here?" he asked in amazement. "We have none but Christians here," was the answer. "We know no other name." Whether the story was a pleasing allegory of the Dean's or not, I can not tell; but this I know, that Wesley's sermon on the Catholic Spirit would have the honor of being thought shockingly lax by bigots of every denomination, yet all true Christians might well say with him, "I desire to have a League, offensive and defensive, with every soldier of Christ."

The Destiny of Woman.

I think that the Almighty intended the work of woman in this world should be, above all, the rearing of a family. He gave into her keeping the souls and characters of the young, to make or to mar. And surely there is no nobler or more responsible work than this. From the home—the domain of woman—spring most of the highest impulses of humanity. And to fit woman for her great work the Creator made her of a finer cast than men; there is nothing on earth so noble, so pure, so exalted, so near the ideal of character, as a good woman. Woman can rise higher than man; but she can likewise sink lower. The very height which she can attain seems to make her fall the greatest when she does fall. There is a great strength and great weakness in woman's character; and it is a vital duty of men, whose greater evenness of temperament gives them greater self-control, and consequently a commanding position, to do everything in their power to enable the woman to be true to her higher nature.

I believe that, all things else being equal, the happiest woman is the woman who is a mother and the maker of a home; but if she can not fulfil her true destiny, if she must enter the business world, she should be given the greatest consideration, simply because she is a woman. I have heard women say that they ask for nothing on the ground of sex. Perhaps they don't, but personally I can not forget their sex.—Dwight L. Moody, in Demorest's Magazine.

The Lemon's the Thing.

The very latest cosmetic is the lemon. In countries where they grow as freely as apples do in the temperate zone, this fact is appreciated and their virtues availed of; but, says a writer on the subject, their admirable qualities are worthy of wider knowledge. Lemons are not so costly, even in the coldest countries, that women may not easily afford to use this tropical aid to the toilet.

For the Skin. In the care of the complexion it is invaluable, particularly in Summer, when a few drops squeezed into the water in which the face is washed removes all greasiness and leaves the skin fresh and velvety. A little lemon juice rubbed on the cheeks before going to bed and allowed to dry there will remove freckles and sunburn and whiten the skin, besides giving it a charming smoothness and softness to the touch. This should be done about three times a week, both Winter and Summer, and is of the greatest aid to such complexions as are afflicted with enlarged and blackened pores. These enlarged pores are due to deficient circulation of the blood and are to be greatly aided by vigorous rubbing with a coarse towel every time the face is washed.

Those who lead a sedentary life find the circulation feeblest about the nose, lips and temples, and these parts of the face should be energetically rubbed and kneaded several times a day. When the pores become distended the fine invisible dust in the air enters and clogs and blackens them. Mere ordinary face washing, even when warm water and soap are used, is not sufficient to remove this dirt in the pores, but the vigorous acid of the lemon will cleanse and carry off all such unsightly blemishes.

Taking Care of Your Eyes.

Rest is one of the most important factors in treating diseased or strained eyes—rest of eyes, rest of body and mind. Avoid also wind, dust and smoke. Personal habits enter into the question of causation of eye disease, and their regulation becomes, therefore, a part of the hygienic treatment. Diet is important, chiefly through its effects upon digestion and general health, which frequently have much to do with the condition of the eye. The first offense against the eye is reading with a poor light. This requires the ciliary muscles to do an extra work to sharpen sight. It applies to dim lights, twilight, sitting too far from the light. The second offense is one of posture—stooping or lying down congests the eye, besides requiring unnatural work of the eye muscles. Reading in trains is one third offense, the motion causing such frequent changes of focus and position as to tax the muscles of accommodation as well as the muscles of fixation. Reading with needed glasses or with badly fitted ones is the last. Eye strain is certainly a factor in producing disease of every part of the eye. Old age is the time of retribution for those who have sinned against their eyes. Young folks, take splendid care of your eyes, and when you are old you will reap a rich reward. —Journal of Health.

To Break Up a Cold.

A mother writes to an exchange that she finds no better home remedy than to drink as much flaxseed tea as possible just before going to bed. To make this, boil two tablespoonfuls of whole flaxseed in a pint of water for fifteen minutes. Squeeze the juice of a lemon into a bowl over two tablespoonfuls of sugar, strain the tea boiling hot over this, and drink as hot as can be borne. The hot drink will cause a profuse perspiration, and the flaxseed, lemon and sugar will relieve a cough by soothing the irritation in the throat. If the cold begins to tighten the lung power, apply a mustard plaster to the chest. Make this plaster of one teaspoonful of mustard to three tablespoonfuls of flour mixed to a paste with the white of an egg, which will prevent blistering. Spread the paste on a piece of thin muslin or cheese cloth, cover with another cloth, apply to the chest, and over all put one or two thicknesses of flannel. Do not delay when you feel a cold coming on. The ounce of prevention is worth much more than the pound of cure.—Health.

It amalgamates perfectly with the most delicate cooking; that's why it is so good for chafing dish use.

A little in boiling water makes refreshing beef tea (bouillon) at once.

A THOUGHT THAT KILLED A MAN!

He thought that he could trifle with disease. He was run down in health, felt tired and worn out, complained of dizziness, billousness, backaches and headaches. His liver and kidneys were out of order. He thought to get well by dosing himself with cheap remedies. And then came the ending. He fell a victim to Bright's disease! The money he ought to have invested in a safe, reliable remedy went for a tombstone.

SELBY—My grandmother, Mrs. L. E. Selby, widow of S. E. Selby, was born of Christian parents in Baldwin county, Ga., on the eighteenth day of April, 1811. She was the daughter of James Simmons; her mother's name I do not recall, though I heard her speak of her often. In early childhood she moved with her parents to Giles county, Tenn., and resided there until she had reached womanhood, attending school at Florence, Ala., in the meantime. She had three brothers: Isaac, Rev. Jackson (father of Rev. John C. Simmons, D. D., of the Pacific Conference, and his sainted brother, W. A.), and Jimmie—all men of sterling worth in their day. Her sisters (four) were: Belle, Nancy, Annie, and Winnie, her twin sister, all of whom were devoted followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. After a time her parents removed to North Alabama, thence to Choctaw county, Ala., where she was married to S. E. Selby in 1836. There were born to this devoted couple five children—three sons and two daughters. The eldest child, a daughter, died in infancy, and one son, G. W., was killed in battle at Antietam during the late war. Her children who remain on this side are: T. H., with whom she has lived for the past twelve years, and J. H., of Meridian, Miss., and Mrs. Roberta Thompson, of Texas. Beside these there are a number of grandchildren, who are sorely bereaved on account of her departure. She was born in a Methodist home, where the Spirit of Christ reigned; consequently, she was a Methodist and a Christian of the true type. She remained true until her passage from earth to glory. Her life, while fraught with much anxiety, dread and fear, living in a period of construction and afterwards of reconstruction, was comparatively calm and placid. Her home during the four years of fearful struggle was in Jasper county, Miss., and having three sons engaged in the conflict, she was more or less anxious all the while. For the past thirty-years she resided in Newton, Miss., where twelve years ago she was bereft of her husband.

There were many striking characteristics that belonged to her long and well-spent life. They were essential in the development of the Christian graces, but there being so many in whose lives they are not seen, they were especially noticeable in her. Her faith in God was always clear and strong. I never knew her to be in a doubtful state of mind as to the mercy and grace of God, and this is my father's testimony after being intimately associated with her for fifty years. When I was a child in her home I would often see her go in a secret place for prayer, and she retained this prayerful spirit throughout her life. While she was naturally a timid woman, she was always ready to testify to her Lord's goodness and love toward her. She was never known to be out of her place in the sanctuary when it was possible for her to be there. No one can be more devoted to the church and its interests than she was. She rejoiced in song, prayer, and sermon, and delighted in communing with the people of God; always glad of a visit from her pastor. She enjoyed visiting the parsonage, and was in sympathy with the pastor and his family in all the work of the church. While she had nearly reached her eighty-sixth year, she was old only in years, for she retained a youthful spirit up to the evening before she died. Another strong feature that attracted attention was that her mind was as strong and quick to comprehend as it had ever been. She could see the ridiculous as well as the strong side of a question. Her life as a Christian was transparent. One of the delights of her life was to talk of incidents of the long ago, and especially the camp-meeting seasons of her young womanhood, where the strong men of Methodism concentrated their forces in great power upon these annual gatherings. She knew the sainted J. B. McFerrin, and heard him preach in his younger days; also A. L. P. Green, Bishop McTyeire, and others of much note.

She was in no way frivolous so as to be affected by being placed upon nobler things than this world affords. She was not only a companion for her children, but her grandchildren and even her great-grandchildren.

Her home life was beautiful, no one ever hearing her complain about anything, adjusting herself with ease and grace to the situation at all times. She was admired in her advanced age by old and young alike.

Her pastor for 1895-1896—Rev. J. T. Nicholson—is writing my father just after her death, has this to say: . . . "Earth is poorer on account of her translation, but heaven is richer. Here was a peerless character, being full of faith, hope, and love. We are not surprised that her external life was so entirely consistent, and that she rejoiced always in her conscious assurance of God's favor, and constantly gave thanks for the daily benedictions of his Spirit. Her life as a Christian was to me sublimely beautiful and a constant inspiration. Her esteem, confidence and love I held above price. She was a friend, true and tried, to me and my family."

What a comfort the above beautiful tribute to one we so much loved! And while we are glad her life was so much appreciated by those with whom she was at times associated, we can more strongly testify to such an estimate, for her life was stronger, if possible, in the home than elsewhere. My brother Henry, who has so tenderly cared for her in the past twelve years, looking after her through the night to see that she was comfortable, was awakened by her on the morning of the nineteenth of January, 1897, and in less than fifteen minutes she was transported to the land of eternal glory and song. In writing to me a few days ago he said: "Oh, how I miss her! God help me walk in the way she has trod."

We have her life as an evidence of the way in which she passed out from us. It is a legacy we shall prize highly, an inheritance we rejoice in. We miss her in the home, but we shall be united again "after awhile."

We laid her away on the twenty-first of January, 1897, her pastor, Rev. D. P. Bradford, conducting the service, in the cemetery at Newton, by the side of her sainted husband and others of our loved ones.

Her devoted grandson, ROBT. SELBY.

REED—On the morning of Dec. 31, 1896, the sweet spirit of little DAISY REED took its flight from earth to glory, having suffered only a short while, or a few days, from diphtheria or membranous croup.

Little Daisy was the pet of her parents, brothers and sister; had a sweet, lovable disposition; was between four and five years of age; hence she was called home before her little heart was engrossed and tainted with the evil influences of the world.

We laid her to rest by the grave of her little sister, who had preceded her just a few years.

May God comfort the grief-stricken father and mother, her brothers, and her only sister, all of whose hearts are crushed and saddened, and may they be encouraged and inspired to live closer to God, that they may meet little Daisy in heaven!

They all miss Daisy very much (this is human nature); but, sorrowing ones, look up toward God, and, with an unwavering faith in God, who doeth all things for the best, say with Job: "The Lord giveth, the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord!" and realize in your hearts the experience of David at the death of his child, when he said: 'He can not come to me, but I can go to him."

HUDGINS—ERNEST, son of J. B. and Hester Hudgins, was born Dec. 11, 1876, and died Jan. 30, 1897.

Having had the advantage of the most careful training, he naturally grew up in the church, professing faith in Christ at the age of eight. He was an obedient son, an affectionate brother, a true friend, and a devout Christian boy. He was not ashamed of his Lord, nor his cause. He ever proved his faith by his life and conversation. I was his pastor three years, and I have never met a boy with the same opportunities who came nearer measuring up to a true disciple of Christ Jesus. He was a great sufferer at times, but bore all his sufferings with great patience. I was with him the last night of his life. The end was peace. He passed from suffering to glory. His kind voice is hushed and his presence greatly missed, but the influence of his pious Christian life is still with us.

May our heavenly Father sustain the bereaved loved ones and enable them to say, "Thy will, not mine, be done!"

Bereaved ones, you have the fullest assurance that you will meet your dear son again.

ROBERTS—Whereas, God, in his providence, has removed from us our dearly beloved president, OSCAR S. ROBERTS, and has taken him to his home above; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Roberts this League has lost one of its most devout members and officers, the church a bright and shining Christian, the community a good citizen and the family an affectionate son and brother.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the kind mother in the loss of her beloved son, the brothers and sister in the loss of their much-loved brother, and pray that his God may be their God, and that the consolations of the Christianity that he professed and enjoyed may be consolingly vouchsafed to them through life, and that the Savior may be as precious to them in the hour of death as he was to him, and that they may be admitted into the kingdom of God as he was.

Resolved, That this League wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days as a public manifestation of our love for our dear brother, and of the loss which we have sustained in his death.

Resolved, That we bow submissively to this dispensation of Divine Providence, knowing that the "Judge of all the earth" will do right.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the Epworth Era and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and one furnished the sorrowing family.

Respectfully submitted.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

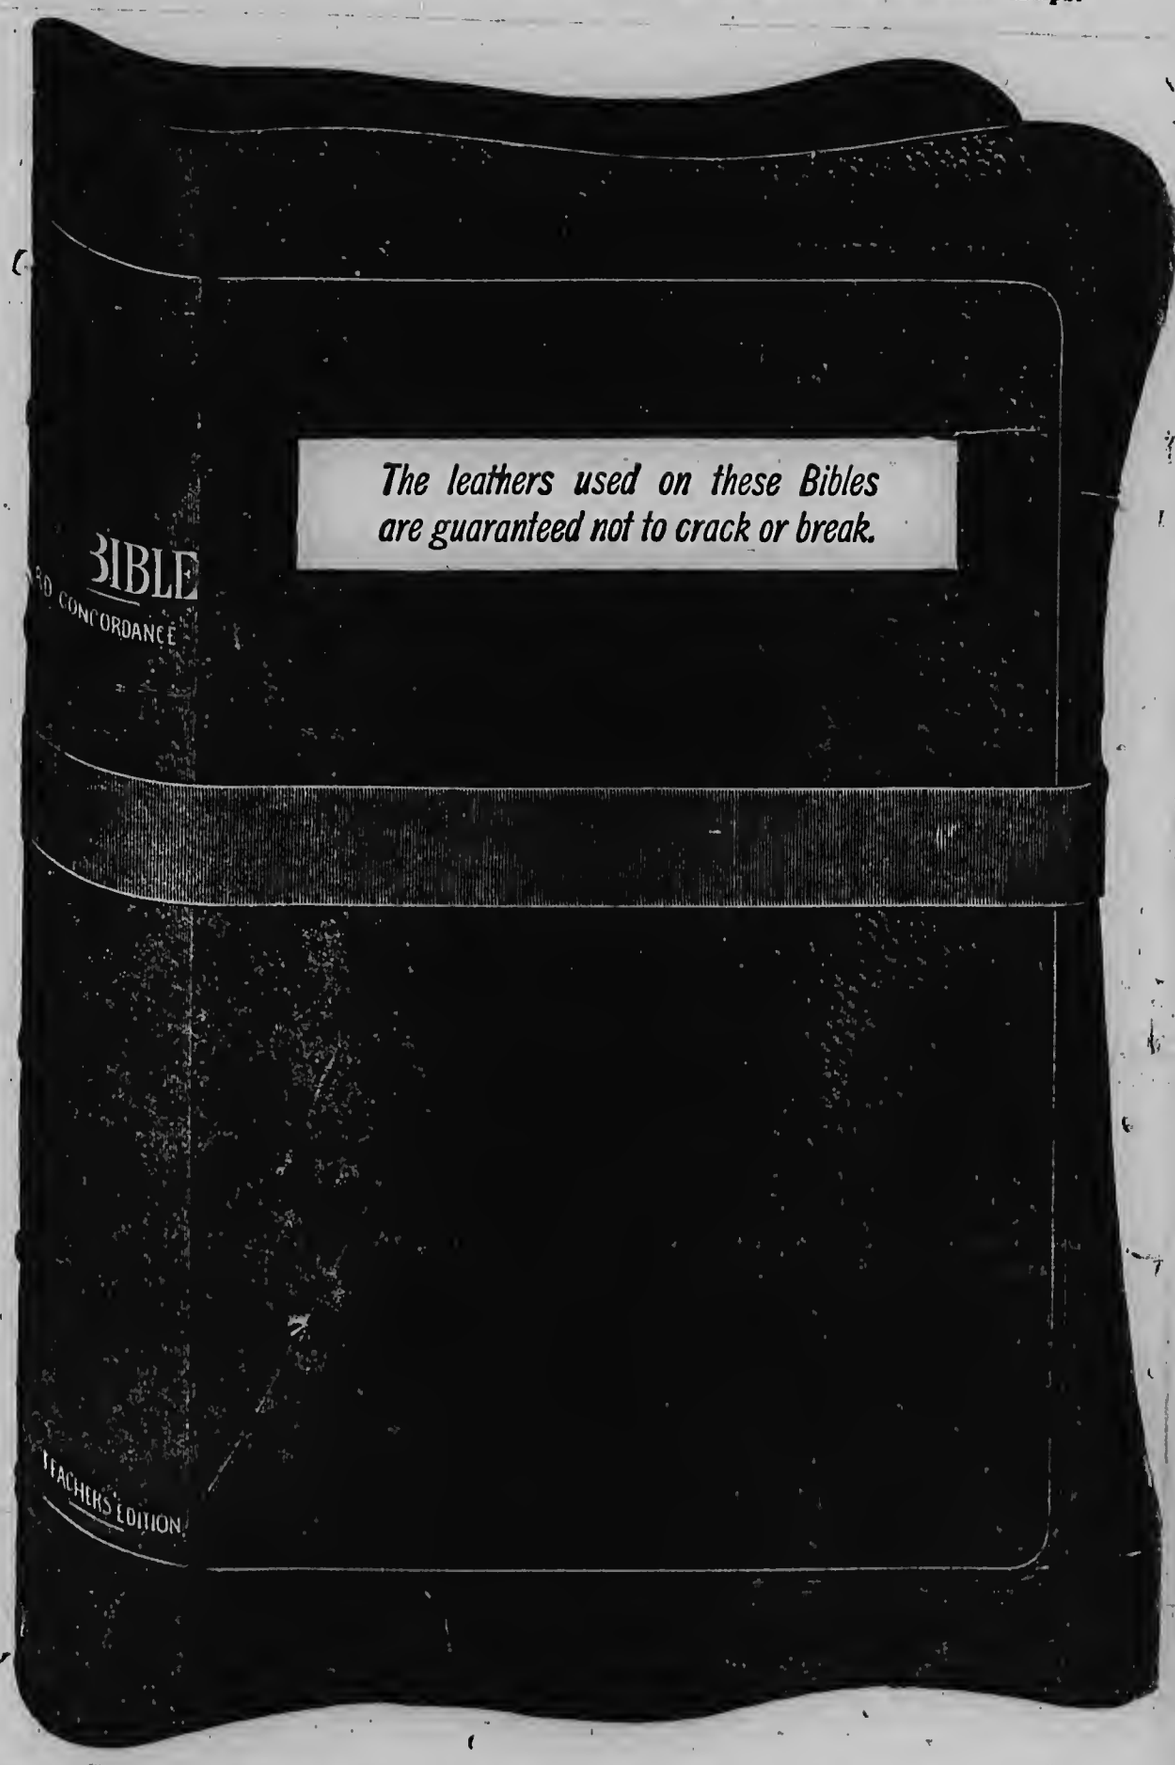
Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"



The leathers used on these Bibles are guaranteed not to crack or break.

The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2.35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3.15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1.15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to March, '98. (A little later it will be April, '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

The Senate Appropriations Committee last week decided to report favorably an amendment to the general deficiency bill appropriating a sufficient sum, a trifle over a million dollars, to pay the balance due the sugar producers in the way of bounty on the crop of 1894.

The Daughters of the American Revolution are considering the erection of a magnificent structure in Washington. It is proposed that the building shall be called Colonial Hall, and shall be used as a conservatory for the patriotic records of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The situation, so far as it involves the relation of the United States and Spain, is more aggravated than at any time since the Cuban question became a public issue. There is no doubt that the prevailing sentiment in both Houses of Congress is now in favor of declaring war against Spain on the slightest provocation.

It is learned that the Senate Committee on Commerce, of Congress, at the last moment, after the completing by the House of the estimates for river and harbor work, has been cutting down appropriations recommended, in order to find money for other schemes, without increasing the sum total of the appropriations for such purposes.

On Saturday the Venezuelan Boundary Commission concluded its labors and presented a report to President Cleveland preparatory to final adjournment. The arrangement of a treaty with Great Britain, whereby it was agreed to arbitrate the boundary question between Veneznela and the British colony of Guiana, practically removed the necessity for the further existence of the boundary commission.

A Criticism Criticised

MR. EDITOR: Bro. L. D. Worsham's criticism of Minutes unduly reflects upon the work of the statistical secretaries. I have mailed to him his reports as handed to statistical secretary at Conference, which makes his "criticism of Minutes" a criticism of his own original report. Foreign missions and presiding elders are both reported in Minutes just as recorded by his own hand. His report shows, "Assessed preacher in charge, $600. Paid, $——." As fifty per cent. of presiding elder's salary was paid, the secretary helped the report by inserting the fifty per cent of preacher's salary, which was just. Thus preacher in charge is reported paid $300 instead of "$——."

The above is due secretaries and publishers. Let the brethren be careful how they criticise. I have their original reports.

Beautiful Sea Shells.

Everyone admires them. Since coming South I have received numerous inquiries from Northern people for sea shells, and now I am prepared to answer: Yes, I can send you shells, for I have made quite a collection of lovely shells, both from our own coast, the coral reefs, and some lovely ones from the West India Islands. I will mail a dozen, or more, different kinds, no two alike, to anyone who sends a stamp for postage.

OUR ANGELS.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

In the old days God sent angels oft
To men in threshing-floors, to women pressed
With daily tasks; they came to tend and croft,
And whispered words of blessing and of rest.

Not mine to guess what shape those angels wore;
Nor tell with what voice they spoke, nor with what grace
They brought the dear love down that evermore
Makes lowliest sonls its best abiding-place.

But in these days I know my angels well;
They brush my garments on the common way,
They take my hand, and very softly tell
Some bit of comfort in the waning day.

And though their angel names I do not ken,
Though in their faces human want I read,
They are God-given to this world of men,
God sent to bless it in its hours of need.

Child, mother, dearest wife, brave hearts that take
The rough and bitter cross, and help us bear
Its heavy weight when strength is like to break,
God bless you each, our angels unaware!

IN MEMORIAM.

Joseph B. Walker, D. D.

Joseph B. Walker, D. D., was born Jan. 2, 1817, in Washington City, D. C., and died Feb. 26, 1897, near Mississippi City, at his residence. He was admitted in the Tennessee Conference on trial in 1836, and appointed to Dixon circuit as junior preacher; in 1837 to Goose Creek; in 1838 to Franklin and Spring Hill; in 1839 at Lebanon; 1840, to Columbia circuit; 1841, at Murfreesboro; in 1842 at College Hill; in 1843 at Gallatin; in 1844 at Clarksville; in 1845 at Huntsville; in 1846 transferred to Mississippi Conference and appointed to Jackson, Miss.; in 1851 transferred to Louisiana Conference, and stationed at Carondelet Street. From that time until the last year, 1896, he filled appointments in this city, excepting two years at Port Gibson during the war, and four years at St. John's, Galveston.

For sixty years he was an effective itinerant. His last appointment was Algiers. Wherever he preached the work was built up. He held his congregations by his ability in the pulpit and his industry as pastor. He made himself acquainted with all his people, and was very popular with the younger part of his charge. He was evangelical and thoroughly Wesleyan in doctrine. He was remarkable for the smooth and sprightly flow of his periods. He reasoned by analogy, and illustrated from a vast store of information, which he had gathered from every department of literature. He was pathetic and beautiful in sentences which he had perfected and remembered with all their exquisite finish, and which he frequently introduced in his discourses with their original freshness, and which never lost their charm. His latest sermons at the camp ground were equal to his best, and his manner was improved by less emphasis of delivery. He held his own as a pulpit orator wonderfully for a life-time. The secret was, he read and studied continuously until he was called to hang his trumpet on the wall, which was for only a part of the last year. He was a finished person in presence and address; most entertaining in conversation, full of incident, very ready to apprehend the current of thought that was most agreeable to his listener, and pleasingly instructive. He never was any less than a minister of Christ. Chaste in thought and word, he drew all to him religiously without any excess of sobriety.

Probably he influenced more young men to become preachers than any one I ever knew. In this city many young men of excellent gifts and surroundings during the past forty years have entered the ministry mainly through his instrumentality. He himself was an example of ministerial grace that any young man might be glad to imitate. Like all servants of the Savior, he was perfected through suffering. He had many passages of experience that kept him close to God, and kept open the sympathy of many warm friends to the very end of his career. Methodism in New Orleans and in the Annual Conference will miss his cheerful and godly intercourse.

He was a ready writer. For years he has contributed to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and in the last two Nashville Advocates there are excellent articles from his pen—one entitled, "Spiritual Growth;" the other, "Let Brotherly Love Continue." They are excellent illustrations of what he often spoke of as a sixth sense—"the sense of fitness." Had he known they were to be the "finis" of his writing, he could have shown no greater propriety of counsel to the church. His whole life, mind, heart and soul were placed at the service of his Savior. His memory is very pleasant to his people and his brethren. "I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

The Doctor leaves behind him a wife, son and daughter, and seven grandchildren. His golden wedding was celebrated two years ago at Carondelet Street Church, to the great delight of his many friends in New Orleans.

March 1.—Since writing the above I had the mournful pleasure of attending the funeral of the Doctor. On Saturday, in company with a few friends, we met the family at Mississippi City, and at Ocean Springs we laid his body away in the family burying lot. We then learned that on Friday morning he arose in a very happy frame of mind, and was singing before and after breakfast: "My God, the spring of all my joys;" "Come, thou Fount of every blessing;" "All hail the power of Jesus' name." At midday he ate a slight lunch, sitting in his chair; the family heard a little noise, went in the room, and he was dead. He passed away with the ease of a child going to sleep.

So died an itinerant of sixty years, in the eightieth year of his life. "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

J. C. KEENER.

From the Interior.

My, my, man; how changeable the weather is—as changeable as men, almost as changeable as some women. Cold, and then hot; wet, and then dry; snow and sunshine; cool, cold, colder; then warm, warmer, and warmest. No wonder the people are sick; bad colds, influenza, la grippe, pneumonia, rheumatism, and bronchitis. The wonder is, that more of them are not sick, and that the sick are not sicker. Sometimes some die, and all have to die at some time. There is no getting around that. We are born to live, and then to die. Fact is, we have to die dead before we live, truly. This is as true of acorns and oats as it is of men and women. A grain of wheat never lives till it dies. All life comes out of death. We never live spiritually till we die to self and the world. Dying is hard; living is easy. Healthy life and pure life are always easy, joyous, full of gladness. Nature is in bud now, and soon she will be robed in green and decked with flowers. Winter does not last forever. I am glad of it. I love spring, the sunshine, flowers, mating birds and pairing fowls, smell of fresh-turned sod, peeping violets, blushing roses, trees in full dress, carpeted lawns, skipping lambs, and gay, glad-hearted, frolicsome children. I love a Springtime religion; religion with life, sunshine and flowers in it—the kind that does not throw a damper on you, and is not expressed in sepulchral tones, and has no acid in it; religion in meadows green and by waters still, in pastures where the good shepherd leads. There is much of this kind in the world, and there is some of the other kind—sour piety, ungodly godliness, and unholy holiness.

I hope the preachers—specially my pastor—will feel the touch of Spring, liven up, grow some flowers with roots to them, and give us some fresh vegetables. Hash and hominy for six months at a time becomes monotonous. One grows tired of it and longs for a change. The appetite demands change, the mind longs for change, and the spirit craves change. I do wish the preachers would quit beating the sheep and try feeding them. In some places, some sheep-folds, the sheep are sore all over. They can not say, "With his stripes we are healed:" for they are not healed, they are "welts" all over. It is stripes at prayer meeting, stripes Sunday, and stripes Sunday night. It is impossible to fatten sheep on stripes. This method flays the wool off—makes "fur fly," but it is trying on the sheep. "Spare the rod and spoil the child." It were better to spare the child and spoil the rod. The first is not Scripture, the last is good sense. Throw down the rod and pile in the feed. If I am not mistaken, preachers were called to feed the sheep, and not to beat them.

Preachers ought to be hard on the sin, but gentle with the sinner. He may be persuaded, but can not be driven. He may be driven away from the house of God, away from Christ and away from salvation. The gospel of abuse has come to be all too fashionable in some sections in the interior. It is not a good gospel—certainly not the best gospel. Some long sermons are all too short, and some short sermons all too long. Much depends on the matter and the manner. More depends on the spirit—the human spirit of speaker and hearer, and on the divine Spirit. An anointed preacher will be unctuous, will have unction. An anointed congregation will be attentive, receptive, responsive, and religious. It is difficult for a congregation to resist an anointed preacher. It is just as hard for a preacher to resist an anointed congregation. When both are fully anointed sinners yield or fly. Little sermons, short ones, with cut flowers in them, suit saints in a low state of grace, or with no grace at all. Such saints are always glad when it is said, "Let us go down from the house of God." Saints that are saints are glad to go into God's house. The courts of the Lord are amiable to them. They would love to build nests like the birds and stay there. Transfiguration glory suggests abiding tabernacles.

It is strange how little religion it takes to satisfy the most of us. Those who have the most are most anxious for more. Those who have the least are the best satisfied with what they have. Some people are past feeling that they are utterly dead. "Awake thou that sleepest; arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

We need a sweeping revival of conviction for sin, repentance, justification, regeneration, sanctification, and holy living all over this whole interior region. "Interior" is used geographically and spiritually.

Epworth League Echoes.

BY REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD,
President Mississippi State Conference of Epworth Leagues.

A glorious time at Macon, Miss.

Eleven of the preachers in the district were present at this Columbus District Epworth League Conference.

Twelve Leagues are reported in this district. Many delegates were present—West Point alone sent ten.

In about five minutes the Leagues represented promised fifty dollars to send the presiding elder to Toronto in July.

A drummer from Alabama who happened to be in Macon stopped over to attend the Conference. He publicly testified to the blessings received.

Right royally were the Leaguers entertained by the Maconians. Randolph, the popular pastor, and his good wife did everything in their power to make each visitor happy.

Burroughs, the energetic presiding eldor, was unanimously elected by the Leaguers as president until permanent organization should be effected.

T. Y. Ramsey, the young people's friend, and leader of the Methodist host in Starkville, was elected secretary.

The papers read, together with the discussion of many subjects of vital import, were both instructive and inspiring.

Young life in the church, properly directed, is moving forward to the music of celestial song to take the world for Christ.

Judge H. W. Foote, superintendent of the Macon Sunday-school for more than fifty years, is in touch with the young people, and attended nearly every session of the Conference.

Rev. T. W. Lewis, of Grenada, and this scribe were guests in the home of this man of God, who, with his estimable wife, did everything they could for our comfort.

The next Conference goes to Brooksville, and subjoined we give names of officers elected for permanent organization: President, Charles B. Ames; vice-president, Prof. Sherwood; secretary and treasurer, Garland M. Jones.

Of course, the Conference colporter was at Macon. We rejoice to know that he sold lots of books. Send in your orders from North Mississippi to Rev. G. W. Bachman, Kosciusko, Miss.

Send for "What to Do, and How to Do It;" also "The League and the Pastor;" and don't forget to order the League reading course—four excellent books for $2.30.

If you want to hear good singing, go to an Epworth League Conference. The young people love the old songs, and they also sing the new ones.

The League does not discount modesty, but does away with timidity among many of our young people. Aboard the train recently some young lady Leaguers introduced themselves and talked about the work of the church.

We have received outline of programme for the great International Conference to be held in Toronto, July 15-18. What a gathering of young Methodists that will be!

Water Valley, Miss., March 6, 1897.

Correspondence.

From China.

MR. EDITOR: We missionaries are, for the most part, carnal minded enough to hail with delight the time for our quarter's salaries to come. So, as soon as I heard the draft had come, I hurried up to Shanghai to sell it, so as to make the proper disbursements in the Shanghai district.

We are only about thirty miles from Shanghai, and yet it took me from one night till about eleven o'clock the next day to make the trip. Besides business, I had the pleasure of looking in on most of our Mission in Shanghai. I was sorry to learn when I arrived that Miss Haygood was worse; but at night, when I went to dine at McTyeire Home, I was glad to hear that she was better. Since then we have had a favorable report. I can not help feeling that she will be restored to health and strength again, for she is too much needed out here.

I had the pleasure of seeing and taking tiffin with Dr. Parker and his wife. He has his head and hands full, and is putting forth great effort to make the A. C. College what it ought to be. If anybody can make a success of it, he can.

Next, I saw our old veteran, Dr. Allen, but one would not call him old when they saw the amount of live literature he is putting forth. He never did better work in his life than he is doing now. And the ideas that he is now sowing broadcast will produce an abundant harvest sooner or later. His society has cleared about $1,000 (Mex.) on his "History of the War between China and Japan."

I had about a day or two's work in the half day that I was in Shanghai, so I was late getting through. It was about ten o'clock when I started on my five-mile jinriksha ride to my boat. When I reached it the hour was already past eleven, and the boatman told me that I was so late we could not get off till morning. However, I persuaded him to strike out; but it was not for long, for when I awoke a little while before day I found he and his men were in a comfortable snooze, and the boat not many miles from where we started. He said the tide began to ebb, and he could not go against it. About six o'clock we started up and went slowly along. When we were about seventeen miles from home it was already about nine o'clock, and I saw that I would stand a bad chance to eat New Year's dinner with my family. However, I thought by getting out and walking I would get there for a late dinner. This I proceeded to do, and was soon on my way. When I reached home it was about half after two by my time, but already three by the time here. I got some dinner, but it was by myself. By the way, my boat did not get in until after dark, so it was well that I walked.

To-night we had one of my preachers, and his wife and sister, to dine with us; also our Bible woman. After prayers I gave them a little magic lantern entertainment, which seemed to please them very much. The preacher is taking his sister to Shanghai, where she is soon to be joined in the bonds of matrimony to one of our best school teachers. He is teaching for Bro. Anderson in Suchow.

Well enough for this time. With best wishes, I am,

Yours fraternally,

W. B. BURKE.

Education Day.

The North Mississippi Conference at its last session recommended: "That the first Sunday in April, or as soon thereafter as practicable, be named as Education Day throughout this Conference, in which all the preachers in charge of stations, circuits and missions shall preach on the subject of Christian education."

It would be well if the members of the Mississippi Conference would also observe this recommendation. It will furnish the occasion for enforcing considerations of great importance. Our people have done well. I make no complaint; but eighty thousand Methodists ought to do very great things. If we meet the measure of our responsibility and opportunity, there must be enthusiastic devotion to this important interest; and, above all things, there must be persistent, systematic, self-sacrificing work in its behalf. If we can make our people recognize, in an adequate degree, the claims of this great department of church work, the years which await us in the future are bright with promise.

W. B. MURRAH.

Selections.

Calling, Accepting, Declining.

The following editorial from the pen of Dr. Buckley, of the New York Advocate, will give our readers an inside view of the working of Methodist machinery in the regions beyond the boundaries of "Dixie's land:"

"Received and accepted, subject to the approval of the Bishop, a call to —— Methodist Episcopal Church." "The Official Board of his present church has voted to release —— —— from any moral obligation he may have felt to return for the coming year."

Such are specimens of the dispatches now published in the daily papers. In proportion as the Bishops come to feel that such arrangements arbitrarily bind them, by reason of the embarrassment of appointing a man who has not been asked for, or returning a man whose Official Board had voted to relieve him from any moral obligation he might have felt, will the foundations of the itinerancy be undermined. And wherever it appears that churches of a certain size can always accomplish their purposes, while churches of less proportions are unlikely to do so, a similar influence is exerted.

We need not blind our eyes, however, to the fact that the lengthening of the time to five years has greatly increased the difficulty of making appointments. It rouses laymen as they never were roused before. It involves a more careful survey of possibilities, and a closer inspection of tendencies in the proposed pastor, as well as in the church. It sets men to calling ministers whose time has not expired, and it compels many to depart uncalled, who never did so before. It leads also to the publication of calls, and to explanations in the public press as to why men decline them, and to public discussions as to why they do not remain.

We do not allege these facts for the purpose of proving that it was a mistake to lengthen the time—for that is by no means certain—but for the purpose of directing the attention of all concerned to the fact that the episcopacy must be, not only theoretically, but absolutely, free, or the fundamental advantages of the itinerancy can not be secured.

"Subject to the approval of the Bishop" means to a loyal Methodist minister, "I will bring no pressure which shall constrain his judgment, and I will make no pledge to the people who communicate with me that will affect my relations to the Bishop's free action." "Subject to the approval of the Bishop" signifies to loyal laymen, that "if we can not convince him that this is the best to be done under the circumstances, we will accept his official judgment." And this is compatible with a minister's saying to a people, when they approach him, "If the Bishop approves, I shall be glad to become your pastor, and I will state to any other church that may apply to me that I have made this announcement to you." And it is compatible with a church's saying, "You are our first choice, and we shall not communicate with any other pastor directly or indirectly until it becomes apparent that you will not be sent."

It is an important question whether a true delicacy would not lead a minister to regard as private a call which he declines, unless published by the church making it; and whether churches would not do well to practice more reticence than some do concerning their plans.—New York Advocate.

If your life is dark, then walk by faith; and God is pledged to keep you as safe as if you could understand everything.—Horace Bushnell.

WEARY IN WELL DOING.

BY CHRISTINA ROSETTI.

I would have gone; God bade me stay;
I would have worked; God bade me rest;
He broke my will from day to day;
He read my yearnings unexpressed,
And said them nay.

Now I would stay, God bids me go;
Now I would rest, God bids me work.
He breaks my heart, tossed to and fro;
My soul is wrung with doubts that lurk
And vex it so.

I go, Lord, where thou sendest me;
Day after day I plod and moil;
But Christ, my God, when will it be
That I may let alone my toil,
And rest with thee?

A Leaf from the Diary of the Rev. Thomas Nixon.

BY REV. J. M. WEEMS.

At this time it is proper that I should say something of the organization of the church and the Conference in Mississippi. Tobias Gibson was the first itinerant Methodist preacher who visited this territory. He left South Carolina late in the year 1799, and after a long and lonesome journey on horseback reached the Cumberland river in Tennessee. Here he sold his horse and bought a canoe, in which he worked his way to Natchez, Miss. It is thought by some that he was taken up by a boat, and was thus aided in his long and tedious journey; but there is no certain proof of this. At Natchez he found several relatives, who received him gladly, and aided him in his work. Most of them became members of his church, and one of them, R. Gibson, became a preacher, and lived to see the Mississippi Conference organized. A Miss Whitaker, who afterward married a Mr. Downing, was one of his first members at Washington, six miles from Natchez. They afterward moved to Raymond, in Hinds county, where they lived in great usefulness to the church until they were called to the "saints' eternal rest."

In 1800 he formed the Natchez circuit, and at the close of this year reported an organized circuit with several societies and sixty members. In 1801 he traveled and preached more extensively through the settlements, going as far north as the "Walnut Hills," now Vicksburg. Several exhorters and class leaders rendered efficient help in his work during this year, and the membership was increased to eighty. In 1802 he was still alone in the great work of planting Methodism in the Southwest, and at the close of this year he reported one hundred members.

How often he passed through the Indian Nation, during this time, to Tennessee to secure preachers to aid him in giving the gospel to the people, we know not. Nor do we know how many places in this great wilderness were made sacred to him, and to "our Father," by the sweet and hopeful communing in prayer over this matter. In 1803 Moses Floyd came to his assistance, and at the close of this year they reported eighty-five white and two colored members. What became of the members lost from the roll during this year we knew not. No doubt but some of them had been called to their eternal home, and others had moved away. In 1804 H. Harriman and A. Ames were sent to his assistance. But on the fifth day of April, Tobias Gibson left the Natchez circuit, and went to his home in the skies. Little, perhaps, did he apprehend the vast sweep and influence of his work on the future of the church in the territory where he had labored so long and alone. But the fall of the leader so dispirited the other brethren that at the close of this year they all returned to Tennessee. In 1805 L. Blackman and N. Barnes were sent to the Natchez circuit, and at the close of this year they reported seventy-four white and sixty-two colored members. In 1806 the territory was formed into a district, with L. Blackman as presiding elder. The circuits and preachers were as follows: Natchez circuit, N. Barnes and T. Lasley; Wilkinson circuit, C. McLoud; Claiborne circuit, W. Pattison; Opelusa circuit, E. W. Bowman. There were no returns made from any of the circuits for this year that I know of, save that of the Natchez circuit, which reported one hundred and thirty-two white and seventy-two colored members.

For some reason the diary of Bro. Nixon fails to mention any other facts in the history of the church in Mississippi from this date to that of the organization of the Conference. The reader will observe that he occupies this period with an account of his own life and labors, which seem to have been the real purpose of his writing. So we will only state, as a fitting conclusion of this paper, that the dust of Tobias Gibson rests about four miles south of Vicksburg. The place is marked by a monument with this inscription: "Sacred to the memory of Rev. Tobias Gibson, who settled in Mississippi in 1799. Was emphatically the father of Methodism in this country, being the first minister who organized a church in this (then) territory. Born in South Carolina, A. D. 1776; died in the county of Warren, 1804. Erected by his nieces and nephew, and their descendants, May 13, 1857."

Divine Providence and Other Thoughts.

The immediate and direct providence of God in all that concerns this world, and God's creatures in it, has been sustained by many thinkers and writers of this century. But there is to-day a variety of views as to the hand of a heavenly Father in all the events of our lives and all their interests. The drouth and sunshine that parch the land, the clouds and floods that drench the fields, the calms that soothes man and nature to quiet, the tornado and cyclone which lay waste forest and city, are relegated to laws of nature without divine control, except so far as the enacting of these laws and setting them a-going by the Creator is concerned. No sense in asking God for rain, or to arrest the storm, or change the course of the cyclone. I class all who do not believe in a special providence as herding together in this school of natural law disciples.

Another view of the divine presence in the workings of nature obtaining in what is claimed as a different school is in election, predestination, and foreordination. That is, everything so fixed "that it can neither be taken from nor added to;" a fixture in the working of events as inexorable as any natural law can enforce events. These theories may be held by persons who claim to differ widely in regard to freedom of action and personal responsibility. But to my mind the two theories are joined together in the same result. If a decree promulgates, or a law rules, there is but one horn of the dilemma to cling to. Men who believe and "confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus, and believe in their heart that God hath raised him from the dead," may believe in other things contrary to each other. It is said to them, "Thou shalt be saved." (Rom. x.) No honest conviction can make a false theory true.

One thing I have observed myself, and heard it sustained by other observers—i. e., that all good men, with their irreconcilable differences, agree as one in the practical duties of religion. There is no dissent as to the clause in the Lord's Prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread." Whatever natural law or decree might suggest, the special supply is asked for one day, and specially for each separate day. Again, there is great harmony among good men in grace at their frugal meals. Special thanks are given for that particular meal, and a special blessing asked on that supply of food. Without a full reliance upon the special hand of God in every ministration, I could not, with my heart, say, as the Savior teaches, "Give us this day our daily bread," nor faithfully follow his example in giving thanks and breaking of bread. Perplexing questions may be asked in regard to certain occurrences. These puzzling questions I relegate to Divine Providence, too mysterious for human mind to penetrate. The violent death of a child, shocking as it was, may have saved it from a shame and disgrace not to be named. I know persons, descendants of pious parents, whose fathers and mothers would rather have seen them struck down in infancy than sustaining the characters they now bear. The prayer for their preservation was importunate and agonizing. I have one case in mind where the son just at manhood died on the gallows.

From the Sacred Scriptures we learn that God claims to rule the heavens, as he says, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." (Mal. iii, 10.) Under the new dispensation we read of how a great storm arose, and Jesus commanded the storm, and it ceased; rebuked the waves of the sea, and there was a great calm. Whatever may be said to weaken the force of these Scriptures, it remains unchanged that God did control the elements of nature, and nature, with its laws, are the same to-day that they were then, and "God is the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever; he changeth not." Once he stayed the sun in the heaven from his going down the space of a whole day. On another occasion he reversed the course of the sun and brought it back ten degrees by which it had gone down. (Isaiah xxxviii.) "He maketh the sun to rise and to set;" fixes and holds it in its centre; stations every star, and guides it in its orbit; notes every comet, and directs it on its fiery pathway; moves in every cloud, and rides upon the whirlwind, and directs the storm; kindles every lightning flash, and hurls every thunder bolt, treads in every earthquake, and works in every volcano.

Next to God, in created existence, is man, who has the wonderful power, as a co-worker with God, of making his own providences. As when he works with God in "bringing the tithes into the storehouse," he opens the windows of heaven for a blessing he has not room enough to store away. Then we are cited to Elijah. "Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heavens gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit." (James v, 17.) This case comes under the new dispensation found as a reference in the New Testament, and is cited to us as an example in the words, "He was a man of like passions with us;" just like us; the very same sort of man we are, exercising faith through the medium of prayer just as we are permitted or are able to do.

To appreciate the Christian dispensation as above every other dispensation—as of right we ought to do—we must know that it is our privilege to approach nearer to God in prayer, and to exercise a clearer and more reliant faith. In the person of the Holy Ghost, God is nearer to us in prayer (John iv, 23, 24) than to any of his children under the patriarchs, under Moses, or the prophets.

A Noble Example and an Appeal.

MR. EDITOR: I ask room in the columns of your excellent paper to call attention to a noble example, and to make an appeal in behalf of a noble work. The example referred to is that recently set by the Presbyterian Sunday-school in College Hill, Miss. After the Christmas season was over this school sent me quite a nice little sum of money as a Christmas present to the American Bible Society to aid the society in its noble work in the earth. This action of the College Hill Sunday-school is a movement in the direction suggested some time ago by a writer in The Missionary Review of the World, to the effect that all Christmas giving should be transferred from relatives and friends to the Lord, and the example set is a most worthy one. If good people everywhere could only be induced to make such a transfer as the one indicated, soon the coffers of the Lord would be filled to overflowing, and ere long the whole earth would be blessed with the Word of God and the gospel of salvation. According to the writer above referred to, one Christmas season's givings devoted to the Lord "would mean the immediate possession in hand of all the funds necessary to accomplish the world's evangelization, and that, too, if none but the church of Christ alone adopted this form of observance."

And now, Mr. Editor, I wish to make an appeal, not for a Christmas offering, but for an Easter offering to the American Bible Society from every Sunday-school in Mississippi and Louisiana. The great unsectarian society referred to, which has done and is still doing so much good in the world, is hard pressed for means to meet the urgent and increasing demands made upon it, both in home and foreign fields, and every Sunday-school superintendent in the two States above named is hereby most earnestly requested to bring its claims and needs before his school on Easter Sunday, and urge all present to make a liberal offering thereto. Let the attention of the children and young people be called to the sad fact that there are millions of people in the world who knew nothing about the risen Lord, and let them be earnestly exhorted to make an offering to help send to these benighted ones a knowledge of the glorious fact. Surely the children and young people could not be enlisted in a nobler work than that of sending the Word of God to the benighted of earth; hence it is to be hoped that this appeal will not be in vain. Let every school send an offering either to the undersigned at 725 Camp street, New Orleans, or to Wm. Faulke, Bible House, Astor Place, New York. In either case a receipt will be returned for every offering, and a proper notice of the same will also be printed in the Annual Report of the American Bible Society.

Church Suppers, etc.

I forgot to tell you, Mr. Editor, in my former article that "Zionne" is not one of your subscribers; but I have heard recently that she is going to subscribe for the ADVOCATE in order to "keep up" with what is being said about her. "'Tis an ill wind," indeed, "that blows nobody good."

A member of our household, who is very fond of butter, said a few days ago, while replenishing the butter dish, "They'll eat all that before to-morrow night." I smilingly remarked, "You talk as if we had nothing to do with it."

What I have to tell you is this: They had a church supper in spite of Bro. Carradine's fifteen objections, and those of a few of us lesser lights. Verily this is a land of mortgages. When a man buys or inherits a plantation, the first thing he does is to get a mortgage. When one starts a crop, he first gets a mortgage. When we want to build a church, we get up a church supper from the devil's money, and give him a mortgage on God's house, or rather on the building we expect to turn over to God when we have eaten and drunken enough to pay for it, provided the devil does not foreclose the mortgage before we complete the feast.

It is said that "honest confession is good for the soul," so I will confess that I was "in it a little bit." I protested feebly, but finding all in favor of it, with the exception of one other, I finally allowed myself to be drawn into it enough to promise to donate a basket, which I spent nearly the whole of Thanksgiving Day preparing. The inclemency of the weather prevented our going, however; so I wasn't "in it" much, you see. One brother said to me, "Sister Cary, you ladies would make plenty of money if you'd have cigars sold outside." A younger brother, a visitor, said, "Yes, ma'am; that's the way they do down home." Now, this was just a little more than I could stand, and I remarked, indignantly, "I wouldn't touch them with a red-hot poker." The Lord may need some of the money he has given his servants, but he is a little more particular about the way it is made than some of us are. I don't believe he'd near be willing to run a "blind tiger," gambling den, or sell tobacco without license, in order to get it; and as long as we continue to build our churches in this way, so long will they continue to be an abomination in his sight.

We are usually able to get our own wants supplied without publishing to the world that we are in need, and are going to get up a dinner or supper for the purpose of raising money to supply the same. When a neighbor has his house burned, or is overtaken by some calamity, why don't we get up a supper in his behalf? Simply because we know he would not thank us for our pains; nor would he accept money raised in this way. If we know he is in need, and are willing to help him at all, we do so without making any ado about it; and if we are not willing, he wouldn't have it if we gave it to him. Are we better than our Maker? He knoweth the secrets of all hearts. A free-will offering is the only kind he ever accepts, and we only add insult to injury by offering him any other.

The idea has gotten abroad in some places — particularly among the young people—that the church is a kind of necessary evil; and if they have any money to throw away, no matter how made, if they will only throw it in her lap, she will thankfully receive it, and in too many instances she will. Our preachers are considered by such as beggars. I am often shocked and pained to hear our young people, and some older ones, criticising and even ridiculing preachers. I am not an "ancient mariner," but I can remember when we thought the highest honor an ordinary household could expect was to have the preacher to entertain. How we all longed for, and looked forward, to his monthly visits! And when he came, every member of the family, even the servants, assembled for family worship. How is it now? Very often when the preacher calls the mother or the aged grandmother—if there be one—is the only member of the family he is allowed to see; yet there is a howl raised if he doesn't visit, even though he has to go away feeling that he is an intruder. There were not so many complaints made against ministers formerly, and I really believe the fault is with the people, and the evil is growing. You might as well expect a hot-house plant to grow in an ice-box as to expect a preacher to keep his religion warm in some of our frozen churches. Here is the solution of the whole problem: Parents—mothers in particular—are not doing their duty. The Bible says, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." We are either not doing our duty, or the Bible is untrue. If children were properly trained and educated, there would be no need to borrow money from the devil with which to build our churches and pay our preachers. "He will not always chide, neither will he keep this anger forever."

In Memoriam.

BY CAROLINE E. MERRICK.

Mary Susannah Winans Wall was born Aug. 1, 1816, and died Sunday, Feb. 28, 1897, and her memory deserves to be cherished and perpetuated.

She was modest and retiring, as well as morally brave and courageous, and never feared to express her deep interest in all questions that concerned the public welfare. Being a well-read, thoughtful woman, she was always moved by any subject of large importance, and was full of enthusiasm with a desire to help all humanity, while her own children at any time could rise up and call her blessed, for she was a Christian mother, a noble woman. She was entirely unconventional. With her generous championship of the oppressed and weak, independence of thought and action seemed to be in her blood, with occasional flashes of enthusiasm which made her society very fascinating to her intimate friends, for she could be soberly dignified, or sprightly and gay; could skim the earth's surface with the butterflies, and yet look into nature's profoundest depths with a philosopher's vision.

She was able to impart her knowledge also, while her personal magnetism inspired and won the hearts of all the young people who came in her circle.

In person she was lovely. I remember her as a bride in her early youth. She was a sweet and radiant vision of girlish beauty, with her father's bright black eyes and her mother's curling, auburn hair, and with regular features and a complexion of angelic purity. She came to my father's house in East Feliciana to visit my mother, at Cottage Hall, when she first excited my childish admiration.

Mary Wall inherited many of Dr. Winans' wonderful gifts. Her piety was quite as deep, sincere and active, and her devotion to the Methodist church was unequalled.

This good woman is now a saint in heaven, and if the giving of a drop of water to a disciple is remembered and rewarded there, what must be her position among the angels, for her whole life was filled with acts of kindness and noble, unselfish charity. If my grief for the death of my beloved life-long friend was in proportion to my loss, I should be inconsolable. Mary Wall was gentle and feminine, delicate and refined. At the same time she wielded a trenchant pen, and often spoke a plain word. She was a blessing to the town of Clinton, where she lived, and was appreciated by the people, for she was everybody's friend. The place is poorer on account of the departure of one so truly respected, raised, and loved, and the celestial city is richer for her entrance. I wish I could express the profound sympathy I feel for the bereaved family who are now overwhelmed by this great sorrow. May God send them resignation and consolation!

Notice.

Mrs. Dero Saunders, of Starkville, has been appointed secretary of Columbus district. All auxiliaries in this district are requested to govern themselves accordingly. Apply to her for needed information or literature, and report to her for present quarter, which will end June 1. It is presumed that reports for quarter ending March 1 have already been made to the Conference secretary.

Owing to the fact that North Mississippi has been represented in our Parsonage and Home Mission Society column for four weeks in succession, we withdraw all further claim on this department during March—the month to which we were regularly entitled.

Selections.

To decry dogma in the interest of character is like despising food as if it interfered with health. Food is not health, but the human body is built just so as to turn food into health and strength. And truth is not holiness, but the human soul is made to turn by the subtle chemistry of its digestive experience, truth into goodness.—Phillips Brooks.

Sometimes a fog will settle over a vessel's deck, yet leave the topmast clear. Then a sailor goes up aloft and gets a lookout which the helmsman on deck can not get. So prayer sends the soul aloft, lifts it above the clouds in which our selfishness and egotism befog us, and gives us a chance to see which way to steer.—Spurgeon.

There is no room for chance. Strange may be the way in which the lot is cast into our lap; but whether it be cast by visible or invisible hands, whether suddenly, or so slowly that we can see it come, whether plentifully or sparingly—it is always cast exactly as the Lord wills.—Tholuck.

When your mind has been drawn aside do not fret or let yourself go down the stream of nature as if it were in vain to attempt to swim against it; but confess your fault and calmly resume your former endeavor, but with more humility and watchfulness.—Fletcher.

The greatest hero is perhaps the man who does his very best and signally fails, and yet is not embittered by his failure. A life hero in which you fail of every end you seek, yet which disciplines you for a better, is assuredly not a failure.

A man may know that he is without God if he is without prayer. Prayer is the simplest expression of the desire for God. It is by prayer we invite God to come in to occupy his throne; and when he is in prayer is inevitable.—James Stalker.

You despise books!—you, whose whole lives are absorbed in the vanities of ambition, the pursuit of pleasure, or in indolence. Remember that all the known world, except only savage nations, is governed by books.—Voltaire.

All the doors that lead inward to the secret places of the Most High are doors outward—out of self, out of smallness, out of wrong.—George MacDonald.

I love that tranquility of soul in which we feel the blessing of existence, and which in itself is a prayer and a thanksgiving.—Longfellow.

The character of a man's country is as strongly impressed on his mind as its accent is on his tongue.—La Rochefoucauld.

To Whom it May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of cores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK, Editor Christian Advocate.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. C. C. Evans: "This is our first year on the Satartia circuit. We have been kindly received by the good people of Satartia circuit. Our congregations are good, and are improving. The outlook we think is good for a fine year's work. Pray for us. God bless you and the dear old ADVOCATE."

Rev. P. H. Howse, P. C., Walnut Grove circuit, Feb. 24, 1897: "Perhaps, Mr. Editor, it would not be anything amiss to let the brethren hear from this noted charge. This is my second year with this people. We are moving off fairly well in some respects, and are hopeful of a real prosperous year. There has been a great deal of sickness among us of a severe type, but we thank God only few have died. Pneumonia is almost an epidemic. We have had sickness in our own family, but we received cordial attention. I believe that the people of Walnut Grove are a loyal people, if a man will cry out and let them know he is in need. Wife and I were both sick and confined to bed during the week of sleet in January, and our home was visited by a number of our people who brought with them a quantity of nice prepared food for us and our little children. The parties were Bros. Henderson, Chadwick, Aunt Lucy Henderson, Sister Miller, and Ellis, while others administered other kindnesses. Really I believe if we had remained sick they would have taken good care of this year. Ah! well these people know how to take care of sick folks, and they do it. They have been very kind since our little daughter is confined to her bed with pneumonia. I believe that Walnut Grove charge can be spiritualized until preachers will be pleased to serve this people. It is true that we are all poor together; so when one says, 'I am poor,' the rest all say, 'Ditto, Peter.' But I trust that before the close of this year when one says he is happy, all the rest can say, 'Amen, brother; the same over here.' Hold up your heads, my people; you are not forsaken. There are great possibilities in you; let God bring them out. You can be the banner circuit of the Brandon district. Why not? Christ-likeness will solve the problem."

Rev J. H. Mitchell, P. E., Durant Miss., Feb. 26, 1897: "I am nearing the close of my first round on the district. Thus far we have had the best Winter in four for travel; yet there has been more sickness among the people than I have seen for some time. I do not remember to have ever heard of as much pneumonia; in some communities many deaths. Some of the preachers have been somewhat hindered by sickness in their families. At this writing all are improving. Last year was a good one with us. We had advancement at every point. We are working to make this, by the grace of God, a better year than last. We have much to encourage us. The preachers are a faithful band of men with heart in the work. They have all been kindly received, and there isn't a jar anywhere. We are praying and working for a revival in every charge. Hope to bring up all collections ordered by the Conference, and leave not a dollar of debt on any church or parsonage. At Lexington we have a beautiful new church of brick nearing completion. When finished it will be the best and prettiest church in Holmes county. It will supply a long felt need in the excellent little town. Our church has been in the background there, but it is in the front now, and a nobler band I don't know. Salem Church, in Salem circuit, is now nearly completed, and when finished it will be the best church-house in the county out of Kosciusko; and thus it is that all over the district there is a spirit of improvement. The ADVOCATE is growing upon our people. If they could see the editor, I think it would have a better hold still. I hope you will arrange to be with us at our District Conference, to be held at Pickens. We will give you the time."

Rev. S. B. Myers, Rosedale, Miss., Feb. 25: "Like Bro. 'Gilderoy,' we have struck bottom at last. Bishop Galloway read us out to Rosedale at our last Conference. We went back to Courtland and prepared at once to move. Bro. Mimms, our predecessor, told us that the house the people of Rosedale had bought for a parsonage would have to be repaired and furnished before it was ready for occupancy, so we sent wife and the children to father's and came to our charge. We were met and entertained by Col. E. H. Moore. He and his family did all they could to make a boy preacher in a strange land, and among strangers, feel at home. We spent about ten days here, and then joined our family to spend the holidays. We found these people loyal, wide awake, intelligent and cultured. We were at once delighted with them and also with the country, with its broad, level, fertile fields. We were delayed in our return because of sickness; mother had a very violent attack of pneumonia, and our little girl only six months old was very ill with the same awful disease. On our return we found the parsonage still not ready. We went to the home of Mrs. Eldridge, who entertained us all royally for a week. We then went to the home of Hon. Fred Clark, and remained there till the house was ready for us to occupy. Bro. Clark is one of nature's noblemen; his wife is of the same type, and the children partake of the parent stock. On Wednesday, Feb. 17, we moved to the parsonage. The ladies gave us a donation reception, and I have read of 'gentle breezes,' and 'storms.' This parsonage was struck by a 'cyclone,' which set in on Wednesday and lasted until Friday evening, and when it had partially ceased we found it had brought 1 barrel flour, 5 hams, 50 pounds lard, sugar, coffee, soda, pickles, preserves, spice, nutmegs, pepper, macaroni, and all kinds of canned goods, besides many useful articles for furnishing the parsonage, as tables, hat-rack, rugs, glassware, and tableware. These noble women, led by Sister Farrar and noble men, led by Bro. Jno. Lobdell, have collected more than $700, and used in buying, repairing and furnishing parsonage since we came. They are fixing a nice comfortable home for the preacher and his family. 'Then why should the heart be sad?' Our Quarterly Conference followed on Monday, and the stewards made a liberal assessment of $800 for us. Rosedale paid more than one-quarter of her assessment. Bro. Dorman was with us, and he is making us a model presiding elder. We are all pleased with him. We have also raised money and begnn a new church at Beulah. The frame is already up, and those 'godly women' are pressing the battle. To say we are pleased would feebly express our true feelings. May God help us to be able to as richly supply this good people with spiritual things as they are supplying us with temporal things. Success to the ADVOCATE."

In Bro. Terry's report from his charge, published recently, our printers substituted the word "charge" for "church."

OBITUARIES.

NEWMAN—Bro. R. S. Newman and wife are sorely afflicted over the loss of their twin boys. They were born Feb. 2, and one died on the eighteenth and the other on the twenty-fifth of February. The little ones are sleeping side by side in the earth, while there are two bright angel spirits in heaven. C. McD.

HENDRICKS—Sister SARAH ELIZABETH HENDRICKS (nee Jones) was born May 3, 1853; married to J. W. Hendricks, May 13, 1875; joined the M. E. Church, South, about five years ago, and departed this life in peace Feb. 15, 1897.

She was a noble type of lovely womanhood, and that, combined with her Christian integrity, made her a woman loved by all who knew her.

Her illness was of more than eleven months' duration, but she grew stronger spiritually as she weakened physically. She was perfectly resigned to God's will, and said repeatedly that all she regretted about dying was the separation from her husband and two adopted daughters.

Truly a good woman has gone from us, but our loss has been heaven's gain.

E. E. LANGFORD, P. C.
Anguilla, Miss.

JOHNSON—"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord," may well be written of the bright young life which ended on earth the first day of December, 1896.

Miss MARGUERITE JOHNSON in early childhood gave her heart to God, and gladly took the vows necessary to church membership. In the years which followed her Christian duty seemed ever a pleasure, and any task assigned found her willing to do her best. Sweetness of disposition, with a readiness to act in any good cause, made her a general favorite. To her pastor's family she was a constant and helpful friend, and all who knew her well feel in her death a personal bereavement.

Just twenty-two years and four months had she numbered upon earth ere her sunny, winsome presence passed from the now darkened home.

After a long and painful illness the summons came, and with a smiling countenance, and upon her lips these words of glad assurance, "I'm going, going home," she sweetly fell asleep.

S. R. EVANS.

BROKESHOULDER—NICOLAS BROKESHOULDER was a full-blood Choctaw Indian, and was one of the first-fruits of our labors among the Indians of Mississippi. He joined the Methodist Church at Tali-Chulok in August, 1892, and died Dec. 21, 1896. His conversion was genuine. He gave up all of his former Indian customs, and entered at once fully into the services of the Lord. His first great concern was to build and organize an Indian church and school, and through his earnest and persistent efforts we are largely indebted for the church and school now located at Tali-Chulok, Kemper county, Miss. He was of great help to the church in many ways. He was a good interpreter, and served in this capacity willingly and successfully until his death. He will be greatly missed at the Mission, but his consistent life and triumphant death will doubtless lead others to a better life. Bro. J. W. Toles visited him just before he died, and heard him say, "I am willing, ready, and not afraid to die." He left a wife, six boys, and one little girl to mourn his death. The little girl has since died. W. W. CAMMACK.

Hood's Pills cure Liver Ills; easy to take, easy to operate. 25c.

Disease is like a devil fish. It has one body with many diverging arms. The man who is grasped by one of these arms may possibly not see that it is directly connected with the others. Nine diseases out of ten start from the same cause. The arms are all attached to the same body. Impure blood reaches out in all directions over the human body. It stretches out a tentacle and grasps one organ or another. It attacks the liver and the sufferer is said to have "liver complaint." It attacks the lungs, and he is said to have consumption. It reaches his kidneys, and the doctors say he has kidney disease and treat his kidneys. These so called diseases are only symptoms. They all reach back to the same cause, and that cause is impure blood. And impure blood is usually caused by imperfect digestion. The way to kill a devil fish is to attack its head and body. It might be killed by cutting off its arms, but it would take a long time. While one was being cut off, others would fasten themselves on the victim.

The way to cure disease is to cure the cause of the disease—to go right at the head of the matter. There is no use treating symptoms. Disease cannot exist in a body that is perfectly pure and full of healthfull, strength-giving properties. It can be made pure by the use of Dr. Pierce's great medicine, the "Golden Medical Discovery." It is because of its wonderful, blood purifying and invigorating qualities that this remedy is so marvelous in its effect on diseases of the throat, bronchial tubes and lungs. It cures ninety-eight per cent. of all cases of consumption. It stops lingering, chronic coughs, and builds up those who are "run-down," emaciated or debilitated from any cause. It makes sound, firm, healthy flesh. It makes people strong. It invigorates the blood, and stimulates the action of every organ in the body. The three things that it does are the three things that must be done in every case before health can come. It steadies and strengthens the nerves; makes digestion perfect; makes the blood pure and rich. There is nothing in the world just like it. There is nothing in the world that is "just as good," though dishonest druggists will sometimes tell you so, for the sake of the profit they will make on inferior articles.

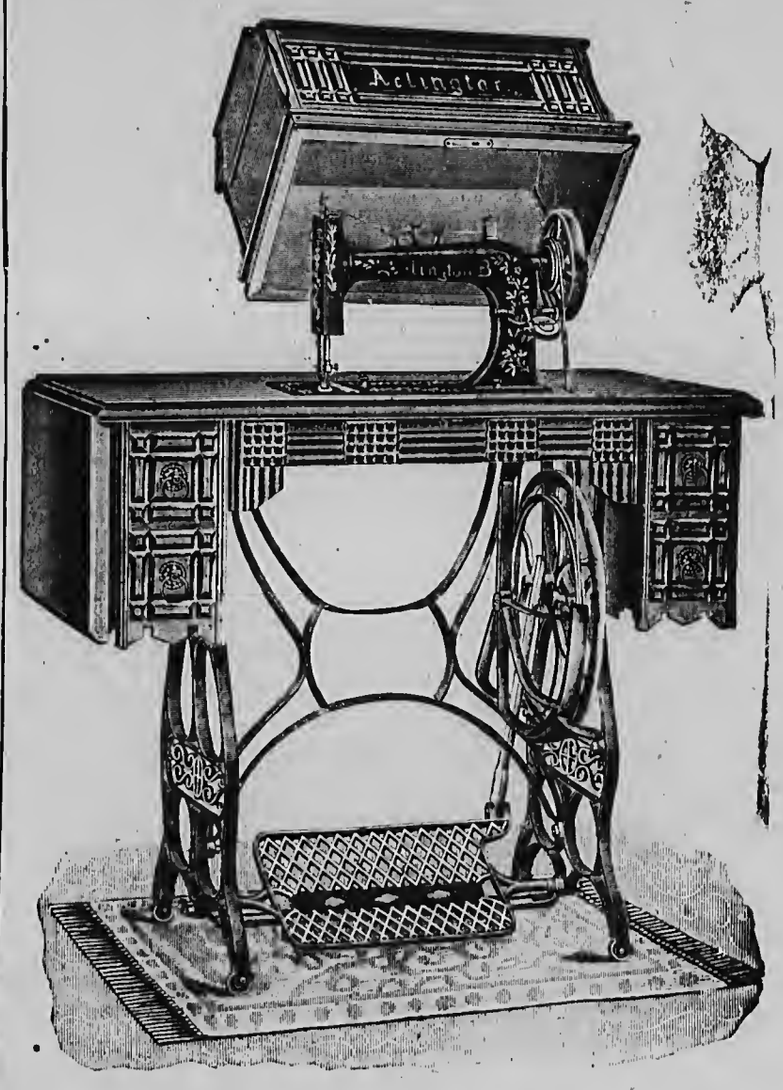
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.



A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, tupper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light or heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

One evidence of growth in grace is an increasing willingness to be told of our faults.

An antagonist who uses unfair methods puts you in a double danger. You may either lose your temper, or adopt his tactics.—Baltimore Advocate.

The men who have achieved the greatest success in life are not those who have spent most of their time in meddling with the business of other people.

Don't say you are walking with God, when all the world knows that you are walking in the pathway of the evil-doer. If you do, you will not fool anybody.

See to it that if men hate you they shall do it on account of your devotion to Christ—not on account of any maltreatment of them, or unseemly conduct towards them.

Others are affected by what I am and say and do. And these others have their sphere of influence. So then a single act of mine may spread in ever-widening circles through a nation or humanity—W. E. Channing.

The best revival is not always the one which adds the largest number of names to the church roll, but the one which results in the greatest amount of holy living for months and years after the revival services are over. Selah.

It is a very doubtful compliment when the devil brags on a sermon. And yet some preachers are tremendously pleased when they receive such compliments.

N. B.—Diabolus does his complimenting by proxy.

Some people do not mean what they say when they pray for a baptism of the Holy Ghost. That is the very thing they don't want. They want a kind of religion that is compatible with the tastes, pursuits and pleasures of an unregenerate life.

Beecher once compared the Sabbath to a lofty hill on which we ascend out of the mists and shadows of toil and care into the sunlight of blessed communion with our heavenly Father. Such the Sabbath ought to be, and such it is to many, but not to those who make it a holiday instead of a holy day.

Don't boast of your meetness for the kingdom of glory above until you have shown yourself a loyal subject of the kingdom of grace below. If you fail to meet the responsibilities of this mundane sphere, then it is certain that you are mistaken about readiness for the employments and associations of the life celestial.

Reliance upon the Holy Spirit.

There is no little skepticism among men with reference to the person and work of the Holy Spirit. Only those who have fully submitted themselves unto God, and have felt the quickening energy of the Spirit, know the certainty of spiritual things. How true it is that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit; for they are foolishness unto him!" Since we have to deal so constantly with physical forces, with things of sense, all of us are more or less affected by the tendency to rely too much upon natural means, upon the arm of flesh in the pursuits of godliness. Because we can not see the Spirit of God as we see sensuous objects, nor use him as we utilize steam and electricity, we discount his power and readiness to help. "Faith, however, can do for the spirit what the senses do in our natural life. As eye and ear and touch reveal the presence of those we love, so faith is eye and ear and touch to the spirit."

While it is true that God helps most those who help themselves, we should never forget that spiritual results can be produced only by divine agency. In the kingdom of grace Paul may plant, and Apollos may water, but God gives the increase. There ought ever to be the consciousness that in promoting the work of grace in ourselves and in others all human efforts and means are vain, unless there be the guidance and powerful assistance of the Holy Spirit. We can never realize too strongly that soul reformation and transformation are brought about only by Spirit-imparted energy. "For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh: for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." What student of the New Testament can fail to note how constantly the presence of the Spirit is associated with power!

At every step of the soul's progress toward the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ, there must be dependence upon the gracious power and influence of the blessed Spirit. Without him we can do nothing. While God can and does often use learning, eloquence, riches and genius in the furtherance of his kingdom, we know that he is not shut up to these things. Hath he not chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and weak things to confound the mighty? But as Peloubet remarks: "If God can use our ignorance, how much more our knowledge; if God can use our folly, how much more our wisdom; if our poverty, how much more our wealth?"

He who would make his own heart clean, and live a godly life without the co-operation of the Spirit, attempts to do as foolish a thing as changing the course of the winds or stilling the restless waves of ocean. Preaching, worship, and efforts at reforming men are fruitless where there is not earnest prayer for the Spirit's presence and mighty aid. What steam is to the locomotive, such is the relation the Spirit sustains to the church and to each believer. He is the propelling force that keeps the machinery of religious activity in motion. Unless we fervently seek his aid and honor his presence, he will pass us by though we worship in costly temples, listen to enrapturing music, and are honored of all men. As a church, we shall fail if we put our trust in organization, wealth, numbers, or in culture.

Some Christians pray for the power of the Holy Ghost, but do not receive it because, perhaps, they seek it for ends of self-glorification. Like the Jews of old, there are those who still seek a sign from heaven, a remarkable manifestation of the Spirit's presence. But it is more from idle curiosity, or some other worldly motive, than from any real desire for grace to live righteously and labor for God. Well has it been said that "we can be used by the Spirit, though we can not use the Spirit." It is useless to pray for more Spirit power when we leave undone any duty or kindness to which he prompts. Let us not be disappointed because we do not receive all the power we pray for and expect. God gives all we need. If a rose bush or any other plant were to receive a year's supply of sunlight at one time, it would be blasted. These earthen vessels might burst if filled too fully of the wine of the Spirit.

What greater encouragement could the Christian have than the assurance that the Spirit of truth shall be his perpetual Guide and Helper? Because it is said, "He shall guide you into all truth," we are not warranted in concluding that those who have the clear witness of the Spirit are kept from all faults and errors of judgment. Those who trust to what they call "Spirit movings" are extremely liable to run off into vagaries and the wildest fanaticism. Every action and course of conduct should be tested by the teaching of Scripture as illuminated and interpreted by the Holy Spirit; and then shall we be able to walk circumspectly. Mr. Wesley once wrote to a friend: "I am guided mainly by reason and Scripture; rarely by Spirit impressions." The Spirit is given not to supplant reason, but to aid it; not to do away with scriptural precepts and commands, but apply them; not to add to Revelation, but to illumine and enforce what we have already received.

The grand doctrine of the Spirit's personality and perpetual presence is but little considered and appreciated even by many professing Christians. That the Third Person in the Trinity descends to earth and comes into the heart of each believer to abide there as a Witness, Guide, Interpreter, and Helper is a truth transcendently glorious. "Know ye not," says Paul, "that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" The follower of Christ ought to feel that he is never alone. Though forsaken by man, he may ever have heavenly companionship. The measureless strength of God is his support. The wants of his soul are supplied out of an infinite fullness. Not as a transient guest, but as an ever-abiding, unfailing friend the Spirit comes to the true child of God, and makes him a partaker of the infinite riches of God's grace and power. To each he brings what we most need—illumination for the ignorant, strength for the weak, purity for the defiled, rest for the weary, comfort for the distressed.

Let us not be deceived, however. The man who tolerates evil of any kind in his heart and life is not a temple of the Holy Ghost. To have the Spirit with us always we must keep the guest-chamber of the soul clean and sweet. Nor will he abide where there is neglect of his wishes and teaching.

Sometimes Christians imagine that God is not as willing to pour out his Spirit in convicting and saving power as in other days. If the Spirit, however, does not come in showers of blessing, it is because of our lack of faith and full consecration. As the Rev. F. B. Meyer has so strikingly said: "The Spirit of God is with the church. Every day may be to her a day of Pentecost. The living Christ is here amid the golden candlesticks. It is not needful to go back into the past, or forward into the future to find him—he is here. All around us is the blessed atmosphere of the spiritual and eternal. It is a mistake to sigh for anything more than this. Whatever we need for the nurture of a noble, useful, and blessed life is as near us as the ocean to the scale of the fish, or the sunbeam to the gorgeous plumage of the humming-bird." The Master says, "If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?"

Let us seek above all things to be filled with the Spirit, and then shall every grace abound in us, and sinners be brought to repentance. Beautifully has it been said that "Christ's loveliness fills the soul where the Spirit is in full possession, as the odor of the ointment filled the house at Bethany."

The Law of Appeal—"Southern Methodist."

Discipline, ¶ 42 (5). "They shall not do away the privileges of our ministers and preachers of a trial by committee, and of an appeal." ¶ 309. "The records of the trial in the Quarterly Conference shall be laid before the committee, which records only shall be the evidence."

The above are the only references to the law of appeal in our Discipline, the only law book of Southern Methodism, which relate to the Morrison appeal. It is plain to any reader who has not been misled by precedent that a General Conference (much more an Annual or Quarterly Conference) is denied the power to refuse an appellant the hearing of his case before a court of appeals.

Your correspondent, "Southern Methodist," in his article under the above heading in the ADVOCATE, of Feb. 25, says the position that the appeal is to be heard "on the records alone" "is manifestly incorrect and unsustained by a single precedent." There were three appeals before the Committee on Appeals of the General Conference (1890). The Minutes do not show that two of them were ever before the General Conference until the report of the Committee on Appeals was made. There were three appeals before our last General Conference (1894) at Memphis. The Minutes of the General Conference show that in neither case did the General Conference do anything more than refer the appeal to the Committee on Appeals. The writer is well aware that there is more than one precedent for raising the question, "Shall the appeal be allowed" by the General Conference? All students of the Discipline are equally aware that there is no authority for such question in our only law book; instead thereof a constitutional denial of such authority. Our last General Conference followed a long line of better precedents and carefully observed the law. Will my critic take back his declaration that my position is "unsustained by a single precedent?"

A word as to the other point, "contumacy." "Southern Methodist" declares that there are two "fatal objections" to a plea by Morrison that he has not, since his trial, exercised the authority given him by the church to preach.

"(1) The preacher can not become a layman in the church who has been expelled from the ministry and membership of the church." There are two fatal errors in this statement of the facts in this case—(a) Morrison surrendered his license and parchments before his trial, therefore, before he was "expelled." (b) Morrison does not preach as a layman "in the church;" he claims no authority from the church for his preaching. "(2) He could not very consistently ask for the restoration of authority to preach when he had never ceased preaching." Suppose he asks for no such authority, would this bar his right to appeal? As a matter of fact, if the Annual Conference were to reverse the action of the Quarterly Conference, the reversal would not make Morrison a Methodist preacher—it would only relieve him of censure and open the door by which he could apply in disciplinary form for the restoration of his "authority," having himself voluntarily resigned said authority. (See Episcopal Decision, ¶ 548.)

Let the reader remember that the writer does not say that, technically, Morrison has not been guilty of contumacy; he only says that looking at facts from Morrison's standpoint he may not have intended contempt, and that in the kingdom of Christ motive is of the essence of wrong and charity the chief factor in the administration of church law.

Outside of all motive, excluding the mantle of charity and acting on the basis of the barest technicality, will "Southern Methodist" claim that any act of contumacy upon the part of Morrison before his trial would have justified the presiding elder or preacher in charge in excluding him from the ministry and church without a trial? This, in view of the history of the constitutional provision, he will not claim for a moment. He knows the provision was enacted to forbid just such methods then prevalent.

If contumacy could not deny a trial, neither can it deny an appeal—both being secured by the same constitutional provision in the same sentence in identical words. This must end all controversy. The only remaining question is this: Is it better to trample our Constitution under foot to cure an evil or wait until the General Conference applies a remedy? The right of appeal is sacred to every Methodist; our fathers placed it in the Constitution, and no court of Methodism can on any ground disallow it.

Let us be content to do little, if God sets us at little tasks. It is but pride and self-will which says, "Give me something huge to fight, and I should enjoy that; but why make me sweep the dust."—Charles Kingsley.

Jackson and West Point.

By invitation of President Murrah, we lectured last Friday night to the students of Millsaps College. The audience was exceedingly attentive and apparently appreciative. During our stay in Jackson we enjoyed the hospitalities of Dr. Murrah and his accomplished wife, having as our guest during a considerable part of the time our old-time friend, Dr. Horace Mallard DuBose. To the trio we are indebted for a most delightful day.

This trip gave us our first sight of Webster Science Hall. It is quite a handsome building, and most admirably adapted to the purposes of its erection. The library, the reading-room, the laboratory and, indeed, all the apartments, are all excellently constructed. The college is in fine condition. The attendance is good, and the students, as a rule, are making good use of their time and conducting themselves in a manner worthy of commendation. Dr. DuBose has proven himself to be exactly the right man in the right place. Congregations are large, and Zion is flourishing like a green bay tree. We met Bro. Norsworthy, who gives a cheering account of the outlook for the Jackson district. Rev. R. W. Bailey seems to be making a decided success of his colportage work.

From Jackson we went to West Point on Saturday, and preached for Bro. Lagrone twice on Sunday. The new church is quite a handsome brick building, with Sunday-school room separated from the auditorium by sliding doors. The erection of such a house of worship during these times of financial stringency speaks well for West Point Methodism. Bro. Lagrone is in great favor with his flock, who regard him as strictly first class in the pulpit and in every sphere of ministerial activity. Without any revival meeting, Bro. Lagrone has received twenty members since Conference. He has large and constantly increasing congregations, and every interest of the church is prospering. The Epworth League is growing in interest, and the weekly prayer meeting is well attended. Through the influence of Bro. Lagrone our visit to West Point resulted in the addition of a number of names to our subscription list.

During our stay in West Point we were so fortunate as to be domiciled in the home of Bro. and Sister S. B. White, whose generous hospitalities and thoughtful attention we much appreciate. West Point is one of the progressive and growing towns of Mississippi. It is quite a railroad center, and has a population of about 4,500. It is said that there is not a vacant house in the town.

The Brevity of Life.

Life is very critical. Any word may be our last. Any farewell, even amid glee and merriment, may be forever. If this truth were but burned into our consciousness, and if it ruled as a deep conviction and real power in our lives, would it not give a new meaning to our human relationships? Would it not make us far more tender than we sometimes are? Would it not oftentimes put a rein upon our rash and impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the miserable suspicions and jealousies that now so often embitter the fountains of our lives? Would we be so impatient of the faults of others? Would we allow trivial misunderstandings to build up a wall between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels year after year which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass old friends or neighbors in the street without recognition, because of some real or fancied slight, some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or would we be so chary of kind words or commendations, our sympathy, our comfort, when weary hearts all about us are breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?—Great Thoughts.

Returning Memories.

Memories bring gladness or sadness according to their moral element. To revisit the scenes of one's earlier life recalls memories which give pleasure, or give pain. Every remembered act of kindness toward another, or of opportunity improved, is a precious treasure. Every recalled instance of misdoing, or of neglected occasion of helping others or of gaining good, gives an added pang of hopeless regret. Memories are a permanent investment, and, once made, they can not be changed.

Now is the time to make such investments for future income. The words and deeds of to-day will bring a steady return for the coming years.—Sunday School Times.

NOTES.

"The Missouri Traveler," Dr. W. B. Palmore, is off again; this time to Cuba.

The congregation at Carondolet Street were favored last Sunday with a strong sermon from Bishop Keener.

Bishop Galloway will preach the commencement sermon at Greensboro (N. C.) Female College, May 25.

W. W. Timberlake, of Richmond, Va., recently deceased, left a legacy of $3,000 to Randolph-Macon College.

Editor Hoss, of the Jerusalem Advocate, is delivering a series of lectures to the students of Emory College, Oxford, Ga.

Rev. A. H. Shannon passed through the city last week on his return to Millsaps College, after an absence of some weeks caused by ill-health.

We were pleased to meet in the city our genial friend, Rev. T. B. White, of the Louisiana Conference. He seems to be in good health and spirits.

Rev. L. M. Broyles, of the North Mississippi Conference, has been transferred by Bishop Galloway to the Holston Conference, and stationed at Bluefield, West Va.

Rev. W. T. Currie, of the M. E. Church, has just closed a ten days' meeting on Bayou Lacomb, near Slidell, La., which resulted in the organization of an M. E. Church of twenty-five members.

On account of our absence from the city we missed the Conference of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society at Felicity Street Church, much to our regret. We also missed the Conference of Charities.

From the Central Methodist we learn that Millersburg Female College, Millersburg, Ky., was sold, March 1, under the sheriff's hammer to Dr. Mac Miller. Rev. C. Pope will continue in charge to the close of the present session, and probably longer.

Mrs. Newsom, wife of Hon. H. C. Newsom, State senator from St. Helena parish, died a few days since. She was a woman of fine Christian character. Bro. Newsom is widely known in Methodist circles, having been a delegate to the Annual Conference for years.

The man who conducts the prayer meeting should not preach the funeral of the church at every service. He should not make those who attend unhappy by pomelling non-attendants over their heads. A church is not built for a growlery. If you want to preach to those who stay away, preach to them at their homes and in their shops.—Standard.

Christ, when upon the earth, influenced men by personal contact. He was no recluse, but a man of the people. He mingled among all classes. He was warm of sympathy, kindly in disposition, responsive to human needs and generous and helpful in all the ways of life. It is the heart-to-heart and the life-to-life association which most affects our associates. The more of the Christ-spirit and conduct we put into our intercourse with others, the more beneficent, lasting and telling our influence.—Presbyterian.

The fact that a particular church has not a larger membership now than it had years ago does not prove that it has not been a blessing and a necessity to the community. Many a school has no larger attendance now than it had fifty years ago, and yet during all these years it has been educating the children of the community, and sending them out in the world fitted for their duties. What is required of a man, a school or a church is that there shall be faithfulness in the discharge of duty.—Herald and Presbyter.

out the Mississippi State Epworth League Conference to be Held at Water Valley, April 29-May 2.

I desire to call special attention to the gathering of Methodist young ple in Mississippi.

First, it is earnestly desired that the preachers come. Water Valley agrees to entertain all who may e, and she will do all she promes; so the cost of coming will only the railroad fare, and a few extra ds, collars, and handkerchiefs. expect to get a one-rate fare r all the read.

Brethren, yon need to come. ny of you have no Leagnes, and shonld come to this great State thering, and mix up with some of best young Christian workers in erica. It will wake you np, if need waking np; it will stir , and send yon home with a ader, warmer feeling than you r had before.

Second, it is desirod that at least young person from every charge ll come. Don't elect delegates m the Leagues, bnt send everyy who will come. I wish 1,000 ng people would march into ter Valley on the evening of ril 29. Some of the best speakers the South have been engaged for occasion. T. W. LEWIS.

Resolutions of New Orleans Preachers' Meeting on the Death of Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D.

Whereas, Our beloved father in Israel, brother itinerant and eloquent preacher, Rev. Joseph B. Walker, D. D., ripe in years and ripe for heaven, fell asleep Feb. 26, 1897; And whereas, By his death a mighty man and prince in Zion has gone from among us; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we acknowledge with gratitude to God that during his long life he wrought wonderfully well for his day and generation and for the church of God, exemplifying in power and beauty the graces of highest Christian character and the resplendent virtues of a life consecrated to the glory of God and the saving of men.

Resolved, That, as a man, he was cast in noblest mold, and in all the relationships of life ever displayed the characteristics of truest manhood, informed and sanctified by the gracions influence of genuine godliness.

Resolved, That by his death there has gone from us a perfect Christian gentleman, a divine who in his prime was not easily surpassed for pulpit eloquence and power, and a pastor faithful and successful in the largest pastorates of his Conference.

Resolved, That he has left his brethren of the Louisiana Conference a precious legacy of ministerial usefulness and holy living that should inspire them to better doing and higher living, seeking to follow him as he followed and served his and their Master.

Resolved, That we thank God for the life and work of Dr. Walker, made illnstrious by holiness of heart and life and the steady consecration of his splendid natnral gifts to the ministry of the world.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with his aged wife, who throughont all the years of their wedded life has been his trne helpmeet and best earthly friend, and with the family deprived by his death of their father and grandfather.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolntions be sent to the widow and family of Dr. Walker and also be published in the Nashville and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATES and in the Times-Democrat and New Orleans Picayune.

The Day of Rest.

MR. EDITOR: I have not attempted to write anything to the ADVOCATE since I was a very small boy. I was little then, and did not know that editors had a large hasket into which they placed a great deal of the correspondence which they received. My letter, however, came out in print in the conrse of a week or two after I had mailed it. Possibly the knowlodge of that waste-basket has kept me from offering any more of my productions to the papers, and has prevented me from becoming one of the greatest writers of the age. It would have hurt me very mnch indeed if my first letter had fonnd its way to the baskot; hnt, on the other hand, it made me feel exceedingly proud.

I notico a great deal of talk—or at least writing—lately about Toronto, Canada. The Epworth League is going to meet there. I would like to go, bnt am too short of means at the present (not hroken, understand) to think of snch a thing. My prayers will go with the delegates, however, and I wish them a happy and prosperons visit.

One thing in connection with Toronto I would like to impress upon young America's mind, and that is, Toronto has no street cars moving up and down its streets, disturbing the peace and serenity of the Sabbath on that holy day. If all of these twenty thousand attendants will return to their native States imbued with a deeper sense of reverence for tho "day of days, the sweetest," then they will have been benefited by having gone, more than they would had they visited any city in the United States. The people know the value of a day's rest in Toronto, hut hero they seem to have gone into money making to such a great extent that they have forgetten that the human body needs a day of relaxation from the work of this life.

I have been working now in this place nearly nineteen months, including Sunday, and not a day of rest have I had. Partly my fault; wholly the people's fault. They can stop the trains from moving a wheel on Sunday if they will. The official members of the church get their mail on Sunday even. That is wrong. Those very officials would not permit a furrow to be plowed in their fields on Sunday, yet they will come to town on that day, enter boldly into the postoffice, ask for their mail, and go to the church with pockets full of papers, letters, and circulars, etc. If the train is a little late, being due here at 9:32 A. M., they will wait till it comes, get the mail, then go to Sabbath-school, causing that to be as late as the train was. I saw that in Mississippi, too, with my own eyes. The Sunday-school had to be regulated by the schedule of the morning train, for the postmistress liked to have a little time at home, and as soon as the mail was opened and distributed she would go home, and those unfortunates who happened not to be at the office when the mail was opened had to do without till Monday morning.

If Toronto can stop her street cars, she can stop the railroad cars; and if she can do this, why can't the United States do the same? It can, if the people will demand it. LYMAN.

Brierfield, Ala., Feb. 26, 1897.

Third Meeting.

I am now at Independence, Mo., helping in my third meeting. This is a large town not very far from Kansas City. The weather is cold and sleety. The people up here don't seem to care for it, but you may rest assured that the writer does. I am booked for three revivals, bnt I think that two just now will snffice. The people up here are a good deal like the climate—pretty cold. The majority of the people are so absorbed in making money that they have not the time to be religions. The church work in many places is carried on very largely by the women. However, the prospects for a great time are very flattering.

Will let you hear from me later abont the final results. I have been invited to one of the churches in Kansas City, hnt I don't think I can get there on this trip.

Our meeting at Marion, Ala, was a big success. The Lord was there in great power.

The victory at Tnla and Toccopola was a glorious one. One hundred and fifty joined the churches—mostly Methodist. There must have been two hundred conversions. Many loads of families promised to take up family prayer. We organized four missionary societies, and Bro. Grisham started an Epworth League. We think this was a pretty good showing for eleven days' work. It did me so much good to get away out in the country and preach to an appreciative people. If more of us that stick so close to the railroads would go out into the country oftener, it would be better for all concerned. But it is hard for one of these "extinguished" evangelists, or kid-glove station preachers, to travel thirty miles into the country to preach the gospel to the poor. I decided before I had gone thirty miles over the hills and through the mud that if the world was as big west of Water Valley as it was east to Toccopola, then we are living in a large world. I would go ont in the country more; hut if I did, the people would soon think that I couldn't go anywhere else, and they would soon decido that I was too little for them. But if I tell them out there that I am invited to St. Louis, then they get anxious for me at once. This is a strange old world, anyway.

In conclusion, let me say, yon may have all the States if you will just give me old Mississippi. She is good enough for me.

CHINESE LANTERN PLANT.

Most Ornamental Window or Garden Plant Known, and a Delicious Fruit.

Treated like a Tomato it grows and fruits freely in the garden during summer, or in pots both summer and winter. It bears continually numerous large, inflated husks, much the shape of Chinese lanterns, at first a beautiful green color, changing to a yellowish hue, then to brightest scarlet, and as they hang suspended among the foliage they present a most novel and beautiful sight. Autumn frosts do not injure it, and it is a showy garden plant until December. In each "Lantern" a fruit is borne, of large size and rich ruby color, which is most delicious for eating raw, or for cooking and preserving. Branches of lanterns cut and dried retain their rich and brilliant colors for years and make most charming vase ornaments. Grows 18 inches high; bears abundantly all the time in any soil or climate. No other pot plant so beautiful as this. Having an enormous stock, we offer strong plants for early fruiting, by mail, postpaid, guaranteed to arrive in good order, at 25 cts. each; 4 for 50 cts.; 10 for $1.00.

A Great 60c. TRIAL COLLECTION of valuable Novelties. All the following, a complete Novelty Garden, for only 60 cts., postpaid (Worth $2.60): 2 Chinese Lantern Plants, 1 Rudbeckia Golden Glow, 1 Everbearing Tree Strawberry, 1 Dwarf Canna, 3 New Giant Gladiolus Childsi, 3 Fancy Orchid Gladiolus, 1 Mammoth Shamrock Oxalis, 6 packets Flower Seed Novelties, including the Golden Verbesena and Rare Japanese Maples, our Catalogue, and THE MAYFLOWER Monthly Magazine for one year—(64 pages, with colored plate each month, devoted to Flowers and Gardening)—all for 60 cents.

The Art of Keeping Young.

One of the most gennine of men who seemed to have drank at some hidden fonntain of youth that kept him young when other men were sinking beneath the burden of years, said that he would rather be seventy years yonng than forty years old. There are many who are not so wise, who prefer to invite age. They anticipate it by taking npon themselves the cares of all future years, adding them in an accnmulated burden to the cares of to-day. Anxiety for the morrow adds many a line to the brow and brings grey hairs long before their time.

No one wishes to grow old, for old age means the loss of many pleasures, and there is really no need for it. Of course the frail tenement which holds the spirit will one day wear out, bnt the spirit itself which makes the man may retain its youthful vigor nntil it passes into that land which knows no age and where eternal youth is found.

After one has journeyed a little distance into eternity he will be amazed at his folly in calling himself old because he has filled out his little span of years on earth, since in comparison with the futnre stretching out before him it will seem like a moment of time.

There are many precautions which may be taken to keep the spirit young, and perhaps one of the most important is to keep abreast of the times, even though the exertion means the laying aside of some prejndice, the crucifixion of some old fogyism, or some pet hobby ridden to death. Let the mind keep in touch with the workings of other minds, and it can defy the approach of age.

Keeping in sympathy with young people is another means of retaining this elusive youth which takes wings and flies away the moment one forgets or outgrows the memories of his own early days. Then other men will begin to say that he has outlived his time. Young people, by their zeal, their enthusiasm, have a way of infecting others and lending to them a part of their energy without suffering any loss themselves. Too often those who have passed the noontide of life forget to be charitable for the foolishness of the young, and set themselves up as critics. They forget their own youthful escapades, and condemn others, growing narrow all the while. Such persons age fast. Sometimes they are old when they ought to be in their prime, and it is because they have chosen to be so.

Cheerfulness is another certain antidote against the encroachments of age. The one who can shake off care, rise above discouragements and keep a buoyant spirit forgets to grow old. Those who can avoid worry are fortunate, since it is not work, but worry which kills. It is true that there are some who must carry burdens not always their own, but often those of a certain class of persons who selfishly refuse to carry their troubles, and who are willing to roll them on any convenient shoulders. Bnt who has not seen with almost envy the facnlty some have of rising snperior to their cares, of laying them aside when they can? The great charm of childhood and youth lies in the fact that it is comparatively free from care, and one occasionally meets with a child-like person who will not be overweighted with the trouble of life, and refuses to grieve or be overcome by what they can not remedy. This faculty may be cultivated, and if one is not born a philosopher, he can by force of will and habit mould himself into the likeness of one.

The point from which men view their snrroundings has a great deal to do with their keeping young. If they allow their own personal grievances, their own interests to rise np and block their vision, they will soon forget there is an ontside world, and from being shut up within such narrow limits their lives will lose their freshness. The broader the ontlook the less danger there is of growing selfish. It is the contact with other minds and other lives which helps to keep the sympathies aroused, and when one has the love of his fellow-man glowing in his soul there is little danger of his growing old.—Selected.

Pill Clothes.

The good pill has a good coat. The pill coat serves two purposes; it protects the pill, enabling it to retain all its remedial value, and it disguises the taste for the palate. Some pill coats are too heavy; they will not dissolve in the stomach, and the pills they cover pass through the system as harmless as a bread pellet. Other coats are too light, and permit the speedy deterioration of the pill. After 30 years exposure, Ayer's Sugar Coated Pills have been found as effective as if just fresh from the laboratory. What Makes a Boy Popular.

Chief Justice Waite, in his boyhood, was very popular among his associates. He had no money, but had what was better than a golden purse—a heart that could feel. He sympathized with everybody, with even the beasts and birds. Once, walking under the shadow of the elm trees at Maumee in company with some friends, he heard some birds crying, and found that a young bird had fallen from its nest. He stopped and replaced the bird in the nest. That instinct of universal sympathy made him a popular boy and a yet more popular man. There are many Toledo lawyers who recall the warm words of advice he would cheerfully give to his clients, and many troublesome cases submitted to him were amicably settled without a lawsuit.

Popularity is the recognition that the world give to sympathy and unselfishness. It can not be bought with money. Politeness makes a boy popular. A gentleman knows another gentleman by instinct, and nothing pleases a true gentleman more than to recognize a gentleman in the soul and manners of a good boy.

A popnlar boy is a lover of sports, of outdoor exercise. That is right. He looks upon the playground as a place for the pleasure of his fellows, and he goes there to the end that he may help them enjoy themselves. A kind boy is always popular. Affection is a manner of expressing sympathies with others. A generous boy is popular, while a spendthrift proves himself in time to be very unpopnlar. Manliness in all its true meaning makes a boy popular. The boy who is careful of his sister is popular. The boy who will never violate his word, and who will pledge his honor to his own hurt and change not, will have the confidence of his fellows.

The boy who defends the weak will one day become a hero among the strong. A boy who loves, honors, and obeys his parents will always be popular among all classes of men.

All that tends to promote the good that is in our boys and to lift the ideas of our youth above the level of mere physical success and happiness contributes to their well-being and to the public welfare.—Epworth Herald.

The Question of Most Importance.

Some folks would rather puzzle a preacher than save their own sonls. Such people are always studying out hard questions to put to preachers and other Christians, not with a view or desire to learn the way of life and save themselves from death, bnt with purpose of embarrassing and confusing religious folks about matters of no practical valne. Boys and girls who think they are very smart often fall into this evil way. There may be a few of that kind who read this paper: if so, the following excerpt, quoted from some source by the Central Baptist, will teach them a valuable lesson, if indeed they can be tanght anything in their pitiable conceit:

A skeptic once asked the late Dr. Nettleton: "How came I by my wicked heart?"

"That," he replied, "is a question which does not concern yon so much as another—namely, how shall I get rid of it? You have a wicked heart, which renders you entirely unfit for the kingdom of God; and you must have a new heart, or you can not be saved; and the question which now most deeply concerns you is, how you shall obtain it."

"But," said the man, "I wish you to tell me how I came by my wicked heart."

"I shall not," replied Dr. Nettleton, "do that at present; for if I could do it to your entire satisfaction, it would not in the least help you toward a new heart. The great thing for which I am solicitous is that you should become a new creature, and be prepared for heaven."

As the man manifested no wish to hear anything on that subject, but still pressed the question how he came by his wicked heart, Dr. Nettleton told him that his condition resembled that of a man who is drowning, while his friends are attempting to save his life. As he rises to the surface, he exclaims: "How came I here?"

"That question," says one of his friends. "does not concern you now. Take hold of this rope."

"But how came I here?" he asks again.

"I shall not stop to answer that question now," replies his friend.

"Then I'll drown," says the infatuated man; and, spurning all proffered aid, sinks to the bottom.

A mechanic who had been in the habit of dropping into a beer saloon twice a day, and spending five cents each time for a glass of beer, was captivated one day by a new thought. "I am poor," he said to himself; "my family need every cent I can earn; it is growing more and more expensive every year; soon I shall want to educate my children. Ten cents a day for beer! Let me see; that is sixty cents a week. That is thirty-one dollars and twenty cents a year. And it does me no good; it may do me harm. Let me see—" And here he took a piece of chalk and solved the problem on a board. "I can buy two barrels of flour, one hundred pounds of sugar, five ponnds of tea, and six bushels of potatoes for that sum." Pausing for a moment, as if to allow the grand idea to take full possession of himself, he then exclaimed, "I will never waste another cent." He never has, and he is to-day a prosperous man.—Golden Censer.

The maelstrom attracts more notice than the quiet fountain; a comet draws more attention than the steady star; but it is better to be the fountain than maelstrom, and star than comet, following out the sphere and orbits of quiet usefnlness in which God places us.—John Hall.

It is not work that kills men; it is worry. Work is healthy; you can hardly pnt more upon a man than he can bear. Worry is rust upon the blade. It is not the revolution that destroys the machinery; but the friction.—Henry Ward Beecher.

HYGIENE.

Do We Drink Too Little Water?

Probably the majority of men eat too much and do not drink enough water. As a result of this there are deposited in the tissnes many effete products that shonld be carried off by the kidneys. The work done by these organs is in this way interfered with, and in time organic disease often comes on. It is owing to the large amonnt of water that much of the benefit from a milk diet arises. In advocating the use of abundance of water with the solids, attention is called to the danger of washing down the food with it, and not taking time to masticate properly. While water is of prime importance, it can not take the place of saliva.

The benefit derived from a sojonrn at a mineral spring is almost entirely due to the flushing-out the system gets. Waste products are dissolved and washed away by the kidneys. The opinion is expressed that pnre water drunk for a lengthy period would have as good an effect.

In advocating the nse of water, its excessive use must be guarded against. The habit of taking too much of it may be indulged in. This is the other extreme, and may result in harm. The effect of water is to make the kidneys act, and by overdrinking these organs may be overworked. If many people drank more water and used less solid food, kidney diseases would not be so common as they are at present.—The Dietetic Gazette.

Out in God's Fresh Air.

Fresh air is a wonderful remedy for bad temper. And such was the opinion entertained by the one in the following incident.

"Where have you been, Fanny?" asked Mrs. Gessler of her daughter, as the latter entered the house with rosy cheeks and sweet, smiling eyes.

"I've been to lose my temper," was the laughing reply.

"'Lose your temper?' How? Why? I do not understand," Mrs. Gessler said, slightly mystified.

"That is," corrected Fanny, "I've been to lose my bad temper and find my good one. You see, mama, I stayed in the house all day, and grew fretty and cross with Tommy. I wouldn't take my walk with nurse and Tommy this morning, as you like me to do, because I wanted to finish my story. Then this afternoon I was cross and fretful. So nurse told me to take a few runs around the garden in the fresh air and lose my bad temper, and I have."

"It's a very good cure," said Mrs. Gessler, with a laugh. "It's one that older folks could make use of. I think I shall have to call it Fanny's remedy, and use it myself when I grow cross."

"Ah, but you never do grow cross, mama," Fanny said, lovingly.

"I mean never to, it is true; but I, too, shall find it good to get out into God's air, to breathe in a free, fresh supply of strength and patience and love and hope."—Selected.

The Chemistry of Cleanliness.

Nature publishes an article that proves the virtue of cleanliness to be more than æsthetic. The sweat glands perform the important function of throwing off the moisture produced during the combustion of waste tissue by the oxygen of the blood, and secrete twenty-three ounces of perspiration in twenty-four hours. The conversion of perspiration into vapor renders latent a great amount of heat and keeps the body cool. Water 120 degrees is almost unbearable; but heat in an oven to the extent of 325 degrees may be borne for a time. In the twenty-three ounces of perspiration secreted daily, there is about one onnce of animal matter. This is left behind on evaporation. Sebaceous glands also secrete oily and resinous substances. This, mixing with solid matter and dirt, forms a compound which tends to clog pores of the skin. The removal of this compound is largely the source of the feeling of refreshment and bien aise following a vigorous morning bath.

OBITUARIES.

NIMOCKS—Dr. F. B. NIMOCKS, son of W. S. and Caroline Nimocks, was born in Decatur, Miss., on April 19, 1850, and grew to manhood in the town of his birth. He joined the Congregational Methodist Church in 1866, while he was attending school at Cooper Institute, in Lauderdale county, Miss. On April 19, 1871, he was very happily married to Miss Fannie Hall Hestun, daughter of Rev. J. F. N. Hallestue, a minister of the Congregational Methodist Church. As a result of this marriage there were seven children committed to their care and training as a sacred trust. He lost his wife from consumption in the town of Lawrence on Dec. 14, 1883, where he resided about fifteen years previous to his death. Two of his children died in infancy, and in the Fall of 1895 he consigned to the tomb a son, a very promising youth, whose death caused great grief in the Doctor's heart and home.

After the death of his wife three of his children lived with an uncle and a cousin in Fayetteville, N. C., the eldest daughter being educated at the noted Moravian School, located at Salem, N. C. He graduated in medicine in Mobile, Ala., in the Spring of 1875, having practiced at his home in and about Lawrence for two years previous to his graduation, not being financially able to continue his course without interruption. In the Winter of 1890-91 he took a post-graduate course in the New York Polyclinic. He practiced his profession in Lawrence for thirteen years. He was superintendent of a union Sunday-school for fifteen years—a place for which he was competent, being a religious and intelligent man, a student of the Bible.

Although at his father's death he had a very good foundation upon which to build in the commercial world, misfortune overcame him, and his life was by no means an easy one. It was some years before he could decide upon the practice of medicine, in the meantime, however, reading a good deal in medical works. He tried farming, but could not adapt himself. His forte for a time seemed to be teaching, and he was well qualified for such a position; but he could not be satisfied with this profession.

During these years of adjustment no one was acquainted with his hardships but those of his most intimate and life-long friends. Truly, if God has anything to do with ordaining men to what might be termed secular professions, it was done in the case of Dr. Nimocks, for until he began to practice his life was a failure. He was a student of the highest order, giving all his time not used in visiting the sick to the prosecution of his favored employ. His standing, both in Mobile and New York, was of first rank. He was competent to stand in the same relation in any of our larger towns or cities, but he chose rather to spend his life in ministering to those who had aided him in a time when he was in need of friends. He was the friend of the people. After reading "A Doctor of the Old School," by Ian Maclaren, I said to my wife, "This is a true picture of Dr. Nimocks." A more sympathetic or tender physician never entered the sick-room than was he. With all this he was steady and firm in the treatment of his patients. He had a very lucrative practice, though extending over a large section of the country.

About eighteen months ago he began to suffer with rheumatism, which interfered very much with his practice, finally having to visit Hot Springs, Ark., hoping to find relief. After spending some time there he said that he was not getting any better, and returned home. This was just one year ago. In the Summer of 1896 he gave down completely; not able to do any work. Tuberculosis of the brain and joints set on, and for a time he had no control of his mind. In November of 1896 I visited him, when his mind was clear, and we talked of his suffering, of which he said, if it was the Lord's will for him to so suffer, he would patiently bear it. His faith in God was clear and strong, and his hope of heaven was radiant. This was the last time I saw him, but his testimony was an inspiration to me. A good and true man has gone out from us, but I take up his abode with the hosts of God in glory everlasting.

He passed beyond the bounds of time on the twenty-eighth of November, 1896, the immediate cause of his death being complete paralysis. Those who remain this side to mourn his decease are two daughters and two sons, whose home is at Lawrence, and two brothers of Fayetteville, N. C., one of whom is a prominent member of the M. E. Church, South, both of whom are successful merchants. His children are members of the Presbyterian Church. With the above, hosts of friends would shed a tear over the tomb where he rests.

What a triumph is the Christian's death! This, indeed, was his. We shall see him again.

EASTERLING—Mrs. ELLA J. EASTERLING, wife of R. Q. Easterling (now of Bogue Chitto, formerly of Crystal Springs, Miss.) and daughter of Willis and Merry Barnes, was born Oct. 5, 1850; joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1864, and died in Bogue Chitto, Feb. 1, 1897.

Within this brief statement of dates lies a life of nearly forty-seven years. The writer of these lines, when speaking at her funeral, said: "I know of no words of Scripture more appropriate on this occasion than our Lord's words, spoken of a consecrated woman in his day, 'She hath done what she could.'"

Mrs. Easterling was a woman of large natural gifts. Nature had dealt liberally with her. Having large natural gifts, she had large capacity for doing. She not only had large natural gifts, but she had large acquired capacity to do whatever her hands found to do. She was a woman of not only large intellectual capacity, but she was richly endowed with unusual natural moral force. She was a cultivated woman. Her intellect had been educated, her mind well stored with useful knowledge; her moral nature, "born again," grew with her intellectual development. She was a woman of purposes. She was firm and fixed in her purposes. While kind, self-sacrificing toward others, in her principles she was unalterable. She was a woman of unusual perseverance. She never wavered. Always at her post of duty, she did much. She was true; true in every relation of life. As a daughter, unfailing and constant in her affection; as a sister, devoted and considerate. As a wife and mother, she shone with peculiar luster. In these she excelled, so peculiar, so thoughtful was she of everyone. Thus we see she was a strong character. Such a life was successful.

Her pastor, in a letter concerning her last illness and death, used these words: "I don't think I ever witnessed such triumphant faith and complete submission and resignation as she evinced in the face of death. Really it was not death to her, but translation." "Her end was peace, and a glorious immortality her reward."

She leaves a tender, devoted husband and one son and daughter to linger on the storm-swept shores of time. They mourn, but not without hope. They know she lived faithful, died triumphant, and has heard the Master say: "Well done!" "She hath done what she could."

May the All-wise Father comfort the bereaved ones! is the sincere prayer of their friend and brother, R. D. NORSWORTHY.

Jackson, Miss.

CARROLL—Mrs. LILLIE CARROLL (nee Felps) was born in East Feliciana, La., May 25, 1866; joined the M. E. Church, South, early in life, and lived a most beautiful Christian life until death, which occurred at her home in Livingston, La., Feb. 1, 1897.

About nine years ago she was married to Mr. Samuel Carroll. They lived happily together until God said: "Lilly, I need thee in heaven; thou art too pure to remain longer on earth." Like a beautiful lily her pure life sprang up and budded on earth to bloom in the eternal garden of God. The loving husband and mother, and other members of her family, and physician and many friends, did all in their power to alleviate her suffering and stay her life; but God had willed it otherwise. She bore her suffering with Christian fortitude that was amazing, and fell asleep in Jesus to awake again at the portals of the celestial city, where there is a crown of righteousness reserved for her, and not only for her but for all who diligently seek the Lord. Amid all her suffering the blessed promises of the Savior were precious to her soul. She repeated time and again, "There is rest for the weary." She called to her husband to put her arms around his neck, she could not see, and he would soon have no wife. Her arms being placed around his neck, she exclaimed, "I see papa" (her papa has been dead about two years). It was so surprising to those who were present that the question was asked, "Lilly, do you really see your papa?" She answered, "Certainly I see papa." She asked who was present, she could not see; but she wanted to know their names. The names were all given one by one. She then said she wanted us all to be good; that we, too, must die. We earnestly believe God sent her to us for an example that we might see in her what is possible for a Christian to be. Her bereaved husband has lost a loving and tender companion; her mother a most dutiful and sacrificing and devoted daughter; her brothers and sister a kind and loving sister. May He who says, "I will not leave you comfortless," help us to bow in submission to his divine will in this dark hour!

Farewell, friend; thou art resting
In the Shepherd's peaceful fold;
By God's grace we shall meet you
When we cross death's river cold.

If I am asked what is the remedy for the deeper sorrows of the human heart—what a man should chiefly look to in his progress through life as the power that is to sustain him under trials and enable him manfully to confront his afflictions—I must point to something which in a well-known hymn is called "The old, old story," told of an old, old book, and taught with an old, old teaching, which is the greatest and best gift ever given to mankind.—W. E. Gladstone.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

To develop muscle, if that is what you're doing the washing for, perhaps the old way of washing with soap—rubbing the clothes up and down over a board—may be pretty good. It can't be healthy, though, to breathe that tainted, fetid steam, and you'd better take your exercise in ways that are pleasanter.

But if you're washing clothes to get them clean, and want to do this disagreeable work easily, quickly, and safely—do it with Pearline. And one of the strongest points about Pearline's washing is its saving—its economy. 496

A brief, but severe wind storm, accompanied by heavy rain, swept over Nashville, Tenn., on March 5. Many buildings were damaged and roofs blown off. The chief damage was McKendree Methodist Church, in the very center of the city. Its tall spire, rising above the church about 150 feet, was toppled over and broken off at the base. The loss to the church will be several thousand dollars. No fatalities resulted from the storm, though several people were slightly injured.

One of the most difficult and embarrassing problems which confronts the new federal administration is the matter of dealing with the Cuban situation. There is a strong element in Congress which favors the recognition of the belligerency of the Cubans, and some go even so far as to desire that this country should recognize the absolute independence of the island. There is no doubt that strong pressure will be promptly brought to bear on the new Executive to induce him to adopt a different line of policy from that adopted by ex-President Cleveland.

William McKinley and Garrett A. Hobart, President and Vice-President of the United States, took the oath of office on March 4. FOREIGN.

The answer of Greece to the identical notes of the powers was discussed at a meeting of the cabinet and approved by King George. It is reported that the reply is a refusal to recall the Greek fleet and troops from Crete on the ground that the recall would be a signal for pillage, incendiarism, and murder.

The agitation of the lovers of liberty in favor of Greece is spreading everywhere in Great Britain. In many dissenting chapels and in many churches of all creeds in London a notice was read urging the congregations to attend the demonstration in Hyde Park at 3 o'clock on Sunday. Though the weather was threatening, about 15,000 people were present. They consisted of all classes, although workingmen predominated. Six platforms had been erected for the accommodation of the speakers, and the structures in all cases displayed Greek flags.

Why is it that people use Salvation Oil? Answer: Because it is the best liniment.

Churning Done in Two Minutes.

I have tried the Lightning Churn you recently described in your paper, and it is certainly a wonder. I can churn in less than two minutes, and the butter is elegant, and you get considerable more butter than when you use a common churn. I took the agency for the churn here, and every butter maker that sees it buys one. I have sold three dozen, and they give the best of satisfaction. I KNOW I can sell 100 in this township, as they churn so quickly, make so much more butter than common churns, and are so cheap. Some one in every township can make $200 or $300 selling these churns. By writing to W. H. Baird & Co., Dep't A 5, Sta. A, Pittsburg, Pa., you can get circulars and full information, so you can make big money right at home. I have made $50 in the past two weeks, and never sold anything before in my life. A FARMER.

OVER THE RIVER.

Over the river they beckon to me,
Loved ones who've crossed to the farther side;
The gleam of their snowy robes I see,
But their voices are lost in the dashing tide.
And I sit and think, when the sunset's gold
Is flushing river and hill and shore,
I shall one day stand by the water cold,
And list for the sound of the boatman's oar;
I shall watch for a gleam of the glistening sail,
I shall hear the boat as it gains the strand,
I shall pass from sight with the boatman pale,
To the better shore of the spirit land.
I shall know the loved who have gone before,
And joyfully sweet will the meeting be,
When over the river, the peaceful river,
The angel of death shall carry me.

Correspondence.

A Cry of Distress.

There was a mass meeting of the citizens of Jackson parish in Vernon yesterday, and the following resolutions unanimously passed:

Be it resolved, By the citizens of Jackson parish in mass meeting assembled in the town of Vernon, that we respectfully ask His Excellency, Murphy J. Foster, Governor of the State of Louisiana, to appropriate the sum of $250,000 to be used for the relief of the drouth sufferers, as there are thousands all over the land who can not possibly make a crop without pay and substantial aid from some source.

Be it further resolved, That we ask Chairman Wooten, of the Advisory Committee, to call his committee together at as early a date as possible for the purpose of devising ways and means by which our people may be fed.

(Signed) I. D. Hogan, representative; W. R. Carroll, chairman Relief Committee; Henry Lofling, chairman Committee, Ward 1; Dr. C. L. Culpepper, chairman committee, Ward 2; Stewart Powell, chairman committee, Ward 3; C. W. Allen, president Police Jury; J. L. Moore, soliciting agent.

People who have never visited our drouth-stricken country can have no idea of the extent of the misery and distress that is so widespread all over this country. I know it seems strange that so many to hear of such dire suffering among a people who produce the wealth of the world and feed the teeming millions of earth's inhabitants; yet it is nevertheless true, and if anyone doubts the truth of the assertion that our people will be forced to leave their homes or starve without further aid from some source, let such a person come into our country and make a house-to-house canvass, and if he does not find it as I state, then I will pay his expenses and pay him for his time, provided he will take his claims in stock and lands, as this is all I have to pay.

Mr. Carroll, chairman of the Parish Central Committee, told me yesterday he had only received about 3,000 bushels of free corn, and had only received 700 barrels of meal. Now, how far would this go toward feeding 1,100 families and 2,000 head of work stock? Our people have sold all their cattle to get money to buy this cheap corn, sacrificing their cattle, selling them from $2.50 to $5 a head, and investing this in corn. Mr. Carroll stated that some had deposited as low as twenty-five cents for corn, and their whole cry was for corn. And with all of this distressing condition our Governor's sympathy can not be touched. We have asked him time and again to open the doors and let our sister States come to our relief, but all to no effect. Mr. Carroll read a letter yesterday at the mass meeting from Mr. Urlah Millsaps, chairman of the State Committee, stating he had supplies in sight for only thirty days, and advised that this be used for the widows and orphans. I was passing Mrs. Nighbert's, an aged widow lady, yesterday, and I stopped to inquire her condition. She told me she had no one but her little grandson to do anything for her. She had been sick with la grippe, and had not received grain of corn nor a dust of meal, and was in a bad fix. We gave her money to buy some meal, as the free meal was out, and gave an order for grits and meat. Another widow lady, Mrs. Alice Savage, had received nothing. I bought her a barrel of meal. I have bought and given away eight barrels of meal, four barrels of flour, some rice, sugar and coffee. A part of the money used was that I received from P. H. Fontaine, president Union Epworth League, $13.25; Mrs. Emily I. Welsh, $2; Mrs. S. V. Campbell, $5; Mrs. M. E. McGee and daughter, $3; Rev. G. R. Ellis, $9.40. All of the above I have received from the readers of the ADVOCATE. I also received a note from St. Joseph, stating they had shipped a box of clothing to Mr. Carroll for our people, and was signed "Sisters," and "Readers of the ADVOCATE."

Thanks, sisters, brethren, and all who have come to our relief. May God bless those noble Christian people who have read and seem to realize "it is better to give than to receive!"

I heard scores of men say yesterday at the mass meeting that they had planted their gardens and had planted some early corn; but if they did not get some help immediately, they would have to leave their homes to keep their families from starving to death. All this because our Governor will not ask our sister States to help us. We are told that the Governor of Nebraska wrote to our Governor that he would send us help if our Governor would accept it. Mr. B. F. Thompson, one of the Purchasing Committee, stated that the Northern States proffered to send us all the corn we needed if our State would accept it. Mr. B. F. Thompson told them that he was not out on a begging mission, but proposed to pay for what they got.

Now, will the Governor please answer the people and tell them "why he will not come to their relief?" It may be humiliating to him to call for outside help. But how heart-rending to us to see our wives and our children starve to death on account of his neglect and seeming indifference!

It is stated that there have been several deaths on account of not having the proper food and attention; and the Kennedy affair grew out of the distressful condition of the country; and this is nothing to what will be done in the next six weeks if our people are not heard and responded to. And I give our Governor fair warning now. Every drop of blood spilt and every death caused by the effects of this drouth will be upon his head. And he will have to give an account before the bar of God for all this distress. He can not plead ignorance, because he has been informed of our condition, and the cries of starving women and children have filled his ears for months, and he will not hear.

We appeal again to the readers of the ADVOCATE for help, assuring them that our people will appreciate everything they will do for us.

J. L. MOORE.

Stovall, Jackson Parish, La., March 7, 1897.

[We leave out matter already in type to make room for the above, which came to hand just before our time to go to press. If it were needed, we would make an earnest appeal to our readers to aid in this good cause; but no words of ours are needed. The facts above stated speak more eloquently than any words at our command. We have shown our interest in the sympathy by forwarding a check. Let our readers do likewise according to ability.—EDITOR.]

Letter from Oregon.

MR. EDITOR: I have been neglectful both of my promise to "ye editor" and to many friends who urge on me to "write oftener."

Last year was a "long and lonesome" time for us. About the middle of November, 1895, I had to give up pastoral work on account of failing health. The Winter was spent in the sick-room. By Spring I thought I was well enough to endeavor to magnify mine office of Conference Secretary of Missions, so came to Southwestern Oregon to help in protracted meetings. Soon after my first attempt was stricken down again, from which I barely rallied in time to attend Conference. Conference seemed very little like Conference to us (Mrs. Futrell and I), as I had so little to do.

Our trip there and back was quite a romantic one. For nearly two days we ascended the river. Some places the passage would be so narrow as to allow only room for the hack; the river on one side often hundreds of feet below, and an inaccessible mountain on the other, perhaps a thousand feet above us. We passed through a grove of myrtle at one place which made some of us wish it were near a railroad, and we the owner. We would let the world see some of the wood which can receive such a beautiful polish; but it is likely to be many years before it can serve any purpose except to furnish the bees with such beautiful, almost white, honey, which, when once tasted, is never forgotten. Only one thing equals it, viz.: the vine maple. Wish some of your readers had some of this honey. If that of Palestine was so good, no wonder "milk and honey" was such a favored dish. But occasionally the scene and circumstances would change. Some one would call out, "What is that?" and we would find that a deer, a bear, or some animal, had been disturbed by our coming; but none of us were huntsmen enough to ever get a successful shot, so we were almost sorry we had a gun, for then we could have put in wonderfully large "ifs" of what we might have done.

We were much gratified to find that this "Delta" on the coast was so much more desirable a part of the country, so far as production is concerned, than "The Valley," as the country on Willamette river is called. I am almost afraid to tell you what can be produced here. Sugar beets and carrots run anywhere from twenty to sixty, and even eighty tons per acre. Each is a fine cow feed; hence people carry their milk to the creamery for two cents per pound, and still it brings to this one community the snug little sum of $14,000 per month. The Irish potato will grow to seven pounds. Our resource of lumber seems inexhaustible, and if the Nicaragua Canal is ever finished, we hope for this to be a great source of income for us. Our hills seem to be inexhaustibly full of coal, and as this is generally scarce in the West, this will help us very much. But we must be "Westerners," you know; so, when you get a little further up the Coast Range, we have gold, gold, both placer and quartz—mostly the latter, though. Our cattle and sheep industry is quite a business, too; so we have a woolen mill at Banden, our seaport town, twenty-five miles down the river, which, by the way, is a fine Summer resort, where people come by the thousand. Most of them take their own outfit, and camp in tents, making it much cheaper.

What is our church doing? Well, Bro. Smith, our pastor, has received between thirty and forty members since Conference.

We have a "rara avis" in the way of a novelty to catch the unwary. A man came here last Fall, and has been preaching that we are the "fallen angels;" that we came from heaven; therefore, Christ has come to take us back to our home. He has actually organized a church. He is its founder—"The Redeemed Church of Israel"—and nearly forty deluded souls have joined him. Do you wonder it is difficult to work when such vagaries abound? And yet some people think this is not missionary territory. True mission work, house-to-house visitation, is as badly needed here as in China or Japan, and those coming here should expect to do this. This is the fault I have to find with the work of all the preachers here. They do not visit enough; consequently, there are many people, often within a stone's throw of the church, who never attend, and into whose homes a preacher never enters. This may be all right, but I do not so understand our commission nor our ordination vows.

"What about my school?" It is more than double what it was last year, and have the Spring term before us yet. We lack just what the church lacks—a house-to-house visitation. My long sickness last Summer prevented me making a canvass. I need teachers who are so consecrated to the work as to be willing to do such as this just as a pastor would. If we succeed as a church here, we must help to educate this people. If we succeed in school work, we must have teachers who can throw themselves into or among the people—or as the St. Louis man says: "Push; push your business."

We are in the midst of the worst money stringency this country has ever had. "Revival of business" has not reached us. This, of course, hurts the school very badly; consequently we have very few boarders. Then our boarding arrangements are very unsatisfactory, being so far from the school. I am in such great need of a partner. If I can secure one, the people will take stock with us, and by another session our work can all be together.

"Gilderoy's" letter from Minter City gave us a spell of home-sickness, for four of the most delightful years of our lives were spent there. About three hundred came into the churches around there during this pastorate. If returning strength permits us to re-enter the pastorate, we know of no place we would prefer to go. Our only living child, Mary Lee, was born there. Tell our friends she is now far on the fourth grade, is doing well in music, and will soon be a pretty good typewriter. Much love to all our old friends.

Truly yours, J. L. FUTRELL.

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

The District Epworth League Conference at Macon was a success. We need more of such meetings in the interest of our young people. Let us have them in every district.

Coldwater Sunday-school takes the lead in ordering libraries. Three have recently been sent to it at a cost of $43. But we have reason to expect such as this with a live pastor and a wide-awake superintendent as they have in the persons of Bros. Duncan and Callicott. May the Lord of the harvest raise up many more such! Who will be the next to send a similar order? Let pastors and superintendents procure our new Sunday-school catalogue and examine it.

Our new song book, "The Young People's Hymnal," is capital. It is the song book needed for our children and young people. Being published by authority of the church, and altogether meritorious and economical in price, it should be used in preference to any other of the same class in all of our Sunday-schools, Epworth League meetings, etc.

Bro. Bowen, in the "Methodist Headlight," says: "We look to the Sunday-schools in the country to lead us in saving the towns and cities. The best Christians that we have met in cities tell us that they received their first religious impressions 'in the country home and Sunday-school.' It is impossible to raise the nation and city above the people in the country."

Let pastors, parents, superintendents and teachers in the country note this testimony from one who knows what he states, and study their responsibilities for the rising generation.

The colporter has, during the last three weeks, visited eleven churches and communities, and done finely well in his line of work. Where he has had the interested co-operation of the pastors success has been gratifying. Our colportage work is thriving. More has been accomplished this season than during the corresponding period of any former year. Our church papers are growing in favor, especially the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. There is a liberal demand for Bibles, Disciplines, Sunday school helps and libraries, Epworth League literature, etc. Preachers are procuring helpful books, such as Bible commentaries, Trench's works, and Meyer's "Bible Heroes." Not only the young preachers are doing so, but some of the old ones are buying new books and preparing new sermons, or making the old ones over.

We are much gratified at the signs of improvement on many lines in our Conference. We thank God and take courage. Let us all work together as fellow-laborers, and we will have a rich harvest. G. W. BACHMAN.

Epworth League Echoes.

BY REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD,
President Mississippi State Conference of Epworth Leagues.

District Epworth League Conferences are now in order.

Presiding Elder Morehead, of the Grenada district, has his programme ready to send out.

A card received from a preacher some distance from the railroad states that he has just organized a League with thirty members.

The League can be made a success in the country. On the Crawford circuit, North Mississippi Conference, there is a League at every church on the charge.

Rev. Amos Kendall, of the North Mississippi Conference, was born eight miles from Epworth, Lincolnshire, England. He will preach during the State Conference at Water Valley.

We hope every Methodist preacher in the State will reply promptly to the circulars sent out by Assistant Secretary W. N. DeLoach.

Each of our church schools in Mississippi will be well represented at the coming Conference. They will occupy a prominent place upon the programme.

Joe Ramsey, of Tennessee, promises to come. Have you ever heard him? If not, you had better be on hand. It will be worth the trip to hear Joe.

Rev. W. J. Walling, of Brazil, will be present at the coming Conference at Water Valley, and will show that the Epworth League is to be a mighty factor in hastening the coming kingdom.

We recently visited a pastor who has been preaching the gospel for nearly fifty years. He informed us that he never missed a meeting of the League unless providentially hindered.

Two handsome cases well filled with good books are witnesses to the fact that the West Point Leaguers are interested in the Literary Department.

The young people everywhere are eager to read. Let us see to it that they read the kind of literature that will build character after the divine plan.

We were impressed with the brother's letter from Brierfield, Ala., in last issue of the ADVOCATE. May God speed the day when in this so-called Christian country the Sabbath shall be properly observed!

The Epworth League stands for a revival of apostolic zeal and fervor. Let every Leaguer pray that, as preachers and people, we may be filled with the Holy Ghost.

The most interesting and attractive Minutes we have yet heard were those read by the fair young secretary of the Aberdeen League on a certain Sunday afternoon not long since. A good secretary will help to make all the meetings of the League a success.

Letters are being received from all parts of the field inquiring about the work of the League. We are glad to answer any questions, and give any information, or render any assistance, as far as our ability goes.

Our friend and brother, Percy N. Simmons, of Sardis, writes: "Some of our younger set have requested my wife and myself to organize a Junior League. Please send me Junior Constitution, etc. Want to organize next Sunday." Glad to hear from Sardis again. The League work is prospering there. We shall not soon forget the delightful Sabbath recently spent in that town with a biblical name.

Water Valley, Miss., March 12, 1897.

Some Words along the Way.

Last Summer, Bishop Keener gave us all a mighty uplift by a deeply spiritual article of his published in the ADVOCATE. Then Dr. Black wrote of "Divine Love" in a way that thrilled loving hearts. And now Dr. Black has written an editorial on "Restored Friendships" that has done its work so well as to have brought forth that fine letter of "Jonathan." We thank you for these heart songs, and feel that your readers have been blessed by them. So vividly did "Jonathan" write that I caught the spirit of his joy and found myself smiling with pleasure as I finished the article that told of his friend's complete restoration to him. Distinctly personal articles, like "Jonathan's," are sometimes productive of much good.

Apropos of this remark, let me write you something of Meridian life. It is indeed a pleasure to be associated again with these dear people, and to wander around in the various places I used to frequent. Going into the circulating library, I was so pleased to see again the books that I read when living here before, and, too, it has interested me to read them again, and note the difference in the impressions they made on me then and now.

It is beautiful to see the way these people treat dear Bro. Woodward. So tenderly loving are they to him that I am beginning to think that it is not such a bad thing after all not to be able to take an appointment. Ministers have always spoken in such sorrowful tones of the possible time when they would be too feeble to take an appointment that it has made my heart ache. But Bro. Woodward has so endeared himself to this church during his three years' pastorate that, now the fourth year has come and he is no longer able to preach to them, they take delight in showing him the most delicate as well as the most substantial attentions. We feel that he and his dear wife, who have been sweethearts all through the married years, are a practical illustration of the beauty and strength that characters get when perfectly blended.

There are so many persons in Meridian who love to talk about Christ, and so many "revivals" at the different churches, that it is easier to live close to God than where persons are cold and special seasons of worship rare.

The pastors of the different churches are doing faithful work. Our pastor at Central, Bro. Featherston, helps us very much by his scholarly and spiritual ministrations. Our presiding elder goes to most of his appointments in his buggy. As he rides along he makes the woods vocal with the songs of Zion, and returns to us with a special blessing from his communion with nature and nature's God.

Central Church is in the midst of a revival now, from which we hope much good may come. There is some difference in opinion among us as to how the great peace comes, but our hearts are filled with gratitude to Him who gives the "peace which passeth all understanding." Pray for us, that in our differences about sanctification and the second blessing we may all remember that we are our Father's children journeying to his home. MARTHA ANDREWS.

WAITING.

BY E. M. DAVIS-GRANT.

I'm waiting, waiting, waiting,
For the Lord to hear my cry;
I have cast my burden wholly
At his feet; there let it lie.
I will not chafe and worry,
I will believe his Word;
I'll work and do my duty,
For I know my prayer is heard.

When he answers I will tell thee,
So that thou canst trust him, too.
He has heard and answered ever,
What he whispers I will do.
It may be long in coming,
But he knoweth what I need,
And he never forgets, no, never!
He will, he will give heed.

I could never, never trust him
If he did not give me grace.
I never could believe him,
I could never see his face,
If my faith was not all founded
On the grace that set me free.
Savior, Father, Holy Spirit,
I trust trust, trust in thee.

There Should Be "Some Things Some One Else Don't Like."

"Levick Pearce before him—Bishop Keener—lived that way, and was effective at ninety-four. Effective at ninety-four! Impossible! Very possible. If a man is able to walk and think and speak, he is effective; and we should quit voting him ineffective. That's murder. It will make him ineffective if he believes the vote. Our old men ought to be employed by the church until their ministry ends in its reward at the gate of heaven. If you say the church, and not men, must be considered, I grant the proposition, but deny the conclusion."—Walker Lewis, D. D., in the Methodist Review.

"That's murder;" yes, Doctor, of a high order. If he does not believe "the vote," and holds himself up to the demands of a living ministry in his efforts to discharge its heaven-imposed obligations, thereby holding "out faithful unto the end," it will be believed, and then his inefficiency will be a fact in the faith of others and in this relation beyond his control; and then "the vote" relegates him into relations where his inefficiency becomes a practical necessity, unless God should miraculously interpose to prevent it. Than this there can be no sadder thing for God's minister.

"We are prone to attach great importance to 'gray hairs.' I have no more respect for 'gray hairs' than for hairs of any other color, and I don't know where we get the idea that gray hairs lend respectability to that upon which it grows, unless it was from the fact that Sampson's seven locks were the seat of his great strength. But the idea is a very erroneous one, regardless of its orgin. I always look to see what the hair is growing on, because I believe I have seen more gray hair on mules than anywhere else."—C. M. P., NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

"Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honer the face of the old man, and fear God: I am the Lord." (God in Lev xix, 32.) "The glory of young men is their strength: and the beauty of old age is the gray head." (Solomon in Prov. xx, 29.) "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness." (Solomon in Prov. xvi, 31.) In this last verse special "importance is attached to gray hairs;" but all "gray hairs" are to be respected if God, in revelation, is authority. But, then, "C. M. P." says that "the idea that gray hairs lend respectability is an erroneous one, regardless of its origin." If "C. M. P.'s" respect for "gray hairs" depends upon their endersement of such departures from God's Word as this in his efforts at progress, then they are fortunate in that their devotion to God has incurred his disrespect. And if this is the nature of his improvement, and that robs gray hairs of his respect, though they "are found in the way of righteousness," then there should be "some things" some one else "don't like." There are two dislikes that ought to be considered in making out this case: one of which is the dislike of that self-sacrifice that Christ demands of everyone in every age, and under all circumstances, in order to become his discipline. This dislike pervades man's fallen nature, and is the strongest, and the most persistent and delusive, and the most controlling of all the dislikes known to man. In this dislike "the church," which is the pillow and ground of the truth, has its most formidable enemy to be found within the fallen heart of man. Through it formality and all innovations upon her unearthly life that renders her mission to save man from the inveiglements of fallen self come to her. The "dark age" that settled with Egyptian density upon the earth was the result of the prevalence of this dislike in the church. It was this dislike that made Wesley a necessity in the church, and that closed her doors against him; that forced him to convert Britain's commens into a temple for God's service, and that placed his "feet," that were made "beautiful" by his self-sacrificing service of salvation, upon his father's tomb for a pulpit. It is this dislike that says to the seers, "See not," and to the prophets: "Prophesy not unto us right things; speak unto us smooth things;" prophesy deceits; pander to the world and 'ketch' it in the church by 'guile' for Christ. 'Get you out of the way' of self-sacrifice; turn aside out of the path—old path—of life; cause the Holy One of Israel to cease from before us in his exactions, that allow of no liberty for carnal self, that immolates it." And we would be safe in saying that it is this dislike that has let the world in upon the lives of the three thousand churches that Moody writes about, that has made their barrenness of regenerate results possible in the end of the nineteenth century of the Christian era. But for this dislike the "500" disreputable church entertainments collected by Bayard Hale, D. D., and which he says "is the merest fraction of the whole number given during the year," in which theatrical plays, followed with the dance, furnished the bill of entertainment, and to this were added the "Feet Social" and "Ankle Auction," acted by young ladies, that are too disgraceful to admit of description, would not have been possible in the "church of the living God." Yes, alas! this dislike keeps the world from Christ.

The other dislike that we are to consider is that which seeks to secure the kingdom of Christ, which is not of this world, from all worldlings. It is the dislike of that "friendship of the world that is enmity with God," in which carnal self has his association and seeks his life. This dislike is born of God's redeeming grace, and is sustained by his presence. It has its "conversation in heaven," from whence we expect the Lord Jesus to establish his kingdom where it "lays up its treasures." It "stands in the ways," that it may "see, and asks for the old," not new, "paths, where is the good way" of redeemed life, "and walks therein." In this dislike, that "holiness without" which "no man shall see the Lord" in a completed redemption, is alone possible to man. All progress in the divine life in the church has its roots in this regenerate dislike. Progress that ignores this dislike, and thereby brings the church into doubtful relations with the world, is where her danger has ever been, and where it is to-day, when progress is the watch-word. And if "hairs" that have grown "gray" in her service, "avoiding the very appearance of evil," are ignored in her councils in defining the true relation of the church and the world, and discarded in their labor to get and keep her in this relation, the more is the danger. It was Rehobeam's disrespect for "gray hairs" and their counsel that rent Israel in twain, and that ultimately sent ten tribes thereof into exile seven hundred and twenty-one years before Christ, and which are still lost to history. "But he forsook the counsel of the old men, which they had given him, and consulted with the young men that were grown up with him." (I. Kings xii, 8.) If the "gray hairs" of old Simeon and old Anna had been respected by Judah, and their lives and counsels had prevailed, the second exile of the remaining two tribes of Israel would not have occurred, for then Christ would have been "received" by them, and all would have been "given power to become the sons of God, even to them that believed on his name." For these servants of God that were of "great age" "spake of him" when he was a child to "all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem."

Bishop Galloway, in addressing a class for deacon's orders, said: "We may fall from the grace of perfect love. For fear of being called lunatics, we lower the standard and live in a low plane where the shadows and miasma are felt." He had read Tyerman's "Life of Fletcher" three times, and advises all the preachers to read and re-read this remarkable biography of a man of such extraordinary consecration and spiritual power.—Pacific Advocate.

If those seeking progress in the church will follow the Bishop's direction and example, and thereby imbibe the spirit of "this man of extraordinary consecration and spiritual power," and others of like attainments, the line of demarkation between the church and the world will be so clear that her light for the word, like "a candle put upon a candlestick, which giveth light to all that are in the house," will be seen by all that are in the world; and flippant, irreverent thrusts at "gray hairs" in her service would be unknown in her holy communion. True progress is in the thought and respect of Dr. Lewis for "gray hairs," and not in "C. M. P."

A Good Woman Dead.

Mrs. Mary S. Wall died in Clinton, La., Feb. 28, 1897, at the age of eighty-one years. She leaves forty-four descendants. Her death is mourned by a large number of people, for she was known in many places and well beloved. Her kindred by blood and consanguinity are to be found in almost every State of the Union. She was the daughter of William Winans and Martha Dubose. Mr. Winans came to Mississippi from Pennsylvania in the closing years of the last century. He was a Methodist minister, and established the first church of that denomination in New Orleans, preaching here for several years before and after Jackson's battle. Until his death, which occurred just before the late war, he was one of the recognized religious leaders of the country. His special field was Louisiana and Mississippi. He was, physically, of magnificent presence, and an orator of persuasive power. His renown still lingers in the church. His portrait in oil hangs on the walls of Vanderbilt University. He knew most of the important men of his day, and was particularly intimate with William Henry Harrison, having been with him in the closing scenes of his triumph over Tecumseh.

His wife, Martha Dubose, was of French Huguenot steck, and the daughter of Captain Daniel Dubose, who served with Marion. They were married in Charleston, S. C. On this side Mrs. Wall's collateral kindred are innumerable, including the Richardsons (Frank L.) of this city and the Averys of New Iberia.

Mr. and Mrs. Winans had four children, viz.: the subject of the present sketch (Mrs. Wall), Mrs. Margaret Dickson (also dead), Mrs. Anna E. Dickson, of Contrevillo, Miss., and Wesley Winans, who was killed at Chickamauga, colonel of a regiment which he raised in North Louisiana at the outbreak of the war.

Mrs. Wall was born Aug. 1, 1816. She was married in 1831 to Isaac Wall, in Wilkinson county, Miss. He was the architect who designed Centonary College at Jackson, La., and many other public buildings in that neighborhood still in existence. He subsequently entered the ministry of the Methodist Church, and died in 1872. Their family was very large. The first child, Sarah C. Wall, married William F. Kernan in Clinton, La., and died in 1881. Mr. Kernan is a lawyer of great distinction; was for several years district judge of the Sixteenth Judicial District, composed of the parishes of East Feliciana and St. Helena, and was subsequently made judge of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. He is now practicing his profession in Clinton, and is, perhaps, its best beloved citizen. Their children are: Mr. Thomas J. Kernan, of Baton Rouge, whose wife is sistor of Mrs. Marion Baker, of this city; Mrs. Mary K. Dart, wife of Henry P. Dart, of New Orleans; Mr. Fergus Kernan and Benjamin Wall Kernan (of Dart & Kernan), of New Orleans; Mrs. Sallie D. Irwin, wife of Dr. E. L. Irwin, of Clinton, La., and Mrs. Dimple Joffrion, wife of Mr. J. W. Joffrion, of Marksville, La.

Mrs. Wall's second child, William W. Wall, married Senator Don Caffrey's sister. He died from typhoid fever contracted in the Confederate service. His daughter is the wife of Henry Palfrey, of Franklin, La.

Ira Bowman Wall, her third child, served with distinction the full four years of the war, and came out a lieutenant. He lives in Clinton, one of his sons being Mr. William Winans Wall, of this city.

Her fourth child, Benjamin Drake Wall, was in the Crescent Regiment, and was killed at the battle of Mansfield. He was like many of his fellows of that era just out of boyhood, and his death was his mother's most sacred grief.

Her fifth child, Mr. Wesley Wall, also a mere boy, was captured in his first battle, and spent nearly four years in Northern prisons, being paroled among the last when peace was declared. He lives at Cheneyville, La.

Her sixth child, Martha Wall, married Douglas Embree, of Woodville, Miss. (now dead). She lives in Florida.

Her seventh child, Col. I. D. Wall, is district attorney of East and West Feliciana parishes.

Her eighth child, Mr. Francis R. Wall, entered the navy from Annapolis in 1879. He was well known here, having had charge of the Hydrographic Bureau for four years. He resigned from the navy some years ago, and is now on the editorial staff of the Oregonian at Portland, Oregon. He married a daughter of Mrs. Herrick, of the Century Magazine staff, and granddaughter of Dr. Bledsoe, the famous Southern scholar and divine.

Her first grandchild was Thomas J. Kernan, of Baton Rouge, her first great-grandchild being Henry P. Dart, Jr., of New Orleans.

It will be seen that Mrs. Wall lost a brother and two sons in the war, and had four sons in the field first and last. With all this, when the Federal forces invaded the Feliciana country she was the first to volunteer to help their wounded soldiery. One poor fellow whom she nursed back to life never in all the subsequent years allowed her to forget it.

The country from Natchez to Clinton was settled by a powerful and dominant race, but they were still pioneers when Mrs. Wall was born.

She often told how they lived in the young country of her girlhood. All travel was by horseback; light came from the flint and lint; coal oil was not known; cooking was in open fire-places, and most of the locks to houses were wooden. Her father had a negro very skillful in making them. Her section, however, was in advance of its time, educationally. There was even in those days a school of prominence at Washington, Miss., then capital of Mississippi Territory. Mrs. Thayer was principal, and afterwards Dr. Benjamin Drake, a name still honored in Methodist circles. It was called the Elizabeth Academy. The town of Washington, which was then an important place, lies about six miles southeast of Natchez, but is to-day almost forgotten.

For many years she accompanied her father on his visits to church conventions and conferences, and his house was the stopping-place of every man worth seeing who came to Mississippi on any errand. She met and knew more people of her religious persuasion than, perhaps, any other woman of the time. Her memory was remarkable and served her to the last. She never willingly gave up a friend, and had no enemies. Her descendants she visited regularly, though they were scattered over many States, and her coming was always a joy to them.

She taxed her means and her strength to the utmost to do good to her fellows. While she loved her church and its connections, her sympathy was catholic, and she literally knew no sect or creed in time of want or trouble. She loved and trusted in the Bible, which was the corner-stone of her faith, and could quote word and chapter of the text without difficulty.

She was a literate, studious woman, shrewd in observation, winsome in disposition and kindly to all comers, and willing always to find some good in everyone.

She had strong faith in her race; and, though always frail of body, yet she sprang from a strong race, and was the mother of one.

From a "Preacher's Wife."

And "C. E. C." thinks that I ought to have written my predecessor a personal letter and told her how to keep a house clean. I honestly believe that every preacher's wife has sense enough to know how to tidy up a house. I merely wanted to explain that some of them (I never said all) hadn't the will nor energy to apply the "elbow grease." I am not in the habit of giving personal rebuffs. I wouldn't think of wounding a person's feeling by coming right out and saying, "Sister So-and-So, thou art the woman." I wish I dared to tell what I found in the parsonage last year. I guess "C. E. C." would think that a very vigorous letter was necessary. I wrote that former article hoping some good might result from it, not because I desired to vent my spleen. "Champion Preachers' Wives" has the wrong woman in view. I have been "behind the scenes" close on to eleven years, and know something about the difficulties of packing and moving; but never yet have I been guilty of leaving a house looking like a tornado had just passed through it.

And now let me hit some of the brethren a lick, and I'll lay my quill aside and give this effusion time to "soak in." We had been in our new home about ten days when one of the brethren who was on the move drove up and stayed over Sabbath with us. During one of our conversations he remarked that "a preacher who would leave a place in such a condition as this one is in just simply ought not to belong to the Conference." To be sure, I most heartily agreed with him.

To Auxiliary Officers.

Just now each auxiliary in our North Mississippi Conference Missionary Society is selecting officers for the coming year, and as you enter upon your duties we would impress upon you that the success or failure of this year's work rests largely with you. In every department of work in this life success is commensurate with the devotion and skill of the leader, and surely nowhere is strong, wise leadership more necessary than in the cause for which we labor. Count it, then, no light thing that you are elected to an office in your auxiliary, for therewith you assume tremendous responsibilities.

Some may, and doubtless do, feel themselves utterly unworthy and incompetent to fill these positions to which they have been elected, and are ready to cry out with the apostle, "Who is sufficient for these things?" Then remember, dear sisters, the immutable promises of our God. This is his work, and to him we must look for strength and wisdom. We speak sorrowfully of our weakness, whereas we should rejoice that herein God may show forth his great strength, for when we are weak then may we be strong in the Lord. The things needful for you are not great gifts, as you may suppose, but a fervent love and a strong resolution. This love comprehends much—your personal love for God, your ardent desire for the advancement of his cause, and all those spiritual graces so richly promised to the children of God. This spiritual preparation for the work that we have summed up in the one word "love" is not for a chosen few, but for everyone who will surrender her life to the Master to be used by and for him, and will live in daily communion with him. This strong resolution is necessary that you may press forward over all obstacles, and be faithful in all those duties resting upon you as an officer. This resolution, continually exercised, will prevent your missing a meeting when it was possible to go; will make you collect dues, write minutes, and send reports at proper times.

I have in mind now one little woman, past the meridian of life, naturally shrinking and laboring under great physical disadvantages, who carries on by her own strong resolution much of the work of an auxiliary of eighty members.

As leaders, we must be continually inspired by the greatness of our cause to know no discouragement, no failure. Let us look upon our offices from two standpoints. First, your society can never rise in zeal and enthusiasm above you. It is a very solemn thought that my failure to do or be all that is required of me may be the means of retarding the work of a dozen or more women. Again, your intense love and strong resolution will fire the hearts of the individual members of your auxiliary and cause all to do more and better work for Jesus. Great generals make brave soldiers, and devoted, resolute officers will make a live, working auxiliary. Whatever your office, enter upon it as a solemn duty from God, looking to him for all necessary equipment for the work; then be diligent, punctual and untiring, and God will crown your labors with abundant success.

Work of the Drink Demon.

Judge Logue, of Cleveland, delivered an address before the Ministers' Union in that city a short time ago in which he stated that during the four years of his experience as judge of the Police Court forty thousand cases had been presented to him, and that four-fifths of all those cases was the result of intoxication. An appalling record!

Mr. Gladstone has issued an article on the observance of Sunday, in which he argues that with a true Christian it is not "how much of the Lord's Day shall we give to his service, but rather how little shall we withhold?" Mr. Gladstone, who is personally a strict observer of Sunday, recently attributed his long life to the fact that he invariably kept Sunday apart from his ordinary life, and especially from his political life.

Keep your heart's window always open toward heaven. Let the blessed light of Jesus' countenance shine in. It will turn tears to rainbows. This last receipt is the best one. It is all very well to say, "Do right, and you'll be happy;" but there is something more than that needed. We must let the spring of our lives be in Christ, letting his Spirit guide us in all we do.—Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

The world proposes rest by the removal of a burden. The Redeemer gives rest by giving us the spirit and power to bear the burden. Christ does not promise a rest of inaction, nor that the trials of life shall be removed. The curse on this world is labor, but to him who labors earnestly and truly, it turns to blessedness.—F. W. Robertson.

It is not by regretting what is irreparable that true work is to be done, but by making the best of what we are. It is not by complaining that we have not the right tools, but by using well the tools we have.—F. W. Robertson.

Despending Christians win no battles. They are fitter for the hospital than the battlefield. God's heroes have been girded and inspired for heroic endeavor by this divine tonic of joy.—Dr. G. W. Brown.

Observe what direction your thoughts and feelings most readily take when you are alone, and you will then form a tolerably correct opinion of your real self.

To Whom it May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mnl-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of cores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,
Editor Christian Advocate.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. H. C. Morehead, P E., Water Valley, Miss., March 8, 1897: "I have just finished first round of quarterly meetings. There is very gratifying improvement over first round of last year in number of conversions and additions to church, prayer meetings and family altars, connectional collections and preachers' salaries. Our forces are well marshalled, and we are expecting still greater victory. In His name we go forward."

Rev. W. C. Harris, Friar's Point, Miss., March 5, 1897: "Three months of the Conference year have gone. I have not accomplished all I hoped to accomplish by this time. Still enough has been done to encourage us to hope for further success. I have sent four subscriptions to NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, four to Nashville Advocate, and eleven to the World for Christ. Five subscriptions have been sent to Woman's Missionary Advocate. About thirty dollars have been spent in improving the parsonage, and, in addition to this, another room is to be built soon. Assessment for foreign missions paid in full."

Rev. J. E. Buck, Abbeville, Miss.: "After nearly a three weeks' tussle with measles I am on foot again. Hope no injurious effects have been left upon the system. How silly some parents act when they keep their children from measles in their earlier years! My parents might have spared me many an hour of anxiety, and then much suffering when I did have measles, if they had suffered me to have it in childhood. However, I am glad I am through with the trouble. The only regret is the loss of so much time from my work. My people seem to be very lenient, and express their desire that I still desist from work until I am sure I am out of danger. Their kindnesses to me and mine during our afflictions have been many. In fact, they have not ceased to show their kind-heartedness since we came to them in December. On our arrival our reception was royal. You have read of nothing better from any preacher in the connection. Of course, this sprung us and inspired us to put forth our very best effort. May the Lord help us to do our very best this year! An advance was made on the assessment of last year for pastor, and a much better collection than was made first quarter of last year. The brethren promise that it shall all be paid. Since Conference we have put new pulpit and chancel in our church here. We are arranging to dedicate the church in the early Summer. The ladies have put new furniture in one room of the parsonage, called one room, and have paint and alabastine to finish the inside of all the rooms. This done, we shall boast of having as good a circuit parsonage as there is in the district. Our good Bro. Cameron is riding, walking and talking almost constantly in behalf of a district parsonage for the Holly Springs district; and is succeeding, too. In fact, all such men succeed; they go at it with no thought of failure. His age and length of term of service seem not to hinder him, but he seems to work as though he felt that what he does he must do quickly. Now, Mr. Editor, publish this, and I may write again by and by."

HINTON—Mrs. F. A. HINTON died at her late residence in Meridian, Miss., Jan. 19, 1897, of pneumonia after an illness of some weeks, leaving a husband and four children to mourn her loss. Her maiden name was Miss Frances A. Cook, and she was born in Wayne county, Miss., March 13, 1845. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in 1857, and was married to Mr. T. L. Hinton, Nov. 14, 1864. Mrs. Hinton put her membership in the South Side (Meridian) Methodist Church upon its organization in 1893, and she remained a consistent member until her decease. In the death of this good woman the community has lost one of the best neighbors; the church, one of its best members, and the world, one of the purest Christians. It was the pleasure of the writer to know her well for several years. She was always found willing to do all she could for the Master's cause—ever feeling her humility and dependence on God. I have often heard it said by her neighbors that she surely was a child of God, because her life showed it. When asked a short time before she passed away if she was prepared, she replied, with a smiling countenance, that she had not waited until now to think of this hour, but had long ago made ready to meet her Maker. Grieve not, loved ones, but be ready to meet death, and at last form one unbroken family around the throne of God.

W. D. H.

LONG—LILLIE SAWYERS, daughter of Dr. J. H. and Mrs. Sue Sawyers, was born in the home of her grandfather, Rev. W. G. Brownlow, in Knoxville, Tenn., the ninth day of September, 1858, and died in Radford, Va., the sixth day of February, 1897. The twentieth of December, 1883, she was married to Rev. S. D. Long, then of the North Mississippi Conference, now presiding elder of the Radford district, Holston Conference.

Mrs. Long was a woman of strong, well cultivated mind, of sweet disposition, of discreet and dignified deportment, and with a truly pious spirit. Having good sense, sound judgment and strong will, she had great force of character. This made her a tower of strength to her husband and an instrument for good in every charge he served.

Sister Long joined the Presbyterian Church when a small girl, and was true to her vows till after her marriage, when she assumed the vows of the Methodist Church. She took an active part in all the work of the church where her husband served. His charge was her charge, and his work her work. They were of one heart and one mind in all the work of God. Her name is like ointment poured forth in Okolona and Macon, Miss; in Fountain City, Tenn., and in Marion and Radford, Va. The people loved her wherever she lived. No wonder, for she was gentle, amiable, sympathetic, deeply pious, and perfectly prudent. While her husband was pastor, she was pastoress of the whole flock.

Sister Long shrank from publicity in the discharge of her religious duties. She was modest, diffident and retiring, but true to God and the right. Her heart was fixed on God. Her piety was of that clear, deep, constant, noiseless kind—flowing like a river, silently, but with great force. Hers was a beautiful life. She was a loving mother and a true wife. She knew on Thursday before she died on Saturday that her end was near. She made known her wishes in regard to her little son, arranged for her funeral, disposed of her personal effects, sent messages of love to her friends, thanked her mother—now Mrs Boynton—and her husband for their kindness, designated the undersigned to write her obituary, and passed away in great triumph. A short, sweet, earthly life opened out into life eternal. "Thanks be unto God that giveth us the victory."

At Marion, Va., a great throng was present to shed a tear on her bier. She was buried in Knoxville from the home where she was born, and from Church Street Church.

GILDEROY.

TAYLOR—Early on the morning of Sunday, Jan 31, 1897, the spirit of Mrs. V. E TAYLOR, in answer to the summons of the Master, quitted its earthly tabernacle and sped to its eternal home with God.

Sister Taylor was the daughter of Rev. Basil G. and Mrs Elizabeth Puckett, and was born in Franklin county, Miss., in 1850. Her consecrated father was called to his reward when she was seven years of age, and her mother followed him in four short years, so that she was bereft of both parents at the tender age of eleven. When she was fourteen years old she gave her heart to God and joined the Methodist Church, of which she was ever after a faithful and loyal member. She was married on the sixth of December, 1866, to Mr. J. P. Taylor, and became the mother of eleven children, three of whom have gone on before, while eight survive to mourn their sore bereavement. Among this number are Senator J. M. Taylor, now principal of the public schools of Biloxi, Miss.; Mr. J. E. Taylor, who has lately returned from Indiana to establish his law office here, and Miss S. Cornelia Taylor, of the Board of Examiners of Claiborne county. Her husband's death, which occurred a few years since, was occasioned by the accidental discharge of a gun in his own hands.

Sister Taylor was a very quiet and reserved woman, and this, with her own and her family's ill-health, kept her very much at home. She loved her church, and was a hearty supporter of its institutions; but she was often prevented from attending its services by the sickness of herself or some member of her large and loved family. But home was her realm, and there, in loving ministrations, in wise counsels, in tender warnings and corrections, in earnest exhortations, she found her chief satisfaction and delight, and the fulfillment of the divine mission of her life. She has done her work well, and has accomplished what many a better known and less reserved woman would rejoice to own in the moral and upright trend imparted to the lives God committed to her care. May the mother's God bless the motherless, and bring to their stricken hearts the cheer and hope that human sympathies and human words can never give! Deeply do we feel for them in their grief, but our best help is to commend them to God.

Her death was the result of a violent attack of la grippe. She was buried from her home in this city at eleven o'clock of the morning of February the first. But her sleep is not forever. There will be a resurrection, glad and glorious, when Christ, descending once again, shall bid the good and faithful servant welcome to his eternal joys.

God grant to the sorrowing hearts his presence and comfort now and forever!

Hood's Pills cure Liver Ills; easy to take, easy to operate. 25 cents.

Nine women in ten are afflicted with some disease or weakness—a burden that weighs them down and handicaps them in performing their daily duties. Some who are thus afflicted do not know exactly what is the matter with them, but attribute their ill health to some other cause. Some who do recognize the real trouble are induced to jeopardize their lives by taking alleged medicines prepared by inexperienced incompetents. Some of these advertised preparations are concocted by mere nurses, those possessing no knowledge of the delicate organism of women, the complicated and obstinate diseases peculiar to them, or the remedies which may safely be prescribed for the relief and cure thereof. Now the nurse may be a very good and useful woman in her proper sphere, and yet be totally unqualified to prescribe remedies for the complicated and obstinate diseases incident to women. No woman suffering from these delicate ailments should think of consulting a mere nurse, however good she may be in her proper field of usefulness, but should go instead to an experienced, skilled specialist.

The services of such a specialist are at the command of every woman. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a discovery and invention of a regularly graduated, experienced specialist in woman's peculiar maladies, who may be consulted, free of charge, either in person or by letter, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., of which he is chief consulting physician and surgeon. The most wonderful preparation of its kind that has ever been made is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It cures where physicians fail, and it cures right at home, with none of the distressing examinations and local treatments so uniformly insisted upon by doctors.

Every woman ought to know about the great remedy, above mentioned, and she can find out all about it in Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, a work of over 1000 pages, carefully illustrated with over 300 plates. It contains several chapters on the reproductive physiology of women, and hundreds of simple receipts for the cure of many common ailments that come to every family. It will be sent, paper-bound, absolutely free, on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps, to pay cost of mailing only. Address the author, as above. If French cloth binding is desired, send 10 cents extra, 31 cents in all.

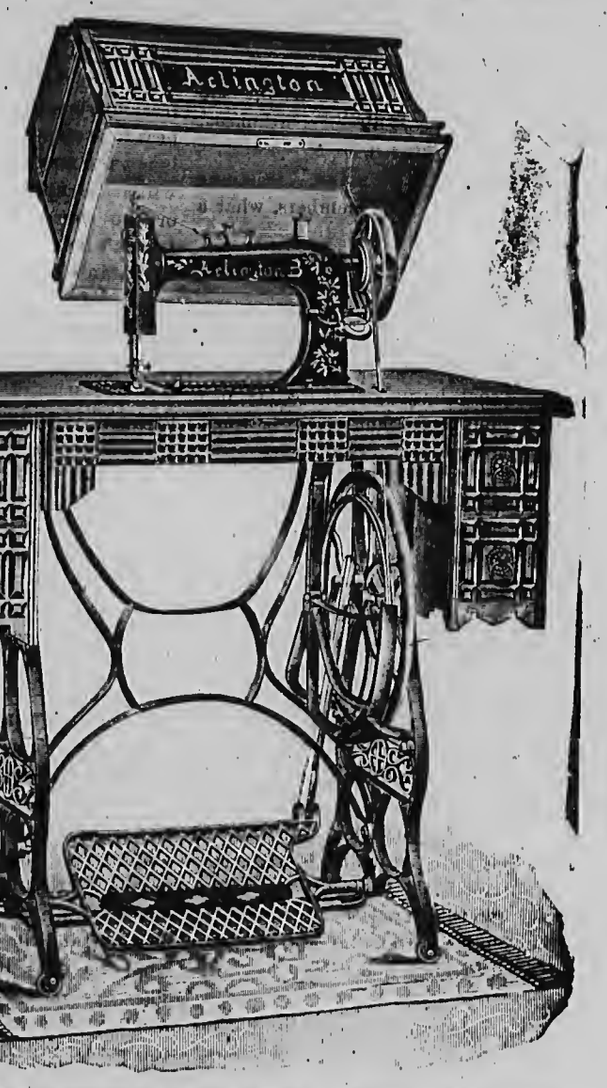
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.



A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

For better in its place the lowliest bird
Should sing aright to Him the lowliest song,
Than that a seraph strayed should take the word,
And sing His glory wrong.
—Jean Ingelow.

An empty head often makes more noise than one that is full of brains.

The man who begins to count the cost of honesty is already dishonest.

If there were as many Christians as there are church members, what a world this would be!

We believe strongly in reformers, provided they commence at the right place—with themselves.

We shall be judged at the last day not by our professions or our feelings, but by our lives. Selah.

A very small soul can see faults and foibles, but it takes a large soul to find something good in everybody.

You imagine that if you had ten talents you would work wonders. You are mistaken. If you do nothing with your one talent, you would do the same with ten.

The best families, the happiest families and the most useful families in every congregation are those in which family worship is regularly maintained, the church paper taken and carefully read, and the work of the church often talked about.—United Presbyterian.

Revivals are necessary simply because churches get cold and almost lifeless. The ideal church does not need a revival. It is always fully alive and hard at work. That church is in best condition which has conversions and accessions to its membership at its regular services.

If you wish to know whether you are a Christian, inquire of yourself whether, in and for the love of God, you seek to make happy those about you by smiles and pleasant sayings. Are you a comfortable person to live with? Are you a pleasant person to have about?—Gail Hamilton.

From the time that at my mother's feet or on my father's knee I first learned to lisp verses from the sacred writings, they have been my daily study. If there be anything in my style or thoughts to be commended, the credit is due to my kind parents in instilling into my mind an early love of the Scriptures. — Daniel Webster.

It is a sin for a Christian to be cheerless and forbidding to those in the home, the church or the world. If anything should bring good cheer it is the consciousness of forgiven sin and of useful work for our fellows and for God. A long-faced, sour, repulsive Christian gives the lie to every plank in the Christian platform.—Baptist Standard.

Expectancy of Great Things.

As a rule, the men who accomplish most are those who expect most. It is true in every line of endeavor and in every sphere of life that he who sows sparingly, looking for small results, reaps also sparingly. Mighty achievements are in almost every instance preceded by great expectations. Expect little, attempt less, and naught will be the result. Men labor according as they plan and hope. Industry is almost exactly proportionate to expectation. It is well nigh impossible to induce men to give time and effort to any enterprise that promises little. A story is told of a certain princess who, having dropped a valuable jewel into a well, set a man to work drawing out the water and pouring it through a sieve, without telling him the object she had in view. Though liberally paid, the man soon became disgusted with the job and gave it up. Several others were employed with the same result. Finally, a laborer was found who cared nothing for the seeming folly of the task, or for the ridicule of the bystanders, and by and by the lost jewel was recovered. The story, while it points another moral, serves to illustrate the truth that there is in man a strong disinclination to fruitless and unreasonable labor.

However worthy a cause may be in itself, if men see little prospect of its success, only the heroic will espouse and aid it. Recruits flock to a victorious army. Capital ever gravitates to the prosperous manufactory or railroad, and mercilessly deserts the failing enterprise. As are our expectations so will our efforts be. No matter how futile an undertaking may seem to others, if a man believes in it fully, he is sure to give it his best energies. Expectation of failure is almost sure to bring about the very thing we dread. The merchant, or the farmer, or the professional man who starts out in business expectant of being unsuccessful is not the man whom Dame Fortune will smile upon. The new convert, or the church member, who thinks he can't hold out falls an easy victim to Satan's wiles. Prophesy defeat, whether for yourself or others, and you help to hasten its coming.

Expectation of success, the enthusiasm born of confidence in one's own ability and of the worthiness of our endeavor, causes men to make nothing of difficulties and obstacles that to the less sanguine seem insurmountable. Distrust paralyzes effort and invites defeat. Unless we constantly cherish ardent hopes of material and spiritual progress, retrogression is sure to follow. Look for better times and you will help to bring them. Says Bulwer: "Nothing is so contagious as enthusiasm. It is the real allegory of the fable of Orpheus; it moves stones and charms brutes. It is the genius of sincerity, and truth accomplishes no victories without it. Let a man be but firmly persuaded that he is born to do some day what at the moment seems impossible, and it is fifty to one but what he does it before he dies." There is nothing like "going in to win."

Hardly any class of people are greater hinderers of progress than the pessimists. No matter what good work is enterprised, somebody is always ready to pour cold water on by saying that it is impracticable, or that it will come to naught. Hope has tremendous buoyant power, while all through the ages despair has been the mother of disease, disaster and death. Many a bright boy who might have risen to eminent usefulness has been condemned to a dark, profitless life by being treated as if incapable of goodness or greatness. More than once men of genius have accomplished nothing until they left the community where they were born and bred, because of the hampering, smothering effect of non-appreciation and skepticism of their ability. The sentiment, "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?" often clips the wings of aspiration and discourages noble effort. One of the most effective ways to degrade our fellow-men is to act as if we expected nothing good of them; no improvement, no striving after better things.

Many a pastor has been made heart-sick and had his usefulness impaired by being forced to listen to the croaking of unprogressive, faith-lacking church members. If a new church or parsonage is to be built, many are ready to say that the people are too poor, or the time is not propitious, etc. Or, if a revival meeting be attempted, many go into it in a half-hearted way, no more expecting to see sinners converted or saints blessed than to see snow fall in Summer. How often it is the case that professing Christians work and pray, looking for but meagre results or, perhaps, none at all. While we should have no confidence in the flesh, we ought always to be confident of our ability through God to do the work he gives us to do. Showers of blessings do not descend upon the church or the individual that looks not and longs not for them. It is the waiting, expectant soul that receives power from on high.

Frequently preachers and people have so little confidence in God's all-sufficiency and readiness to help that little or no effort is made to reach all classes and save the worst sinners. Our people have come to believe that men can be converted only at special times under the preaching of some noted evangelist or some minister of extraordinary gifts. The average church neither prays for nor expects the constant presence and operation of the Spirit at its regular services. No wonder, then, that conversions seldom occur, and that between "revival seasons" the piety of the church sinks to a low ebb. Many in this age are like the Israelitish spies who brought back an evil report, saying that the people were not able to go up and possess the land, because of the giants and the walled cities. Though we are menaced by the giants of intemperance, worldliness and gambling, and confronted by the walls of prejudice and hatred of the truth, if we go forward in the strength of Almighty God, expecting to conquer, nothing shall stand before us. Does not all power in heaven and in earth belong to our Lord? Is he not "able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think?" According to our faith so will it be unto us.

Of all men the Christian ought to be the most hopeful. We enjoy not fullness of life in Christ because we ask not and expect not more than a faint manifestation of God's power and love. Our victories over sin are not more glorious because we look not for wondrous results, neither pray as we should for fullness of grace.

Our expectations, if directed to spiritual things, shall never be disappointed. As some one has well said: "Hope spans the unknown future of personal life with the rainbow of optimism. Suffering, disappointment and bereavement may be woven into a cross for us during the year, but faith teaches that behind the cross is love unutterable and wisdom most perfect working out a more eternal weight of glory."

"Then can't not toil in vain;
Cold, heat, and moist an I dry,
Shall foster and mature the grain
For garners in the sky."

Letter from "Gilderoy."

There is a man here in this Delta country who is something of a wonder to me. He is now fifty-three years old, and more than half of his life he has been on the same farm, and most of the time in the same house. He is a first-class man in intelligence, in influence, in genuine worth, in wealth, and in abounding liberality. He has never had a case in court, never was on a jury, never voted, and never was at an election, and yet he has thrived and done well. All these years he has been the manager of a very large business—business of his own and for other people. He has kept out of law and out of politics and out of debt. There are over seven hundred negroes on his farm, and he owes no one of them a cent beyond Saturday night of each week. This is a remarkable record. More; he says: "I never drank as much as a quart of spirits in my life." That, too, in the bottom where so many think liquor necessary to counteract malaria. This man stirs more than anybody. He is what we call "a hustler." He seems to be well, looks well, and weighs only two hundred and seventy-five pounds—all without liquor or lager. He attends strictly to his own business, and puts his finger in no other man's pie—never, only to help some one in need; the needy poor, whether white or black. Those who drinks liquor and lager for malaria are sick three times to his once. Indeed, if one or the other must come, any right-thinking man would rather die of malaria and go to heaven, than to die of liquor, or lager, and go to hell. It is a settled fact that no drunkard will go to heaven. The Word of God fixes this. The pretexts for drinking in this country, and every other country, are indexes of bad hearts and vitiated and depraved tastes. Some men, in some places in this Delta, and in other sections, would demoralize, hesot and damn all the negroes in reach to draw trade to some towns. They say liquor draws trade. I suppose it does. It draws liquor trade, and the man who trades most in liquor is soon the least able to trade in anything else. The man who buys and drinks the most liquor is the least able to buy meat, bread, and clothing. To sell a man liquor to draw his trade is much like killing the goose that lays golden eggs. The trade lasts for a little while, but soon the customer is too poor to buy goods. The soberer a man is, the more industrous and prosperous he is, and the more able to buy goods and to pay for them. Liquor brings business to alms-houses, to the courts, to lawyers, to sheriffs, to jailors, to government farms, to jails, to penitentiaries, and to the devil and his angels. It fills the coffers of bartenders and impoverishes bar frequenters. Liquor increases crime and multiplies criminals. It does no one any good, and everybody much harm. It destroys manhood—mental, moral, and physical. It sends souls to hell. It brings anguish to women and children, and is the sworn foe of love and virtue. Liquor brings trade, and blasts human hopes and human souls. No right-thinking man, who has one iota of regard for his fellow-men, one particle of love for God, any just conception of the best interests of the country, would ever favor or advocate the sale of whisky in any place. It is evil, and only evil, and that continually. Everything may be said against it, and not one thing reasonable for it.

Hell is loose and rampant with rage in every place where rod liquor is on tap or for sale. Some would damn all the customers to gain their trade. Liquor in spots has killed more people in this bottom than all the malaria spread everywhere. The same is true of every other section where liquor is made, sold, or given away. No, sir; get it out, and keep it out forever. Religion, humanity, sound judgment, philosophy, both mental and moral, and sound political economy say, "Get it out, and keep it out." Why invite a curse, a blight, a blast, and the fury of hell on your town?

GILDEROY.

March 10, 1897.

W. P. and H. M. Conference.

The fifth Annual Conference of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society of the Louisiana Annual Conference convened in New Orleans, March 4 to 7, at Felicity Street Church. The attendance from the country was rather small, owing, no doubt, to the scarcity of funds and the drouth, but the attendance from the city was quite large, especially at the night sessions. The Conference met twice daily—at 10 A. M. and 7:30 P. M.

The morning sessions were devoted chiefly to the routine business, the evening being given to the presentation of the work and a general discussion of the work of city missions.

The church was very tastefully decorated by the King's Daughters of Felicity Church. The music was under the direction of Prof. Adams and Mrs. Zable, with Miss Ross, of Felicity Street, presiding at the organ.

The first evening was given to the addresses of welcome and the response thereto, and the usual opening exercises Friday evening were quite interesting and inspiring, and no doubt those present will long remember the talks of Capt. Winterbottom, of the Salvation Army, and Rev. Joseph Vital, the Italian city missionary, a convert from the Roman priesthood.

The talks of Mrs. Meekins, of the Tchonpitoulas Street Mission, and of Miss Fuller, of the Grotna and Gouldsboro Mission, were plain presentations of their work and the good accomplished. Mr. Henry Haag, of the Whosoever Will Mission on Bienville street, in a most forceful manner gave an account of the inception of this mission work, and the great good accomplished therein. The paper read by Mrs. Nixon, of Felicity Street Church, on the "Need of Work among the French in South Louisiana," showed us the situation in our beloved State as it had never before been presented to us, and impressed everyone with an earnest desire to aid the cause of Christ in our own State, that the many parishes without Protestant ministers might have the truth abundantly proclaimed in their midst.

The Conference sermon was delivered by Rev. H. R. Singleton, of Rayne Memorial, at 3:30 P. M., his text being from Zachariah iv, 6: "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." His subject was the "Power of the Holy Spirit," which was well handled to the edification of the entire audience.

The ladies may congratulate themselves on their Conference as a complete success.

AN ONLOOKER.

Shall They Starve?

Dear Brethren of the Mississippi Conference:

Word comes to us that, up to March 10, only $15 for domestic missions had reached our Conference treasurer, and all of this came from territory which is practically mission field itself. One full quarter since adjournment of Annual Conference! Our Board owes to those faithful servants at least a part of what has been earned by them. "Time is up" for settlement. But an empty treasury precludes payment even of the pittance hoped for. Some of these brethren are struggling along without parsonage homes, and amid unorganized, unsettled and ungenerous communities.

There has not been a time of severer strain on the faith and patience of those who serve the outposts for many years, if ever, since the war.

Now, beloved, will you not lay this matter to heart, and take it in hand immediately? Present this cause earnestly and vigorously to all your congregations publicly, and from house to house, till at least half of your assessment is secured in cash and the rest in good subscriptions. Then please forward cash (and all you can raise for foreign missions) to our own treasurer, Rev. B. F. Jones, at Brookhaven, Miss. He will send you the quickest and neatest receipts you ever saw—"with thanks." "The blessing of them that are ready to perish" will come in tidal waves upon your heads, and into your hearts will steal the sweet consciousness of duty discharged and a promise fulfilled. See Resolution No. 2 of Missionary Board's Report, unanimously adopted in open Conference at Port Gibson, Dec. 6, 1896.

Yours in hope,

J. P. DRAKE,
Sec'y Conf. Bd. Missions.

One secret act of self-denial, one sacrifice of inclination to duty, is worth all the mere good thoughts, warm feelings, passionate prayers, in which idle people indulge themselves. —J. H. Newman.

Don't fail to read our offer on the fifth page.

NOTES.

The Florida Advocate office was burned a few days since. Loss, about $800.

Dr. George R. Crooks, one of the magnates of the M. E. Church, died Feb. 20.

Bishop A. W. Wilson will preach the commencement sermon at Columbia College.

Dr. A. Coke Smith will preach the commencement sermon at Emory and Henry College.

Rev. T. B. Clifford, of the North Mississippi Conference, is spending a few days in the Crescent City.

Rev. A. C. Flowers has been appointed pastor of Colfax and Ada charge, Louisiana Conference.

The commencement sermon of the Mississippi State University will be preached by Bishop E. R. Hendrix; the commencement address will be delivered by Gov. McLaurin.

Great cities are likely to rule the American Republic; they will also ruin it, if they are governed by the whisky ring, as they have been in a majority of cases thus far in our history. The predominant political influence of the whisky ring in great and corrupt cities is incompatible with the success of American institutions, or with safety to life and property under universal suffrage in mismanaged municipalities.—Joseph Cook.

It can not be that the people should grow in grace unless they give themselves to reading. A reading people will always be a knowing people.—John Wesley.

Rev. H. Mallard DuBose, D. D., of the Mississippi Conference, will preach the commencement sermon at Johnston Collegiate Institute, Grooms-burg, La., June 30.

The wastefulness of the rich has received considerable attention of late, and the Bradley-Martin ball has furnished a fruitful illustration. But the wastefulness of the poor, if it were chronicled, would, in its way, be quite as distressing.—Congregationalist.

Dr. Sawyer has just returned from Plaquemine, where he finished his first round of Conferences. His preachers are in great favor with their people, and are busily engaged building up all the interests of Zion. He speaks most encouragingly of the outlook on the New Orleans district.

The parsonage at Bastrop, La., was burned on the night of the eleventh, together with the library and other effects of the pastor, Rev. W. Schuhle. Prof. Schowalter, who also occupied the parsonage, shared the same fate. As usual with Methodist parsonages, there was no insurance.

George W. Thompson, a colored employee of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, died on the tenth. He had been connected with the ADVOCATE for twenty years, and was always prompt, efficient and thoroughly reliable. He had been for many years a steward in the M. E. Church, and was universally esteemed as a man of fine Christian character.

We regret not receiving a report of the proceedings of the P. and H. M. meeting at Felicity in time for our last issue. We confidently expected a report, and reserved space for it as long as possible. As stated in our last issue, we were absent from the city. We are glad, however, to be able to present a report in this issue from the facile pen of "An Onlooker."

Lieutenant Totten has been trying to show the ministers of Hartford, Conn., why he believes the Anglo-Saxon race are the lost ten tribes of Israel. He bears the same relation to scriptural exposition that Wiggins, the weather prophet of Canada, sustains to science. Both know considerable that is true, but what they know that is true is small in proportion to what they know that is not true.—New York Advocate.

A company with a capital of fifty million dollars has been incorporated in New Jersey to work under the Marsden patents; that is, to manufacture and deal in all the products of cornstalks, under recent discoveries and inventions of Marsden and others. Among them is the use of the pith for the manufacture of car wheels, basins, barrels, and other vessels now made of iron, wood, or paper, and also of boards and other building materials. The pith can also be used for cellular filling for the inside and outside armor of war vessels; it is said to be superior to that made in France.—New York Advocate.

Before leaving office Mr. Cleveland affixed his signature to a bill providing indemnity for the loss of registered letters. For some time the arrangement has been worked successfully in other countries, and is expected to give satisfaction here. The principle of the new law is already recognized by express companies. The limit of indemnity on any single letter or package is fixed at ten dollars, and care will be taken not to pay that sum where it is not clearly due. The registered mail is a part of the public service yielding larger profits than any other in proportion to the business done, and a very small percentage of registered mail packages is irrecoverably lost. It is estimated that on the present basis of the service every lawful claim could be met and still leave a large surplus of earnings. It is expected, however, that the new law insuring letters up to $10 for a small extra charge, will greatly increase the registered mail business and considerably swell the profits.—Zion's Herald.

The Advocate for $1.

From now until the first of June we will receive new cash subscriptions at the rate of $1 for nine months. Moreover, we will give those who subscribe under this offer the benefit of our premium Bible offer. Take notice that this offer is made only to new subscribers. We will make a liberal offer to our present subscribers after awhile. Meantime, let all who are in arrears pay up, as no one who is in arrears can get the benefit of any of our special offers. Let all our preachers make this offer known to our people at once. We will send a sample Bible for use in canvassing to those who desire it. We will also send sample copies of the ADVOCATE on request.

To Preachers.

To the preachor who sends the largest number of new cash subscribers between now and the first of July we will present either an Arlington B Sewing Machine or a gold-filled watch guaranteed to be a perfect time keeper and to look as well as a gold watch for twenty years, whichever one may be preferred. To the preacher sending the next largest number and also to the one sending the third largest number we will present a set of Clarke's Commentaries, latest edition, with modern additions.

Should the successful contestant prefer it, we will pay him cash instead of the premium.

Under this offer no commissions will be allowed until the premium has been awarded. Those who wish to compete for these premiums should notify us at once.

The postoffice address of Rev. W. B. Hines is Summit, Miss.

Easy to Make Money.

I notice how one of your readers is making lots of money selling self-heating flat irons, but I think I am doing better by selling dish washers. I never make less than $8 a day and oftentimes clear over $5. The machine works like a charm and any child can operate it. The dishes are never broken or chipped, but they are always clean and dry when taken out. Then a woman never has to touch the greasy dish water with her hands, and as a consequence she can keep her skin nice and smooth. In fact, dish washing is a pleasure when this machine is used. I have no trouble in selling the dish washer, as every woman that sees it work will not be without it, for the price is within reach of everyone. I cleared over $150 last month and did not work very hard. I understand that this firm wants a few more agents, and if you will address Dep't A 5 of the Iron City Dish Washer Co., 6th. A, Pittsburgh, Pa., you will receive full particulars how to make money as I am doing.

A NEW AGENT.

To the Ministers and Superintendents of the Mississippi Conference.

BRETHREN: At Port Gibson this resolution was offered by Dr. Weems:

"Resolved, That the first Sunday in April, and the Sundays following on circuits, be observed as Orphans' Day, and the superintendents of our Sabbath-schools are requested to institute the Birthday Box in their schools, the proceeds of which shall be given to the Orphans' Home."

Our Home is nearing completion. We want to have it finished by the time of the meeting of the State Epworth League Conference. We want it paid for. Now, let me urge each of you to do your utmost to observe "Orphans' Day." Ask your people for a contribution for "The Home." Do not attempt to force anyone to give. Just do your duty by presenting the orphans' claim, and take what comes freely and willingly. When you get it, please send it at once to Rev. M. L. Burton, Wesson, Miss.

Will not our superintendents heed the request that we make of them, and make the Birthday Box a part of the school. A small money bank will answer. Have it in some prominent place in the room, and before the close of the school ask, "Are there any birthdays this morning?" Every one who has had a birthday during the week is expected to contribute one cent for each year of their age. By a little effort the entire school can be interested, and the Birthday Box made a success. Try it.

W. A. GUNNING, Chair'n.

Parsonage Burned.

The Methodist parsonage at Bastrop, La., was destroyed by fire yesterday morning between two and three o'clock. We had just finished forty dollars' worth of improvements on the house. About one-third of my library perished in the flames. Prof. Schowalter and family, who had occupied the parsonage with me since the second instant, lost all but one set of furniture and library. Nothing was insured. But for the timely assistance of the people, nothing would have been saved. We feel grateful for their help. WM. SCHUHLE.

For Dyspepsia
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

DR. C. B. LANNEAU, Charleston, S. C., says: "I used it with benefit for a member of my family who was suffering from dyspepsia. I esteem it a good preparation."

Aberdeen, Miss.

By invitation of the pastor, Rev. Amos Kendall, I represented the Orphans' Home here yesterday. Preached to a large and intelligent congregation at eleven o'clock, and after the sermon received in cash and subscription more than $100. Besides this the infant class in the Sunday-school, led by Mrs. George Paine (daughter-in-law of our deceased Bishop), will furnish a room which I announced would be called the "Robert Paine Memorial." In the afternoon I addressed the League, and at night had the pleasure of lecturing to a large crowd on Methodism: "Its Past, Present and Future." Methodism leads in this wealthy and historic town. MISSIONS IN THE PROPHETS.

MARCH 21—THE EXTENT OF THE KINGDOM.
(I s. ix, 1-9.)

The city of Zion, or Jerusalem, was the place where the Messiah should inaugurate his kingdom, and hence it is typically employed by the prophet to represent the church of Christ. The righteous remnant of Israel constitute the true Zion, and the enlargement of Zion represents the enlargement of the kingdom of Christ in the world. The ever-increasing extent of Zion is disclosed by Isaiah in beautiful figurative language.

The passage opens with an animated call to the inhabitants of Zion to arise and behold the glory of a spiritual sunrise—even the rising upon them of "the glory of the Lord." "The night long and dismal has brooded, but now gradually ends.... The tops of the mountains are gilded ....Zion is to have the first view of the new day." (Whedon.)

This new burst of divine light shall extend into the blackness of heathen darkness, and nations and kings shall be attracted thereby to Zion.

Now (ver. 4), the inhabitants of Zion are called upon to behold the multitudes approaching, their own sons and daughters (the dispersed Jews), and the Gentile nations, bringing rich treasure with them—a sight which shall fill their hearts with joyous gratitude.

Both by land and sea they come. Over the deserts of Arabia the camels and dromedaries are seen bringing precious burdens, "gold and incense," as presents, and animals to be sacrificed upon the altar in Zion; and also on the seas vessels are seen approaching, laden with tribute from distant lands, their sails appearing as flying clouds, and "skimming the water as doves do the air."

Attention.

The Louisiana State League Conference will meet in Shreveport, April 22-26.

A very interesting program is being prepared and will soon be published.

Let every League in the State see to the matter of having one or more delegates present.

Preacher or Sermonizer?

To the preacher the sermon is a means; to the sermonizer it is an end. To the preacher the sermon is an opportunity; to the sermonizer it is a task. Hence the preacher is a free man and a master; the sermonizer is a subject and a slave. The preacher has something to say; the sermonizer has to say something. The preacher bears in his heart a great glowing ideal of what Jesus would have his people be. He feels with tenderest sympathy and keenest sorrow how far short of this they come, and, impelled by this ideal and a burning desire to lift his people up to it, he searches the Scriptures for a text which shall express it, and draws on all the resources of his reading and his experience for argument, illustration and incident to commend it to their minds and hearts. The sermonizer carries in his head a general outline of theology, goes to his commentary for an appropriate setting, splits his thought up into the requisite number of heads, gives each a striking title, tacks on an appropriate appeal or application, and goes forth to face his audience.—Pres. W. DeWitt Hyde.

You are too young, no matter what your age, to lose your hair. Save it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. It removes dandruff, prevents baldness, restores gray and faded hair to its original color, and makes it soft, glossy and abundant. No toilet is complete without it.

$150 IN GOLD GIVEN AWAY.

Who can form the greatest number of words from the letters in "HOLIDAY?" You can make ten or more words, we feel sure, and if you do you will be well repaid. Do not use any letter more times than it appears in "HOLIDAY." Use no language except English. Words spelled alike but with different meaning can be used but once. Use any standard Dictionary. Nouns, pronouns, verbs, adverbs, prefixes, suffixes and adjectives—anything that is legitimate will be allowed. Work it out in this manner: Holy, hay, day, had, etc. Use these words in your list. The publishers of THE SUNNY SOUTH will pay $50 in gold to the person who makes the largest list of words from the letters in the word Holiday; $25 for the second largest list; $10 EACH for the next five largest lists; and $5 EACH for the next five largest lists. For the next twenty-five largest lists EACH will receive a Kodak, the regular price of which is $1.00 each. The above rewards are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to the South's great illustrated family and literary weekly, which has 12 large pages, 72 columns each issue, all original matter, with the very best long and short stories, in addition to its numerous departments, such as "Woman's Page," "Children's Page," "Blue and Gray Page" and a page devoted to "Southern Industries," etc. To enter this contest it is necessary for you to send 50 cents for a three month's subscription with your list of words, and every person sending 50 cents and a list of ten words or more, is guaranteed an extra present by return mail (in addition to THE SUNNY SOUTH) of a 150 page book, "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush," by the famous Ian Maclaren. This book has attracted more attention in the United States than any book of recent years. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case or money refunded. Lists should be sent in at once. This contest will close June 1st. The names and addresses of successful contestants will be printed in the June 5th issue of THE SUNNY SOUTH. Remember, every contestant gets a prize. Note: If you do not want "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush" we will send you "The Story of An African Farm," "The Other Man's Wife" or "The Master of Bellentrae." In writing mention the book you want us to send you. Address THE SUNNY SOUTH, Box , Atlanta, Georgia.

WHAT A BOY CAN DO.

"Whal can a boy do, anyway?"
You ask—"what grand and great?"
Listen a moment, lad, I pray,
And three things I will state.

A boy can make the world more bright
By kindly word and deed;
As blossoms call for nature's light,
So hearts love's sunshine need.

A boy can make the world more pure
By lips kept ever clean;
Silence can influence shed as sure
As speech; oft more doth mean.

A boy can make the world more true
By an exalted aim;
Let one a given end pursue,
Others will seek the same.

Taught a Good Lesson.

My father played a trick on me the other night. You know I used to feel that I had done myself an injustice if I did not go to the theatre five or six nights a week. It wasn't always the theatre; but if it wasn't that, it was a music hall, or a game of cards or billiards with some of my companions. Well, you know how I am situated as to my business. I work for my father, and I have to be at the office early in the morning, just as the rest of the family are sitting down to breakfast. In consequence I get my breakfast and leave the house before they are up. But I can't complain of that. I'm doing exactly what the man who had my place before me did, and, between you and me, I'm drawing more salary. It's the evenings; I used to finish my work about six, get dinner in the city, and go somewhere in the evening.

I had been doing it for about six months, and when I look back I remember that about the only time I saw my mother and sister during that period was at Sunday dinner. Nothing unusual in that, of course; the same thing is true of hundreds of young men in town. But they haven't a father like mine. He came to me one afternoon and asked me if I had an engagement for that night.

"Yes," I said; "I've promised to go to the theatre."

"How about to-morrow night?" he asked.

"Nothing on at present," I replied.

"Well, I'd like you to go somewhere with me."

"All right," I said; "where shall I meet you?"

You see he leaves the office about an hour before I can get my work finished. He suggested Lenox Restaurant at 7:30, and I was there prepared for a quiet lecture on late hours. But when he appeared, he said he wanted me to call on a lady with him. "One I knew quite well when I was a young man," he said.

We went out and started straight for home.

"She is stopping at the house," he said, when I spoke of it. I thought it strange that he should have made the appointment for the Lenox Restaurant under those circumstances, but I said nothing.

Well, we went in, and I was introduced with due formality to my mother and sister. The situation was ludicrous, and I began to laugh, but the laugh died away. Not one of the three smiled. My mother and sister shook hands with me, and my mother said she remembered me as a boy, but hadn't seen much of me lately. Then she invited me to be seated. It wasn't a bit funny then, though I can laugh over it now. I sat down, and she told me one or two stories of my boyhood, at which we all laughed a little. When I finally retired, I was courteously invited to call again.

I went upstairs, feeling pretty small, and doing a good deal of thinking. Then I made up my mind that my mother was a most entertaining lady, and my sister was a good and brilliant girl. Now, I'm going to call again, as I have been doing quite regularly for the last week. I enjoy their company, and intend to cultivate their acquaintance.—Exchange.

The Contagion of Character.

We are all in danger of thinking more about what we shall do than what we shall be. To be active is easier than to be good. Yet it is what we are within that will really govern what we are without. So it is with the rose. "Why are you so sweet?" was asked of the scented clay. "I was so long in the sweet society of the rose that I partook of the sweetness of the rose." Let the rose once become what it is, and it costs it nothing to shed sweetness. Sweetness is in its very nature, and nature will reveal itself. Just so surely will what we are, the hidden essence of character we carry with us, reveal itself, and others must feel its influence. A laboring man recently seeking membership in the church, when asked what led him to think about his soul, replied: "I worked three years alongside Mr. R——, and I concluded if Christianity could do so much for him, I wanted to have it." Let us learn the lesson; for it is in this subtle radiation of character that lies the mighty power of a holy life. The atheist who spent a few days with the saintly Fenelon said: 'If I stay here much longer, I shall become a Christian in spite of myself." Fenelon had used no word of controversy or solicitation. It was the quiet, unconscious influence of a godly life. A Christian fragrance was there which must be diffused; a healing shadow was there whose blessing must be felt. We have all experienced it, but we can not understand it, any more than we can understand that mystery in electricity known under the title of induced currents. Here are two wires; they are parallel, but not touching. The first receives a current; the passing of that current, by some strange law of electric contagion, sets up in the other wire a similar, though somewhat feebler, current. It is this law which accounts for the varied voices we hear when listening at the telephone (the lines are not crossed, as some think); or by taking advantage of which messages may be sent from moving trains. It is known as the law of induced currents. There is another just such law in the moral sphere. The results of it we have all experienced. No matter how good we may be, let an evil life come within the "field of influence," and it will reach and affect us unfavorably; while, no matter how low and hardened one may be, he can not help feeling the uplifting power of a life and example nobler than his own. Good people make us better, and bad people make us worse, even to be in their presence. This subtle contagion of character we have all felt. We can not understand it any more than we can understand the strange vibrations of a piano or a harp's strings when a flute is played close beside it. We only know that one heart answers to another heart as the one sensitive instrument in the corner replies to the other in the room, as shown by reproducing the same melody.

In one of our cemeteries is a little white stone marking the grave of a very dear little girl; and on the stone are chiselled these words: "A child of whom her playmates said, 'It was easier to be good when she was with us.'" Think what a shadow of blessing her ever-present influence must have been! How much it might help us all in life if the vibrations of character which play upon us, and which we thus reproduce, were ever good and only good! None of us can covet a higher ideal than a character so Christ-like and pure that in our daily walk among men the very shadows we cast will render lives more beautiful and souls more true.—Rev. G. B. F. Hallock, in New York Evangelist.

The Proof Was Clear.

A friend clips this from an Eastern paper and asks that it be given a place among "crumbs." It has point:

Recently the evangelist, E. L. Hyde, was conducting a revival meeting at B——, in New Jersey, and in the course of his remarks said he could prove to the satisfaction of any infidel within ten minutes that he was a fool, little thinking that he should have occasion or opportunity of doing so. The next morning, while walking, a gentleman accosted him very abruptly by saying:

"Aren't you the evangelist preaching somewhere at the church?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I supposed you were a gentleman."

"I claim to be one."

"Well, I don't think you are one. Didn't you say last night that you could prove to the satisfaction of anyone within ten minutes that all infidels were fools? If you don't prove it to my satisfaction, I shall publish you in all the city papers as the most consummate liar that ever struck the city."

Seeing there was no possibility of reasoning with the man, Mr. Hyde said:

"Where is your infidel?"

"I claim to be one," was the reply, "and I want you to know I am no fool, either."

"You don't mean to say there is no reality in Christianity?"

"I do, sir. I have studied all phases of the subject, and traveled and delivered lectures against Christianity for more than twelve years, and I am prepared to say there is nothing in it."

"You are certain there is nothing in it?"

"Yes, sir; there is nothing in it."

"Will you please tell me," said Mr. Hyde, "if a man who will lecture twelve years against nothing is not a fool, what, in your judgment, would constitute a fool?"

He turned away in a rage. Mr. Hyde, drawing out his watch, insisted he still had six minutes, but the infidel would not hear him. Neither did he publish Mr. Hyde as a liar.—Epworth Herald.

Self-Development.

Parents often feel in doubt as to how to educate their children; but if one thing they should never doubt—that is, that every one must in the main educate himself, no matter how many or how capable his teachers may be. Herbert Spencer puts it correctly when he says: "In education the process of self development should be encouraged to the fullest extent. Children should be led to make their own investigations and to draw their own inferences. They should be told as little as possible, and induced to discover as much as possible. Humanity has progressed solely by self-instruction; and that to achieve the best results each mind must progress somewhat after the same fashion, is continually proved by the marked success of self-made men."—Exchange.

How to Spend Sunday.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, in answer to the question, "May I read a Sunday newspaper?" says: "Certainly, if that is the best literature you can find to develop reverence and faith and hope and love; if that queer modern melange of ball games and politics and horse races and theatrical criticisms and portraits of dancers and records of crimes and criminals, with a little literary criticism and occasionally a religious editorial thrown in to sanctify it—if that is the best thing you can find to help make you more reverent, more hopeful, more full of faith, certainly read it. I do not find it so myself."

The heart, like a violin, needs to be tuned afresh every time it is used. Heart tuning is an easy process when you have once learned it. Go to your closet, get on your knees, and be still. Wait for God to tighten the strings. Sometimes God does the tuning without waiting to be asked. The afflicting rod is not intended to break your heart, but to tune it. There is nothing soothing about a violin when it is being tuned; but unless it is tuned, and tuned often, it will never have the power to soothe.

It is a great thing, when our Gethsemane hours come, when the cup of bitterness is present to our lips, and when we pray that it may pass away, to feel that it is not fate, that it is not necessity, but divine love for good ends, working upon us.—E. H. Chapin.

Laughter a Great Tonic.

"I presume if we laughed more we should all be happier and healthier," writes Edward W. Bok in the October Ladies' Home Journal. "True, we are a busy and a very practical people. And most of us probably find more in this life to bring the frown than the smile. But, nevertheless, it is a pity that we do not laugh more; that we do not bring ourselves to the laugh, if need be. For we all agree that a good laugh is the best medicine in the world. Physicians have said that no other feeling works so much good to the entire human body as that of merriment. As a digestive, it is unexcelled; as a means of expanding the lungs, there is nothing better. It keeps the heart and face young. It is the best of all tonics to the spirits. It is, too, the most enjoyable of all sensations. A good laugh makes us better friends with ourselves and everybody around us, and puts us into closer touch with what is best and brightest in our lot in life. It is to be regretted, then, that such a potent agency for our personal good is not more often used. It costs nothing. All other medicines are more or less expensive.

"'Why,' said an old doctor not long ago, 'if people fully realized what it meant to themselves to laugh, and laughed as they should, ninety per cent. of the doctors would have to go out of business.' Probably when we get a little less busy we shall laugh more. For, after all, the difference between gloom and laughter is but a step. And if more of us simply took a step aside oftener than we do, and rested more, we would laugh more. By laughing I do not mean the silly giggle indulged in by some women and so many girls. There is no outward mark which demonstrates the woman of shallow mind so unmistakably as that of giggling. There is no sense in the giggle; no benefit to be derived from it. It makes a fool of the person herself, and renders every one about her uncomfortable. But just as the giggle is the outcome of a small mind, the hearty laugh is the reflection of a healthful nature. What we want is more good laughers in the world—not more gigglers."

Nansen's Opinion of Alcohol.

Nansen, the arctic explorer, writes: "My experience leads me to take a decided stand against the use of stimulants and narcotics of all kinds. It must be a sound principle always that one should live in as natural and simple a way as possible, and especially must this be the case when the life is a life of severe exertion in an extremely cold climate. The idea that one gains by stimulating body and mind by artificial means betrays, in my opinion, not only ignorance of the simplest physiological laws, but also a want of experience, or perhaps a want of capacity to learn from experience by observation. It seems, indeed, quite simple and obvious that one can get nothing in this life without paying for it in one way or another, and that artificial stimulants, even if they had not the directly injurious effects which they undoubtedly have, can produce nothing but a temporary excitement, followed by a corresponding reaction. Stimulants, with the exception of chocolate, which is mild in its effect and at the same time nourishing, bring practically no nutritive substance into the body, and the energy which one obtains in anticipation by their use at one moment must be paid for by a corresponding exhaustion at the next. It may, no doubt, be advanced that there are occasions when a momentary supply of energy is necessary, but to this I would answer that I can not imagine such a state of things to arise in the course of a protracted sledge expedition, when, on the contrary, as regular and steady work as possible is generally the main thing to be aimed at."—Journal of Hygiene.

OBITUARIES.

COLLIER.—Died Feb. 12, 1897, at Keachie, La., Mrs. E. C. COLLIER, aged seventy-three years six months and five days.

She was a devout member of the M. E. Church, and had been for fifty-three years. She was the mother of twelve children, all of whom had gone before except one.

Only those to whose lips the same cup of sorrow has been pressed can understand the chill that settles on the soul when one stands beside a pale, still form, and knows the faithful heart which would have shed its last drop of blood for us has ceased to beat. Seldom are the hearts of grandmother and granddaughter so closely knit as were my precious grandmother's heart and mine. Bound by a rare bond of sympathy and love, we were each a part of the other's life. Every joy of mine was hers; every ambition was greater, because she shared it, and never a cloud of trouble or perplexity crossed my brow but that it cast a shadow on her heart. After the slender blue-veined hands were still I looked at them with tear-dimmed eyes and aching heart, and knew their gentle touch would never soothe nor quiet me again. I thought of how much those loving hands had done for me through all the years since she took me, her first grandchild, into her arms. We often look around on the loved ones, and deep in our hearts we ask the question: "When the angel shall come to grieve us, and one must surely leave us, who'll be the first to go?" May he who says, "I will not leave you comfortless," help us to bow in meek submission to his divine will in this dark hour!

Farewell, grandma, thou art resting
In the Shepherd's peaceful fold;
By God's grace we all shall meet you
When we cross death's river cold.

Blessed Jesus, in my sorrow
Let her still my guardian be;
May I reach the shores eternal,
Guided by her prayers to thee!

When the Master called she was ready, and told her pastor, Rev. P. M. Brown, a few days before that she was willing to go. The years to come will be very desolate to those of us who still linger here without her love; but she is gone, and even in our deep sorrow we would not call her back if we could. Heaven is nearer, dearer, because she is there.

Her granddaughter, ELSIE M. HENLEY.

Keachie, La.

JACKSON.—Miss AMANDA JACKSON was born in Rockland county, New York, Oct. 29, 1836. She moved with her parents to Panola county, Miss., Dec. 26, 1867. She professed faith in Christ and joined the M. E. Church, South, at a revival held by Rev. E. B. Ramsey in the year 1853. On Jan. 11, 1897, she peacefully fell asleep in Jesus.

We quote the following lines from a beautiful and consoling paper written by her friend, Mrs. R. G. Wooten, and read by Dr. A. S. Yarbrough at the funeral:

"In the vigor of youth, and amid scenes of mirth and gaiety, the angel of death entered the home of our beloved one, severed the slender thread of life, and she was numbered with the dead. Miss Amanda was sustained and soothed by an unfaltering trust, and approached death like one who draws the drapery of her couch about her and lies down to pleasant dreams.

"Early, bright, transient,
Chaste as morning dew,
She sparkled, was exhaled,
And went to heaven.

"As a daughter, she was ever dutiful, deferential, and affectionate; as a sister, fond and gentle; as a friend, warm and true; and as a Christian, ever ready and cheerfully willing to perform all duties assigned her.

"How like the flowers that bloom and smile
When vernal breezes blow;
That beautify the earth awhile,
Then perish 'neath the snow.

"They bloom, and then they droop and fall
Over valley, hill and plain;
And yet we knew that they will all
More sweetly bloom again.

"How like the birds that come in Spring,
With song the air to fill;
That in cold Winter-time take wing,
Or sit mute and still.
Their anthems float awhile, and then
Are heard by us no more;
But we shall hear them sing again
Far sweeter than before."

W. J. BURT.

NAFF.—Mrs. AUGUSTA NAFF was born Jan. 21, 1851, and died Dec. 21, 1896.

In early life she professed conversion, joined the Methodist Church, and developed into a sweet Christian character.

October 24, 1869, she was married to Mr. Robert Naff. Ten children were born unto them. Four, while infants, were taken to the spirit world, where all is peace and love.

It was not my privilege to know her until a few months prior to her death; but I never knew one more resigned to the will of God amid all circumstances. In reverence of fortune, when all was gloom, she submitted it to God, and hymned songs of praise to him while performing her daily duties, as though not a ripple had marred the waves, nor caused their bark to toss. She was happy and contented to "wait on the Lord."

She left no message for her friends; yet, reflecting on the gentle Christian life she lived, we are sure the gates were ajar, and she was hidden welcome to "enter into the joy of the Lord."

The home is indeed dark, and was it not for faith in the crucified Son of God, it seems the heart-broken husband would fell grief's victim. They lived happily together, and only those who have had a like experience can rightly sympathize with him.

May the children be impressed by the Christian example of their fond mother, and learn while young to tread paths of righteousness!

We extend our deepest sympathies to the bereaved loved ones, and pray that God may sanctify this affliction to their good and his glory, and give them a blissful reunion in the sweet beyond. E. L. ALFOND.

HARPER.—JOSEPH D., infant son of Rev. J. D. and Jennie Harper, was born in Arcadia, La., Oct. 31, 1896, and died in Mansfield, La., Jan. 28, 1897.

So bright, so fair, so cheery, his presence and smile were as sunshine in our home, and his life, though so brief, had its mission of tenderness and love; and He "who doeth all things well" transplanted the sweet little flower to bloom in fadeless beauty in a land where there is no death.

"Little one, my little one,
With span of life so brief,
A mother weeps and mourns for thee
In sadness and in grief.

"Weeps for the early lost,
The hope that blossomed at thy birth;
Mourns thy pale and lifeless clay,
Too frail, too fair for earth.

"The great Recorder marked for thee
No path of human strife;
But over and over in thought, my child,
Will we live thy little life.

"And now the 'heaven of heavens'
Is thy spirit's eternal rest;
Better there, oh, precious babe,
Than on thy mother's breast.

"But when we reach that land of peace,
And the angels know each other
Of the cherub throng, oh, little one,
Haste, haste to your mother."

HIS PARENTS.

FOSTER.—Died in Yazoo county, Miss., Nov. 12, 1896, Mrs. MARY J. VICTORIA FOSTER (nee Lewis). She was born Aug. 6, 1811; married in October, 1863, to J. Q. Fryer, and after his death she was married to J. H. Foster, of Yazoo county, Miss., July 9, 1872, who died several years ago, leaving her with four small girls to provide for; and no one ever put forth more effort and made greater sacrifices than she did to educate her children.

Sister Foster was an honored member of the M. E. Church, South, at old Mt. Olivet. She was always in her place at church, unless there were good and sufficient reasons for her absence, and, like her honored husband (J. H. Foster), always responded promptly and freely to the demands of her church. She had an acute sense of all the obligations of life, and was religious from principle. I visited her frequently during her last illness, and always found her profoundly trustful. I never saw anyone enjoy a pastor's visit and his religious services more than she did. It was a benediction to talk and pray with her in her last illness. She impressed her religious character upon the community in which she lived.

May her bereaved children live as consistently and die as triumphantly as she did! is the prayer of her (then) pastor,

F. M. WILLIAMS.

Sharon, Miss.

JONES.—Rev. JOHN W. JONES was born in Northampton county, N. C., April 11, 1817, and removed to Mississippi and settled in Warren county in 1837, and was married to Miss Frances Goodman in 1843, and after her death married Miss Jos Bowie in January, 1870. He removed to Sharkey county; on Sept. 22, 1890, was married to Miss Elma Porter; died Aug. 16, 1896, of swamp fever after a few days' illness. He joined the church in early life, and some time after was licensed to preach, and continued to use his gifts as a local preacher, and maintained a good Christian reputation until his death. He was a man of more than ordinary intelligence, and was loved by those who knew him. He raised a large family, eight of whom are living.

Bro. Jones was ready and willing; sent messages to his friends and loved ones to meet him in heaven. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." G. W. ALEXANDER.

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Bible

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

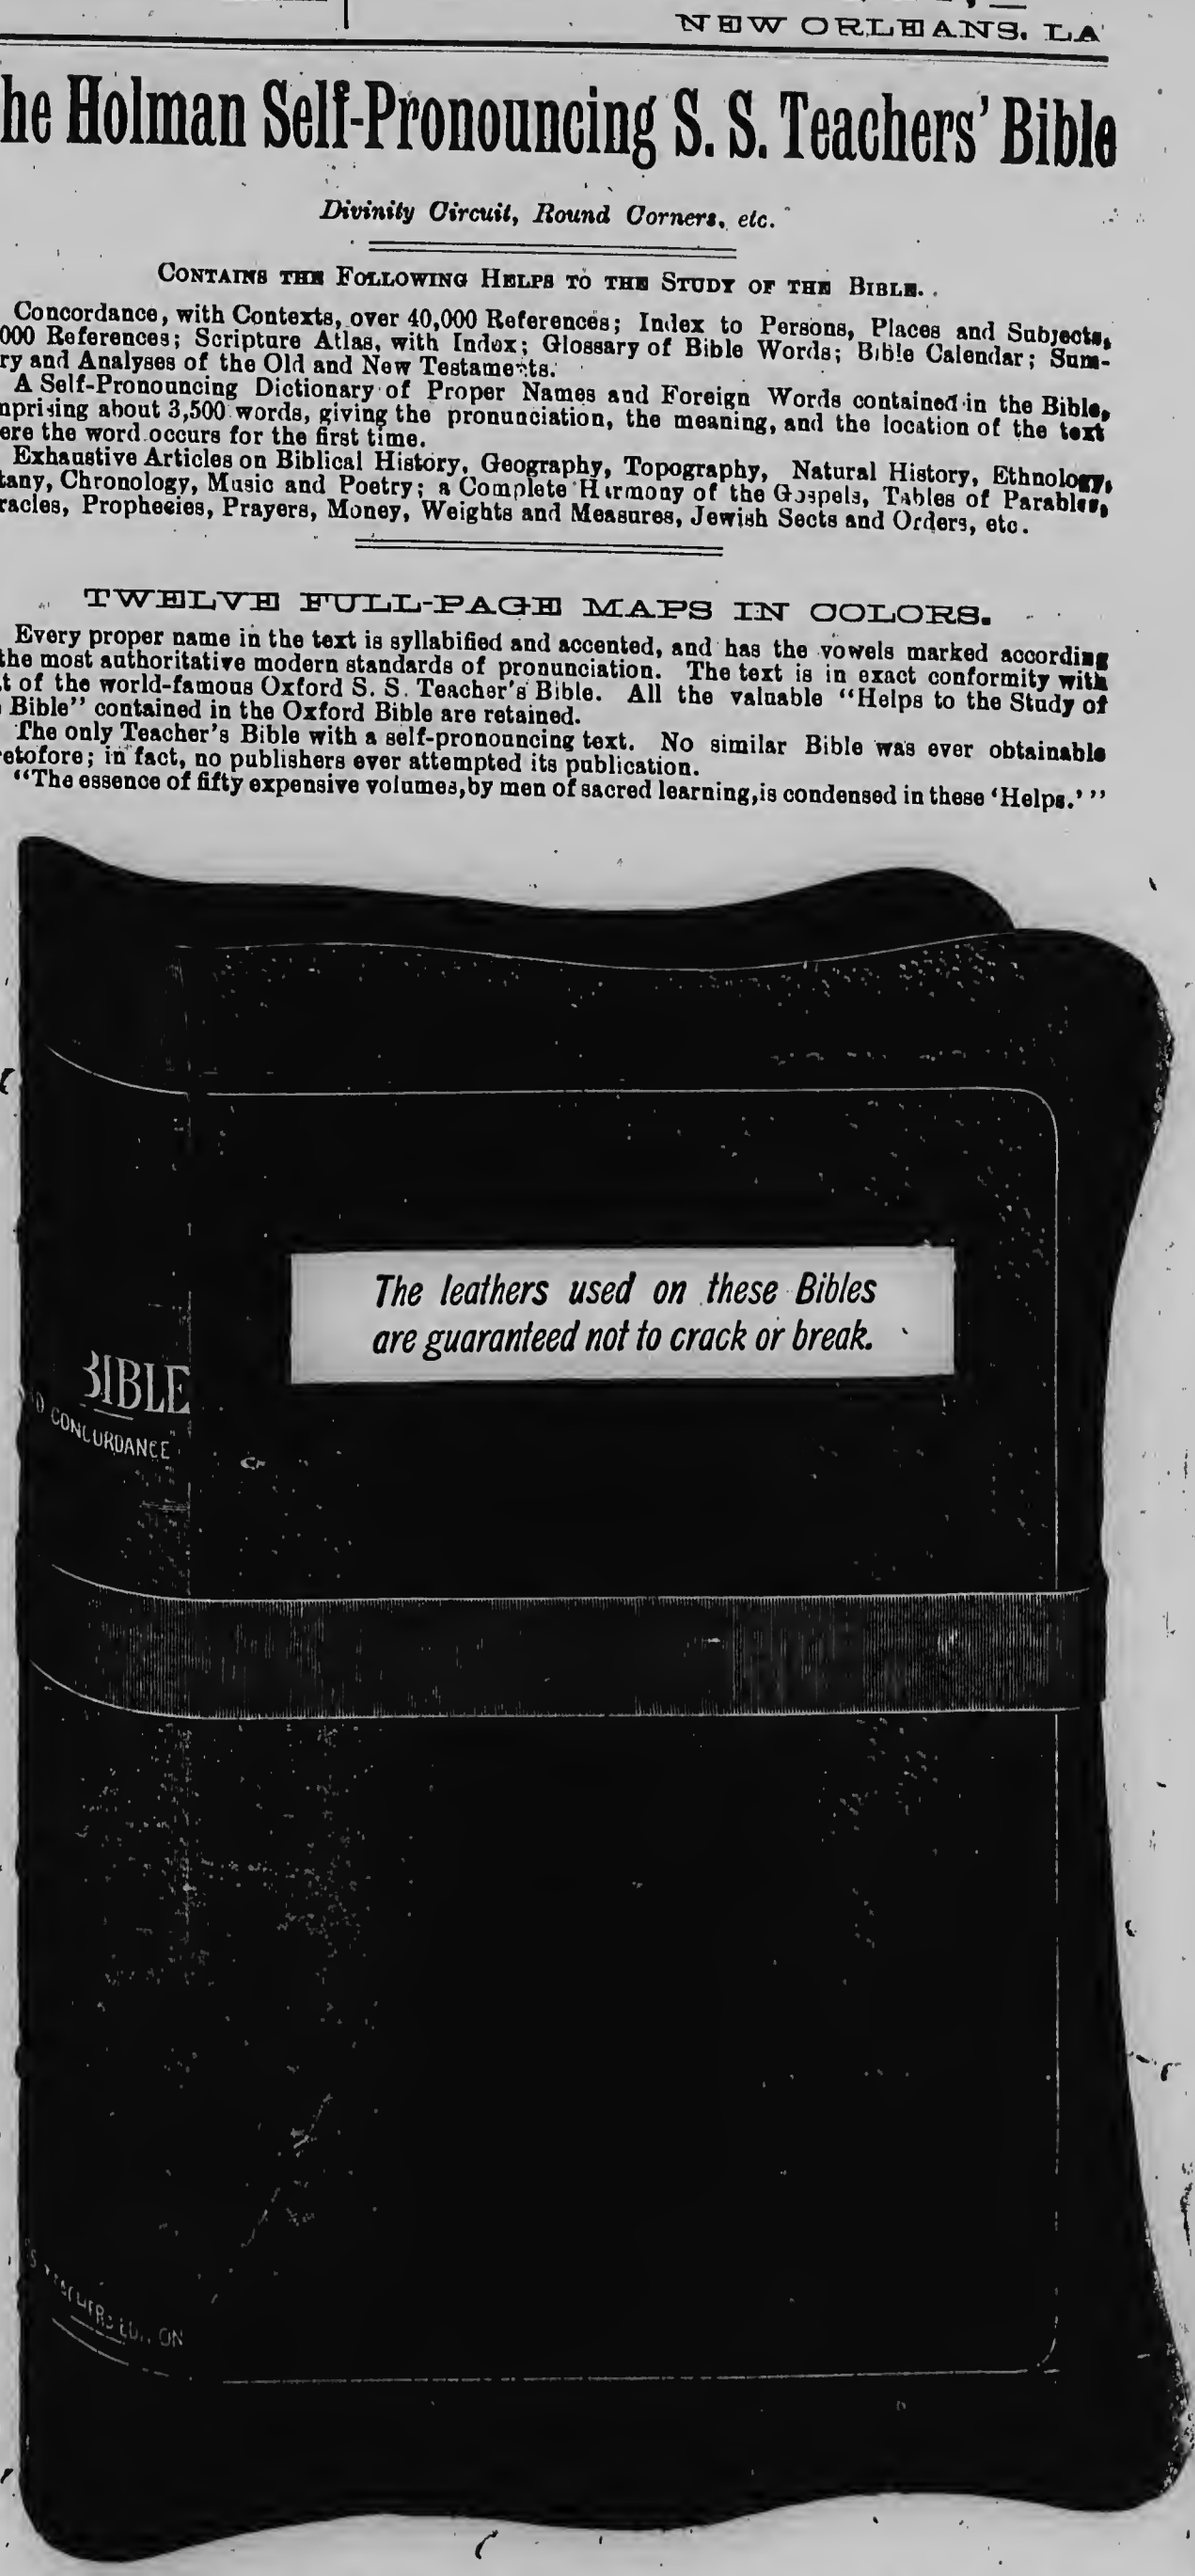
Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"



The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2 35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3 15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1 15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to March, '98 (A little later it will be April, '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

Address REV. W. C. BLACK, 512 Camp St., New Orleans, La.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A fire in Chicago, on March 12, destroyed property valued at half a million dollars.

The California Senate has rejected a bill to exempt the Stanfort University from taxation.

It is Secretary Alger's belief that the standing army of the United States is sufficient for all emergencies that are in sight.

Spitting in the cars within the precincts of the city of Springfield, Mass., is not enough. A new ordinance prohibits any expectorating on the sidewalks.

The African Methodists of Illinois are to build a church at Springfield in memory of Abraham Lincoln. It will be named the Lincoln Memorial Church, and will cost $80,000.

A fearful passenger train wreck occurred at Rome, Ga., on March 13. The engine plunged down a bluff into the river. The wreck caught fire and seven cars were burned. Seven persons were injured.

THROAT DISEASES commence with a Cough, Cold or Sore Throat. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" give immediate and sure relief.

CONSIDER THE COST. Suppose the building is 60x25x20. It will require to paint it, 14 gals. ready-mixed paint at $1.25 per gal.—$17.50.

Or, four 25-lb. kegs of white lead, $6.00; five gals. pure linseed oil, $2.00; four cans tinting colors, 80 cts.; ½ pt. Japan dryer, 15 cts.; ½ pt. turpentine, 5 cts. Total, $9.00—a saving of $8.50 in favor of Pure White Lead without considering its greater durability. Examine the brand (see list).

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve house of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

A crevasse occurred Saturday in the Mississippi river levee, on the Arkansas side, near the town of Marion, in the county of Crittenden, nearly opposite to and a little above Memphis. The flood stage at Memphis has reached the highest mark known in twenty-six years, and in ten days more the water will be down here.

An effort is to be made to effect a permanent amalgamation of the factions which were allied in the support of W. J. Bryan. Several conferences have recently been held in Chicago, at which the situation was discussed and a decision reached that some steps should be taken to prevent the threatened disruption of what may be termed the reform forces.

The G. A. R. Committee, which had been appointed to examine the histories in use in the public schools in the North, has condemned them all. The committee says there is in all of them a general tendency to enlarge upon and exaggerate the soldierly qualities of the Confederates, and to belittle the valor and achievements of those who fought on the other side.

FOREIGN.

It is said that King George of Greece may abdicate in favor of his eldest son, Crown Prince Constantine, Duke of Sparta, whose wife is the sister of the Emperor of Germany.

Although the European situation has appeared less warlike during the past week, there are many evidences that the Cretan difficulty has not yet been satisfactorily arranged, nor has it yet ceased to be a serious menace to the general peace.

The powers are united in principle, but differ as to mode of procedure in the Cretan difficulty. Proposals and objections are being exchanged hourly.

Between 30,000 and 40,000 people crowded the approaches to Trafalgar Square, in London, last Sunday to express sympathy with Greece and Crete and, according to the posters announcing the meeting, to "assist diplomats to make up their minds."

March 14 was Mr. Bayard's last Sunday in London, and he attended services at St. Paul's Cathedral. Archdeacon Sinclair, in the course of his sermon, made eulogistic reference to the American ambassador, and said it was not unfitting even in such a place to offer heartfelt acknowledgements of Mr. Bayard's powerful contribution to the peace of the world.

The news of Spanish reverses in the Philippines and the repulse of Polavieja before Cavite and his resignation in front of the enemy, added, if that were possible, to the gloom and depression that prevail in official circles in Madrid. Six thousand troops that were to have sailed from Cadiz for Havana this week will be sent to Manila, and General Weyler has been asked to send as many troops as he can spare to Spain.

A SIMPLE CATARRH CURE.

I have spent nearly fifty years in the treatment of Catarrh, and have effected more cures than any specialist in the history of medicine. As I must soon retire from active life, I will, from this time on, send the means of treatment and cure as used in my practice, FREE and post-paid, to every reader of this paper who suffers from this loathsome, dangerous and disgusting disease. This is a sincere offer which anyone is free to accept. Address, Prof. J. A. LAWRENCE, 88 Warren St., New York.

DYING HYMN.

BY ALICE CARY.

Earth, with its dark and dreadful ills,
Recedes and fades away!
Lift up your heads, ye heavenly hills!
Ye gates of death, give way!

My soul is full of whispered song—
My blindness is my sight;
The shadows that I feared so long
Are full of life and light.

The while my pulses fainter beat,
My faith doth so abound;
I feel grow firm beneath my feet
The green, immortal ground.

That faith to me a courage gives,
Low as the grave to go;
I know that my Redeemer lives—
That I shall live I know.

The palace walls I almost see
Where dwells my Lord and King!
O grave, where is thy victory?
O death, where is thy sting?

In Memoriam.

MARY TERRAL HAWKINS.

On the tenth of November, 1869, the home of Hon. Samuel H. Terral and his wife "Mary," in Quitman, Miss., was made glad by the coming of a sweet baby girl. What name more suitable than that so worthily worn by the gentle mother! The name borne by Jesus' mother and many other highly favored and sainted women has new sacredness on earth and in heaven because of this family record.

Little Mary's childhood was "bright, healthy, and happy." How could it be otherwise in such a Christian home, with devoted love of parents and brothers lavished on the little maid? Great amiability and love of music were the prominent characteristics of her youth. These were intensified and sanctified as the years fled by only too rapidly.

At eleven years of age she joined our church under the ministry of dear old Bro. Joshua T. Heard, who has so many stars in the crown of his rejoicing. I never heard a whisper of inconsistency in her after life.

In January, 1889, I began a pastorate of four years which embraced the home of Judge and Sister Terral. Miss Mary, then nineteen, was just completing her literary course at E. M. F. College under the presidency of Prof. Saunders. From this institution she graduated with a class of twelve in June, 1890. She then became regularly what she had often been occasionally—the organist and chorister for that devoted band of Methodists in the old church at Quitman. I esteem it one of the greatest privileges of life to have been associated with such a sweet singer in our Israel—one so perfectly unaffected. The depth of tenderness in such threnodies as, "In thy love, O God, have mercy," needs just such spiritual apprehension wedded to so rich and sweet a voice as God had given her. She was always ready cheerfully to sing and play anything her pastor might call for, whether new or old. Not only so, but she would make sacrifices to go elsewhere to aid in revival service when called to such helpful work. The communities at DeSoto, Waynesboro, and other places cherish the memory of her good work among them. On one occasion at Waynesboro the whole audience was thrilled and many penitents rushed to the altar while she sang as none other could, "Since I have been redeemed, I will glory in my Savior's name." A perfect freedom from self-consciousness or desire for display marked all her work of this kind. Simplicity adorned her character at home and everywhere.

One session at "New England Conservatory of Music" (1892-3) completed her musical education so well begun at home and college. Nothing could mar the sweet simplicity of that matchless manner and seraphic voice. Culture only improved them.

In the Autumn of 1891 she gave her heart to Bro. Henry G. Hawkins, of the Mississippi Conference. After her own absence in Boston and his in Japan their fortunes were fully united Nov. 27, 1894. Happiness flowed from this marriage as a stream from its source—widening and deepening continually. Bro. D. P. Bradford was then her pastor. He has kindly furnished by request the beautiful tribute we quote:

Although a fine musician, and possessed of one of the finest voices I ever heard, she was free from ostentation. There was never an effort to display her musical talent when conducting the music at the church. Her distinct enunciation gave a wonderful effect to her singing, and the spirit with which she sang was worshipful.

When she stood beneath the beautiful arch in our little new church at Quitman, and heard the solemn words from our ritual which introduced her into the life of an itinerant preacher's wife, many said, "How will she meet these responsibilities?" The only daughter and sister of the home, she had never known want—every desire of her heart had been gratified. Suffice it to say, she entered the humble parsonage with her devoted husband, and never, perhaps, did Binnsville have a more popular preacher's wife.

On the twenty-seventh of November, 1895, God gave to these blended lives a new trust—a sweet little boy. Very soon thereafter Sister Hawkins was taken with pneumonia. After some months she regained her strength sufficiently to be carried back to the home from which she had so recently gone forth a beautiful bride. Very soon it became visible to her fond husband and loving parents that the bloom of life was fading with each day. When in September, 1896, we laid little Henry Terral, the sweet babe of ten months, in the coffin, she came in to take the last view of her darling's face. Placing a few flowers in the little icy hand, and then giving a good by kiss, she said, "We won't be separated long."

I was at the home often from then till the close of the Conference year. I found that she was growing in grace all the while. So, when I saw the notice of her death, I could only say: "A beautiful character has been translated to the kingdom of God—only for further development."

This witness is true. Much more might be said of the purity of character, the delicacy of touch, the refinement of soul that made earth too rough for such a spirit. She has gently passed into the higher and holier regions, to a mansion prepared for such as she, and for which she was prepared by a patient resignation, even unto death. The afternoon of Feb. 25, 1897, at three o'clock, witnessed the transition. As a babe upon its mother's breast, she fell asleep in Jesus. Where earth ended and heaven began no one could surely tell. Since she has been so fully glorified as well as redeemed, she has the fullness of "joy which can not be expressed, all through His blood and righteousness." No longer needs she to sing:

"Open then the pearly portals,
That unworthy though I be,
I may join the ransomed legions,
There to dwell eternally.
O gentle shepherd, keep me safe
Within thy fold!"

The dear old home in Quitman, where so many weary itinerants have found sweet rest and refreshment for body, mind and spirit, has lost a treasure no wealth or honors could replace. That community, the Mississippi Conference, the world, can never be so bright again, because she is absent. But heaven is richer, nearer, clearer, dearer than before to many of us who knew and loved Mary Terral Hawkins. Comrades in sorrow, let us think of her as among the angels singing that song higher and gladder than they are privileged to chant:

"Redeeming love brought us here above,
Where the night dissolves away
Into pure and perfect day
We are going home to stay."

J. P. DRAKE.

Difficult, but Not Insurmountable.

If there are insurmountable difficulties in the way of the accomplishment of what seems to be duty, then are we freed from responsibility. There is much reason for the conclusion that very grave difficulties must block the way of the six thousand preachers, and of our church at large, in the effort to build a house for Paine Institute. That these difficulties, however, are really and truly insurmountable can hardly be established. One of the first difficulties is that in order to do anything in this matter we must take another collection—for money is necessary. A great many of our people claim to be exceedingly tired of collections. It is fair to say that some of our best people claim to be tired of collections; it is true to say that a great many other people are tired of collections who do not seem to have gotten tired by contributing to them. These have only gotten tired of having their duty in the matter of giving to God's church told to them by faithful preachers.

But surely a preacher will not desist from this work because of the necessity of another collection. Collections have not relative rank; one promise is as sacred as another: our collections are promises concreted. We do not discharge our promise to Paine Institute when we have taken collections for missions, for Sunday-school work, for church extension, and so on. If a man makes two promises, is he freed from the binding force of one when he discharges the other? But we have promised to build a house at Paine Institute, and our church has requested the pastors to take a collection to that end.

So far as the responsibility of the pastors is concerned, it ought never to be forgotten that their principal resource is their constituency—that is to say, our membership. I say their principal resource, for it is to the credit of our preachers that to all calls of our church they are, if not the most liberal, yet as liberal contributors as there are in the church. I believe it will not offend good men when I say that our preachers are, as a rule, the most generous members of our church. So marked is their liberality, indeed, that laymen are not infrequently heard to condemn their pastors for the manner and measure in which they give. In this Paine Institute matter the preachers have been shining examples. They have been noble,

"That the noblenes which lies in other men,
Sleeping, but never dead,
Might rise in majesty to meet their own."

Now, as regards the laymen, the trouble with them is that they are in large measure uninformed as to the claims Paine Institute has upon our church. They are consequently indifferent. Information will quicken them; it will rouse them out of indifference. There are, it is true, those who are actively opposed to this work, and these the preachers have to combat, but their number is not large.

Moreover, we should remember that what we have done has been done against great obstacles, and in the face of an accented and even inflamed condition of the civil and ecclesiastical mind. We have, therefore, some momentum. Because we have gone thus far, we can go further.

Epworth League Echoes.

BY REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD,

President Mississippi State Conference of Epworth Leagues.

"In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle!
Be a hero in the strife."

Listen to the gospel bugle as it sounds the loud "Advance!"

Comrade, gird your armor on, and join the militant host.

"Duty is ours, but consequences belong to God," was a fond expression of the immortal Jackson.

In the strength of Israel's God we can go forth conquering and to conquer, and by the grace which God supplies we shall some day obtain the crown.

Our preaching will be in vain, and our every effort to do good will prove futile, unless we seek for the directing influence and power of the Holy Ghost.

Begin now to pray that God will abundantly bless us as we assemble in our third State Conference at Water Valley, Thursday evening, April 29.

Some pastors have sent names of presidents of their Leagues in answer to request made; others have not yet responded. We hope to hear from all in the next few days.

The programme for our coming Conference will be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE next week. Be sure to read it, and, where practicable, we would suggest that it be furnished the local newspapers for publication. We hope the pastor, or some one of the Leaguers in each community, will attend to this matter.

Only about five weeks until the Conference for 1897 convenes. Brother pastor, will you ascertain at once how many will come from your charge, and send us in the news? Be sure to come yourself. We shall expect you.

Preaching in all the churches of the city Sunday morning, May 2, by prominent ministers of the gospel. Open-air meeting in City Park at 3 P. M., conducted by that talented layman and enthusiastic Leaguer, Judge L. H. Estes, of Memphis. Grand rally, testimony and praise service at 7:30 P. M.

The Board of Directors of the Mississippi Orphans' Home will be present at the Conference, and under their auspices an afternoon session of the League Conference will be held in the handsome chapel at the "Home."

The Young People's Hymnal, recently published by Barbee & Smith, is a capital book for the use of our Leaguers. We hope that all who possibly can will purchase a copy, and be sure to bring it with you to Water Valley. North Mississippians should get the book from Rev. G. W. Buchman, Koscinsko, Miss.

We are glad to note that the Leagues in some places are assisting in furnishing food, etc., to those in distress. Let us heed the cry of those who are suffering from scarcity of food, etc., and send them immediate relief.

"'Who is my neighbor?' 'Tis the fainting poor
Whose eye with want is dim,
Whom hunger drives to sad despair;
Go thou and succor him."

Water Valley, Miss., March 20, 1897.

Correspondence.

From the West.

"As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country." (Prov. xxv, 25.)

We are forcibly reminded of the truthfulness of this passage of Scripture by the weekly arrival of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, bringing to us news of what is being done away back in Mississippi by those whom we love and esteem as brethren in Christ and partakers of a great salvation. We greet the ADVOCATE as we would an old friend whom we had not seen for a long time. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is always bright and full of news, and is improving all the time. Every issue tells us of the brethren of the Mississippi Conference, what they are doing, their trials of faith and victories through Christ; and as we read of these we almost feel as if we were again in Mississippi serving Nicholson mission instead of being out in the great State of Oregon. We have many dear friends in Mississippi whom we love and who will, no doubt, be glad to hear from us.

A correspondence last Fall with a presiding elder in the Columbia Conference induced me to come out to Oregon and take work. After meeting with the brethren of the Mississippi Conference at Port Gibson, last December, we hastened home, and after spending a few days with loved ones, on Dec. 21, 1896, we started for Oregon. As so many of the brethren asked me to write to them, with the consent of the editor, I will do so through the columns of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

We left Meridian, Miss., Dec. 21, 1896, taking a route which led through Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, Oregon. The twenty-sixth of December, 1896, found us in Portland, Ore., where we had to lie over from 8:25 A. M. until 8:50 P. M., when we took the S. P. R. R. for Ashland, Ore., where we had been directed to stop. Arriving at Ashland the following day, we were most hospitably received by Bro. Miles Cary and his excellent wife, who are Southern Methodists to the manor born. But the very evening we arrived at Ashland we were seized with "la grippe," which kept us at Ashland three weeks. But through the attentive care of Bro. and Sister Cary, and the medical skill of Dr. J. K. Reader, we were once more restored to health. During our stay at Ashland we met many of the citizens, and on two occasions had the pleasure of occupying the pulpit of the Congregational Church, preaching to large, attentive and cultured audiences; and the intercourse we had with many of the representative citizens of Ashland was delightful. On Jan. 18, 1897, we left Ashland, taking the stage for Klamath Falls, Ore. After traveling all that evening and night, we arrived at Klamath Falls on the morning of Jan. 19, 1897. Arriving at our post of duty, we found plenty to do, for the flock had been scattered, and we had to look after them. We were most cordially received by the people. We have some excellent people on the work. Up to date my work is progressing nicely. Last Sunday we preached in Klamath Falls for the first time. We preached both morning and evening, and very large audiences greeted us at both services.

The needs of this great Western country are not understood and appreciated by the already overcrowded Conferences. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few." (Luke x, 2.) Multitudes of people out here are thirsting for the gospel. There are many places where the people hear no preaching, and men and women are dying without gospel privileges. Southern Methodism out here is weak, but it is gaining ground rapidly. Of course, there is a prejudice against our church out here, but this bad feeling is giving way, and I think the future prospect of Southern Methodism out here is bright. Our great need out here is this: more men—men of consecration—men who are all willing to meet sinners because they are sinners, and try to lead them to Jesus—men who are willing to go on small salaries and work for the Lord. Why will young preachers persist in knocking at the door of overcrowded Conferences when they are so badly needed out here in this Conference? May God inspire other young men to come out here! We will extend them a warm welcome. I will say that I am pleased with my work and the people; but I have more than I can do. My work embraces enough territory for about two more men. May God send them! Should any young man desire to come West, let him either write to Rev. R. A. Reagan, Rosebury, Ore., or to me.

C. W. HUFF.

Selections

The Love of Humbug.

One of the most surprising traits of human nature is the love of being humbugged, and even more surprising is the anger aroused when the deception is revealed. Through our land are people who pride themselves on being spiritualists and who attend mysterious seances without number to witness the return of the spirit of some departed friend. One would suppose if it could be shown that the medium was simply playing on the superstitious fears and beliefs of his audience, that he was a cheat and a fraud, that every attendant would rejoice and visit his wrath on the deceiver. But such is not the case. These people love to be humbugged and hate the man who opens their eyes to the deception. For some months past, at the Spiritualist Temple in Boston, exhibitions have been given of pretended visitations of spirits from the other world that should have been revolting to the common sense of any man of ordinary intelligence. But in the dim light there sat men and women day after day deluded by the shrewdness of the operator. Some resolute men, however, determined to disclose the fraud. At a given signal, they rushed upon the platform and captured the medium naked in the cabinet with all the paraphernalia about him by which he perpetrated the deceptions. A woman outside was playing on an organ "Nearer, my God, to thee," while the man within was preparing to play the devilish part of deceit and fraud. Yet, most wonderful to relate, the people were not glad of the exposure.

The rich man who was back of the deceivers, giving them his money to continue their work, was very indignant at the revelations of fraud thus made, and blame was visited not on the lying medium, but on the heroic exposers of the wrong.

When people show no more common sense than this, it is a question whether a guardian should not be appointed for them, and whether the perpetrators of the fraud should not be arrested for obtaining money under false pretenses.—Exchange.

The motto Mr. Moody is most fond of runs as follows:

"For the Lord Jesus Christ's sake,
Do all the good you can,
To all the people you can,
In all the ways you can,
As long as ever you can."

Nothing can be more compact, more simple, more effective, than these five lines. It is the epitome of Thomas a Kempis. The maker of these five lines ought to have his memory revered. All we know about these inspired words is that they are "said to be inscribed" on a tombstone in Shrewsbury, in England.—Presbyterian.

"You take a daily paper, do you not?"

"Yes, several of them."

"Why not give them up and save the money?"

"What! Don't you suppose I want to know something of what is going on in the world?"

"How many church papers do you take?"

"None."

"Then am I to understand that you do not want to know what is going on in the church of God?"—The Parish Rubric.

It is easier to think out and to describe a perfect character than to live it. The ideal is always more perfect than the real, for the ideal is the type, and the real is only the variable result of the effort to realize it. Therefore, the characters of fiction are commonly the truer characters, because they are ideal. The ideal and the real in character never were made to coincide except in one, and that one was divine.—Recorder.

TOO LATE.

BY NORAH PARRI.

What silences we keep year after year
With those who are most near to us and dear!
We live beside each other, day by day,
And speak of myriad things, but seldom say
The full, sweet word that lies just in our reach,
Beneath the commonplace of common speech.

Then out of sight and out of reach they go—
Those close, familiar friends who loved us so;
And sitting in the shadows they have left,
Alone with loneliness, and sore bereft,
We think with vain regret of some fond word
That once we might have said, and they have heard.

For weak and poor the love that we expressed
Now seems beside the sad, sweet unexpressed,
And slight the deeds we did, to those undone,
And small the service spent, to treasure won,
And undeserved the praise for word or deed,
That should have overflowed the simple need.

This is the cruel fault of life—to be Full visioned only when the ministry
Of death has been fulfilled, and in the place
Of some dear presence, is but an empty space,
What recollected services can then
Give consolation for the "might have been?"

A Bit of Church History.

TWO VERSIONS.

"In 171 Montanus of Phrygia was the author of the first heresy that amounted to anything. Montanism claimed a second gift of the Holy Ghost, called the Paraclete; that it was a fuller and more perfect gift of the power of God. There is very striking resemblance between Montanism and the second blessing theory."—J. A. Poe, in NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, Feb. 18, '97.

And it came to pass that after reading the above that I was reading Wesley's sixty-first sermon, text: "The mystery of iniquity doth already work" (II. Thess. ii, 7), which every Methodist—nay, every one that names the name of Jesus—ought to read. In this sermon I discovered another version of this same bit of church history.

Ser. LXI., "Sec. 24. And if the state of the church in the very first century was so bad, we can not suppose it was any better in the second. Undoubtedly it grew worse and worse. Tertullian, one of the most eminent Christians of that age, has given us an account of it in various parts of his writings, whence we learn that real internal religion was hardly found—nay, that not only the tempers of the Christians were exactly the same with those of their heathen neighbors (Pride, passion, love of the world, reigning alike in both), but their lives and manners also. The bearing a faithful testimony against the general corruption of Christians seems to have raised the outcry against Montanus and against Tertullian himself when he was convinced that the testimony of Montanus was true. As to the heresies fathered upon Montanus it is not easy to find out what they were. I believe his grand heresy was, the maintaining that 'without inward and outward holiness no man shall see the Lord.'"

Welcome Them.

Many people when a little child appears at the altar say, "Oh, no; she is too young; let her wait until she realizes what she is doing."

Now, I think they have some faint sense of what they are doing, and I say, "Take the little hands in joyful welcome." The younger they give themselves, the happier they are when the Autumn of life comes in the thought that they gave their lives to the Father in early childhood.

I know a lady whose parents' whole ancestry were sincere Christians. Her mother, whose family was a famed one in the M. E. Church of her native State, joined the church when a little child and, living to old age, spent nearly three-quarters of a century in the sanctuary of her choice. This daughter, although proud of her Christian ancestry and deeply attached to her family church, never became a member until middle age. Now, with face turned to the setting sun, with no home ties, and too remote from her church to often visit it, she feels that life is not so happy as it might be. Educated, refined, trained for a good position in the world, instinct with love for her church and the desire to serve it, she yet lacks the opportunity. Now, indeed, she knows that she waited too long before giving her life to the "Lord of all," and that her day of service for him has passed by.

So I say when the little ones come to the altar, remembering who has said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," welcome them, welcome them "in his name." A LADY.

Rev. E. W. Yancey.

Rev. E. W. Yancey was born in Cumberland county, Va., Aug. 20, 1818, and died in Catahoula parish, La., Feb. 13, 1897. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church in 1836; entered the Tennessee Conference in 1838; moved to Louisiana in 1839, and traveled the Little River circuit in 1840. Loss of health caused him to discontinue at the close of the year. He entered the Louisiana Conference in 1850; was discontinued in 1852, and readmitted in 1861. A clear, earnest preacher, he often preached with great unction and power. Many souls were led to Christ and many Christians were strengthened in faith and quickened in zeal by his ministry. He was a genuine Methodist of the old type, deeply spiritual, and of strong, steady faith; a tender, sweet-spirited disciple of his Lord. He was a superannuate for many years, and suffered great bodily pain, but was patient and resigned to the will of God.

His death was a fitting close to such a life; no clouds in his spiritual sky; no doubts or fears disturbed him. He had preached salvation through Christ, and rejoiced in it nearly fifty-nine years, and it cheered and sustained him in death, for his end was peace. J. D. HARPER.

Resolution.

It has pleased God to take to himself our dear sister and friend, the wife of Rev. H. G. Hawkins. We, the committee from this, his late charge, express to him the sorrowing sympathy of the entire neighborhood. We pray God to sanctify his sorrow, causing it to bring forth fruit in his life and in the lives of others. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth."

Boarding Home for Working-Women.

UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE WOMAN'S PARSONAGE AND HOME MISSION SOCIETY OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

(Read at the annual meeting of the W. P. and H. M. Society, March 0, 1897.)

When we consider the number of young women and girls who are among the bread-winners and wage-earners of to-day—our own girls, so to speak, as well as many who have been forced by circumstances to leave their homes in other places, and whose lot is now cast among us; girls on small salaries, a few with larger income, but all alike deprived of the safeguard of the home influence they so much need; many exposed to temptation; girls as loved and as carefully reared as many of our own, whose mothers are compelled to have them leave them, but whose prayers follow them wherever they are to-day—when we reflect upon all this, is there a person among us this morning who will question the need of such a Home as we have undertaken?

The various religious denominations of our city have many noble charities under their charge, and are rich in good works, but we are glad it is the thought of the Methodist women to try to give a home to the working-women.

In October, 1896, the Executive Board of our society met in Carondelet Street Church to plan and to pray for this new undertaking. Four churches were represented: Carondelet, Louisiana Avenue, Rayne Memorial, and Dryades Street. Mrs. W. W. Carre was elected president. Those who have known her long, as well as we who for the first time work under her guidance, know how wise was the choice.

The Home is located at 1119 Melpomene street, and is under the management of a Board of Thirty, fourteen being the Executive Board, and the remaining sixteen were chosen from the local societies of the different Methodist Churches of New Orleans.

Since last October we have held five regular monthly meetings, besides the various called meetings—all well attended; and our women do not lessen in enthusiasm and zeal as time passes, and our hopes and plans do not always meet our expectations. Our experience has been that of every other new undertaking, whether it be a business project or some benevolent object. Every work has much to contend against as well as to contend for. Obstacles unknown and unthought of have been met, and we have not yet been able to conquer all of them. Our Minute Book shows faithful work in the past five months; and with such women as Mesdames Carre, Lyons, Moss and T. H. Holmes, we are by no means disheartened. We would not come to you with a tale of woe this morning, but when we ask you to rejoice with us, we ask also for a bit of sympathy, and beg that you bear with us if we take a few moments not intended for us. If we bring a good report, may we not tell of some difficulties? It may encourage some of you, my sisters, if you are ever numbered with a Board of Managers. Not only were we at the beginning financially embarrassed, but at the end of five months we are embarrassed financially. Then we have had to learn so much in the school of experience.

Firstly, we had no furniture for our Home. Two or three wagon-loads were offered as a loan. With hearts full of gratitude we paid the cartage, and furnished our rooms, but at once found we must make a change, as most of it was sadly in need of repair. With an empty house came a fresh embarrassment. Our matron concluded to leave us. She had offered her services in exchange for her room and board, but she grew weary in well-doing, and wishing a change of scenery, etc., she begged leave to resign. Then there came resignations from our Board of Thirty. All this, and we only five months old! But these were light afflictions. Think of having one's very name against one! Time and again we have all heard, "There's nothing in a name." Many of us wrote it in our copy-books, and parsed it in our grammars. We believed it in our young days, but not now. When the author wrote that he was talking sentiment, not business. His matter-of-fact Anne did not belong to a Parsonage Board; hence, there was no way for him to learn of such rebuffs and revilings as have been our portion for choosing the name, "Home for Working-Women." Some folks object to being called "women;" others to the word "working." A Picayune representative, in reporting our work, once spoke of those for whom the home is intended as "inmates." "Oh! not that word," some persons objected; "it sounds too much like an asylum."

There we were, with two of our choice expressions assailed—"inmates" and "working-women." We compromised; we no longer say "inmates," but "boarders." Like Paul, we would be all things to all men—and women—if thereby we could gain some, but to our mind the name "working-women" means too much to be changed. Visit our Home, and you will see "Working-Women's Home" in plain letters, or it would have been if the sign-board had been large enough. So we mean to keep our name, until some day even those who now object will see the dignity of it, and be proud to be known as working-women.

Notwithstanding some of our ups and downs, our trials without and within, we are sure we have much for which we can thank God and take courage. Only give us your prayers and your aid; stand by us and help us in our work. I speak to our societies at large, and to our Board of Thirty in particular. Let us talk of it in season and out of season, if need be; let us work more and more earnestly and faithfully, and our Home will be a success.

We are pleasantly situated. The house contains ten or twelve rooms, is in good repair, and is at present attractively furnished (thanks to our president, Mrs. Carre, through whose influence we have secured the loan of many articles, such as beds and bedding, which we so much needed). We have received many donations and loans from friends of our society; we are free from debt; our rent-bills are paid regularly (thanks to our Central Board and to Mr. Bloom's liberal donation of ten dollars per month). We have a most efficient matron in charge, and our Home is ready for occupancy.

It remains with you and with me, fellow-workers, what shall be the future of our undertaking. A success truly if we stand together and try to make it so. Neglect no opportunity to talk for us. We can all help advertise our work, to explain its object to those for whom it is intended. Remember it in your shopping expeditions, or wherever God gives us a chance to say a word for the Master, for truly it is for him who said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

Do we feel we work alone? Never, my sisters. The promise is to His followers to-day as sweet and clear as to the disciples of old, "Lo, I am with you alway." H. HOOVER,

Mrs. J. N. Chatfield: "Our Woman's Board of Missions is so anxious to complete the 'Belle Bennett chair' with our Easter offering. Send a bugle note through the ADVOCATE. Our year is rapidly closing: Let us press the work on all lines. Miss McNemar is doing well. Mrs. Campbell's visit to California will preclude her visit to our Conference. I regret it so much. Miss Lula Ross, from Brazil, will be 'at home' to attend the annual meeting of W. B. M., and I hope my sister also. Let much prayer ascend to the throne of God for our annual meeting."

Miss Belle Bennett, who was financial agent to raise funds for the Scarritt Bible and Training-school, labored earnestly for five years ending May, 1895, and is now working under appointment of W. B. M. as one of the agents at large; also officially and largely connected with P. and H. M. Society. Dr. Potts, who was one of the Missionary Secretaries, in an address at the laying of the corner-stone of the training-school said: "The idea of establishing such an institution under the auspices of the M. E. Church, South, was born in the brain of a young, but magnanimous Christian lady. She saw the need of special training for much of the work of women at home and abroad. To her discerning mind that was an open vision, and it grieved her sorely that there was no place in all our Southland where such training could be had. The thought burned within her heart until she was compelled to give it utterance. It met with favor far beyond the lot of most new enterprises. It was soon endorsed by the Woman's Missionary Society, and early thereafter by the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South. ....The Lord had signally prepared the church, as well as the author of it, for this new movement.

"The originator of the enterprise was appointed financial agent to raise funds with which to start it. There was not a dollar in the treasury; the mind of the church respecting it was not known; a female fiscal agent with connectional relations was a thing unknown to our church; yet, with a heart strong in the Lord and in the conviction of a great duty, she went forward, and her success under such circumstances has been so phenomenal as to convict of blindness those who do not see that God has been with her," etc.

Miss Bennett, in her report to W. B. M., 1895: "And now, out of the love which I bear the institution—the embodiment to me of the latest and broadest development of the great principle upon which our 'woman's work for woman' was founded—I beg your increased interest and support for it.....Finish the chair which you have projected, not for the name which is on it, but for the cause which it represents, and the great need for it.....Let it (Training-school) be made indeed a royal monument to the consecration and liberality of our Southern Methodist sisterhood."

Mrs. Trueheart in report, 1896: "We owe it to ourselves to endow this chair without delay."

With great pleasure and hearty endorsement we also quote from Miss Helm, Our Homes, March, 1896: "We are glad to give from Miss Gibson the notice of the election of Mrs. Mary L. Hargrove, of Mississippi, to fill the place of our lamented Miss Holding, for we greatly admire Mrs. Hargrove. Besides in other ways being eminently fitted for the place, her enthusiasm and spirituality will draw to her the hearts of the young women of our church, who will receive from her loving heart the inspiration that will lead them to see that the service of the Lord lies in the ways of pleasantness.

"Most sincerely we wish that we could awaken the young womanhood of our church to the need of training for the service of God, and that they would seek it in this beautiful home and school for Christian workers, where they will find every comfort and the sweetest association. Give the Lord not only the talents that he has given you, but the increase that preparation gives, that he may find you a faithful servant and worthy of greater blessings. During the Easter services we hope that all our women will give freely according to their ability to aid the school, but we would suggest that they do so through their connection with the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, that has this work in charge. We deem this the best and most regular way to send their contributions."

A gift of $25,000 endows a chair, which the donor can name. Let us see what the Mississippi Conference has done for Belle Bennett chair, and otherwise, for the Training-school. Miss Bennett and Mrs. Wightman's reports from June 1, 1889, to June 1, 1894: Belle Bennett chair, $54.74. Total specials other than this, $549.50. Grand total, $2,221.43. Miss Billingsley, 1895: Nothing for Belle Bennett chair; total receipts, $13. 1896, Belle Bennett chair, $22.04; total receipts, $84.04. From June, 1896, to December, 1896, total receipts, $65.76. Total for Belle Bennett chair, $76.78.

Let all remember this Training-school is not exclusively for foreign missionaries, but for all whose ultimate aim is soul saving everywhere, including the home circle. We trust that all auxiliaries of both W. F. M. Society and P. and H. M. Society that do not observe the Easter service will contribute to this endowment. Will not every church member, and others, esteem it an honor to aid in this much-needed enterprise?

Let every auxiliary, adult as well as juvenile, make wise choice of delegates to the annual meeting. And don't forget or neglect the duty of sending reports and items to the Conference editor for the columns in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MRS. E. D. JONES.

A Letter to the Children.

DEAR CHILDREN: This letter is intended for the Juvenile Missionary Societies of the North Mississippi Conference who have contributed boxes of clothing for the use of my school. Boxes have been received from the following places: Pine Mountain, Miss.; Granada, Miss.; Pleasant Grove, Miss.; Verona, Miss. Notice has been given that three others are on the way from West Point, Miss.; Baldwyn, Miss.; Columbus, Miss. The three last mentioned have not yet reached me, but I expect them soon.

I wish that I had leisure to write a long letter to each society, and it seems that I could, as there are only seven; but when you remember that I am teaching—and studying, too—every day, I am sure you will excuse me for writing only one letter.

If you could have seen the bright, happy faces of the children, and have heard their exclamations of delight, such as, "Que buena, que bonita, que hermosa" (How good, how pretty, how handsome), you would not need any other proof of their appreciation of your gifts. Some of them have never had such nice clothes in all of their lives before, and you should see how happy they are. The children say, "Please tell those 'mines en los Estados Unidos, muchimos gracias' (many thanks) for their kindness." I also wish to thank you very many times. Quite a number of children have been enabled to attend school, and Sunday-school also, who could not have done so without this help.

I have sent pictures of my school to all of the societies from whom boxes have been received, and will send copies to the others soon. May God bless you all! With love,

Your friend,

VIOLA BLACKBURN.

San Luis Potosi, Mexico, March 10, 1897.

Selections.

Were You at Church?

The habit of absenting one's self from the Sunday services of the church is one very easily made. Sometimes it is occasioned by sickness; very often some small excuse, some grudge against a member, some resentment at a fellow member's fault, is the occasion. Jesus will be there, even if an unworthy member is present! Jesus may be present especially to meet and forgive that unworthy member; and who are we that we judge a brother or a sister? We must be careful not to repeat Thomas' error, or we may also—we almost certainly will also—repeat his unbelief. If we do not, like Thomas, come back again to the place where Jesus meets his disciples, how can we expect to meet him? At least, let no one be so jealous for the honor of Christ and his church that he shall dishonor both by avoiding both.—The Independent.

Think of living, even here on earth, in a company, a community, composed of the one thousand best, noblest, most lovely, most refined people to be gathered from all lands—every life a song, every face bearing the beauty of Christ, every character rich with the fruits of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, goodness; every spirit full of the best human life sweetened by grace. It would be supreme happiness to be one of such a company. Heaven will be far better, for it will have in it the best of all ages—not as they are here, with earthly limitations, only fragments of beauty appearing in them, marred too by sinful things and human frailties—but made perfect in love, in holiness, in all Christly life. —J. R. Miller, D. D.

Men's minds work differently. They vary in gifts as well as in attainments. Some are slow, plodding, painstaking, methodical and persistent. Others who possess unusual intuitive perceptions are quick to discern and swift to execute. The genius excites admiration and wonder, but he is not always the safest guide or the most abiding influence. His conclusions are rapidly formed, but are not generally weighed with that balancing judgment which characterizes the deeper, but slower and more careful, investigator. There is a place in the church as well as in the world for both types of thinkers and workers. God, who delights in variety, uses all kinds and degrees of talent in his service.—Presbyterian.

Thank God every morning when you get up that you have something to do that day which must be done whether you like it or not. Being forced to work and forced to do your best, will breed in your temperance, self-control, diligence, strength of will, content, and a hundred virtues which the idle will never know.—Charles Kingsley.

There are certain exercises of the soul which have great effect to trace its weakness and bring us up to good spiritual health. They are recommended by the Great Physician. One is this: "Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you."

We should so live and labor in our time that what came to us as seed may go to the next generation as blossom, and what came to us as blossom may go to them as fruit. This is what we call progress.

A dying soldier, near the Seven Dials, once said to me when I asked him what he did when too weak to pray, "Sir, when I am too weak to cling to Him, I ask Him to cling to me."—Bishop Thorold.

Humility is a beautiful grace. Never put yourself before other people. Let them put you forward. Never, never boast of what you could have done or could do. Self-praise goes but a little way.

There is no right without a parallel duty, no liberty without the supremacy of the law, no high destiny without earnest perseverance, no greatness without self-denial.—Lieber.

The more the diamond is cut the brighter it sparkles, and in what seems hard dealing God has no end in view but to perfect his people's graces.—Dr. Guthrie.

To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,
Editor Christian Advocate.

MUL-EN-OL is the greatest of all antiseptic dressings. Is a sovereign remedy for healing flesh wounds on man or beast.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. M. Wyatt, Ripley, Miss., March 13, 1897: "We closed, on Feb. 25, at New Albany a profitable, precious meeting. Bro. H. P. Crowe, of Cleveland, was with us. Our people were greatly strengthened and comforted by his strong, pointed, spiritual preaching. God was in the clear message he so earnestly delivered. Sins were pardoned, souls rejoiced and the church membership was lifted by the power of the gospel upon a higher plane. A revival is delightful in its association, inspiring and encouraging in its reachings and touchings, and inestimably beneficial in its results."

Rev. W. M. Williams, Gallman, Miss., March 13, 1897: "Well, Mr. Editor, my wife has been trying ever since we came here to get me to write to the ADVOCATE how kindly we were received and how nicely they were treating us. But somehow I never did like to brag on people and compliment them unless I could do so and tell the truth. I have been waiting for them to begin to do something before I wrote what wonderful things these extremely kind and generous people were doing. I can say for Gallman circuit that I am very much encouraged. Why? Because I find a great many servants of Christ here who are ready to help their pastor in everything. They had, through the persistent efforts of Bro. I. B. Robertson, nearly completed a much-needed addition to the parsonage. They have since completed it. We have now a nice, comfortable parsonage at Gallman. The good ladies are furnishing it nicely. They have finished paying for the organ at Gallman which was bought four years ago, and upon which they owed a balance of nearly fifty dollars. They have also paid the full assessment for district parsonage. I am satisfied they will pay up all they owe this year. It will take work and self-denial to pay up four back debts and all current expenses for this year; but I believe they will do it. We have had several additions both by profession and certificate."

Rev. G. H. Galloway, P. C., Meridian, Miss., March 13, 1897: "We have had a splendid meeting here at East End, Meridian; Bro. and Sister Hall preaching. The meeting lasted a little over two weeks, during which time we had about as unfavorable weather as I ever saw—cold, snow, sleet and rain. With all this, however, the interest from first to last was profound. Over one hundred were converted and sanctified—some of the brightest I ever saw, testifying, while the shine of God's love was on their faces, to what God did for them then and there. A remarkable case is found in the sanctification of Bro. D. G. W. Ellis, one of the clearest thinkers of our Conference, who publicly renounced all that he had said against entire sanctification, and declared, with a glorious smile upon his face, that God had sanctified his soul. Bro. Woodward, I understand, got the experience during the meeting. One of the truest evidences of the thoroughness of the work is found in the fact that the work has gone out from East End to Central and other portions of the city. Bro. Featherstun has for three weeks been carrying on a meeting, with about twenty-five conversions, and among his most efficient workers were many who were sanctified during my meeting at East End. We have had a good many conversions since the meeting. About thirty-five have joined the church. We expect soon to build a parsonage; have a part of the money raised. God has graciously blessed us, and we expect even greater things than these."

MY FIRST CIRCUIT.

It was my lot to be brought up in a rural community with all disadvantages common to such a life. My educational advantages were very limited, for I was largely taught by a pine-knot light, and that without a tutor.

I attended my first Annual Conference as an applicant for admission on trial in the traveling connection, in December, 1891, which was held at Macon, Miss. Bishop Hendrix presided. (The first Bishop I ever saw.) It was a real good Conference, and I thought the North Mississippi Conference the grandest body of men I ever looked upon, and so I think yet. There were fifteen applicants for admission on trial; and what a trial it has been to some of us our Father in heaven only knows. It was a bright, manly looking class, and all of them older than myself, except one, who was not admitted on account of his youthfulness. Twelve of the large class were admitted, and, almost to my surprise, I was one of those. After five days of prayer, songs, sermons, new scenes and strange faces the Conference came together for the last time during the session. Everyone who has attended an Annual Conference knows how intensely interesting the last meeting is. Trembling and almost breathless with anxiety, I took my seat in the anxious throng and listened to the reading of the appointments, which was all new to me. I was read out to the Bezona circuit. My heart sank, for the circuit was terra incognita, and besides the dismal swamp of miasmas, fevers, floods, and wild beasts of prey of megatherium proportions came to my simple mind. But, in the name of my Master, I went forth, trusting in his promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world;" which promise he has most surely kept and performed. Bless his holy name! I made preparations and started for my new work as soon as possible. I went by private conveyance, with a wagon loaded with household effects, for my mother was with me at that time. When I reached the bounds of my work, Jan. 3, 1892, the Yazoo river was rising and consequently filling up all the lakes, sloughs and bayous connected with it. Here my trouble began—such trouble as I had never experienced before, though accustomed to sorrow. I reached Four Mile Lake only to find it an impassable barrier in my way. There I was alone in a strange country with no home and, as I feared, no friend. When you consider that I was just out of my teens and very timid, you can better appreciate my feelings. I got permission to pack my things away in a cotton pen of a Baptist brother until the water had risen so a boat could come up the lake, which was some time. When the boat came I found it could not land where I had my goods, so they had to be moved down the lake nearly a mile. The Baptist brother of whom I have spoken very kindly offered to assist me in moving down the lake, which had to be done on water. He secured two small dugouts and a little batteau, tagged them together, put my things on them. He, his son and myself got aboard and launched out on our improvised craft. When we started the lake was smiling placidly beneath the gentle rays of the rising sun; but we had not gone far till the dashing waves threatened to submerge our frail bark. The brother saw the danger and started for the shore, when suddenly he called out, "She is sinking," and jumped as far as he could towards the timber which stood far out in the water, climbed up on a tree, and told his son and me to do as he did. We were now fast going down; but I refused to leave the boats, for I was very heavily clad, having on an overcoat, arctics and leggings. Before I could hardly realize what had happened everything had floated off but one large box and a cooking stove, neither of which would float. I saw my danger, so I began to call aloud for help, and I called on him who alone can help in time of trouble. He heard my voice. He answered my prayer. The same voice that spoke to the sea, "Peace, be still," commanded my boats and they stopped sinking. The same power that caused the axe of the son of the prophets to swim caused us to walk, as it were, on water. In the strength of the Lord we were saved from a watery grave. Well, we will not call this a miracle, for some say the day of miracles is past; but one thing I know: the day for God to hear and answer prayer has not and will never pass. More anon.

SMITH—Sister JULIA ANN SMITH (nee Holloway) was born near Duck Hill, in what is now Montgomery county, Miss., July 23, 1851. She was converted in September, 1873, under the ministry of Dr. A. M. Barrington, at Enon Camp Meeting; joined the M. E. Church, South, and ever lived a consistent member. On the twenty-third of December, 1873, she was happily married to George L. Smith, who settled near Bluff Springs Church, in Carroll county, in which church she held her membership until her death, which occurred Jan 6, 1897.

Sister Smith was of a kind and social disposition, which made it a great pleasure to visit at her house, especially for the weary itinerant preacher, as all former pastors at Bluff Springs will remember. She filled her place in all the responsible positions to which she was called as wife, mother, friend, and Christian, with honor and fidelity.

May the Lord give comfort to the bereaved husband and five children left to mourn her loss!

JOHN RITCHIE, Pastor.

LIPSCOMB—MRS. ANN ELIZA LIPSCOMB (nee Norwood) was born Sept. 17, 1813; married March 8, 1832, and died in Baton Rouge, La., Feb. 4, 1897, aged eighty-three years four months and seventeen days.

Sister Lipscomb professed religion and joined the church when young, and from that moment till death lived the life of a consistent Christian. For a number of years she was, owing to bodily affliction, prevented from regular attendance on the services of God in his sanctuary, but was always "in the spirit" of her Master "on the Lord's day."

Her disease was such that she was not permitted to leave any dying testimony; but her godly profession and religious life for so many years is indisputable evidence of her inheritance in heaven. She leaves two sons and two daughters and a number of grandchildren behind, but "they mourn not as those without hope."

The man who would run from a lion greets ill health with a smile, and yet he has more chance of escaping from the lion than he has from the effects of ill health. The lion's work is quickly done and the man is out of his misery. Many a victim of consumption would be glad if the end came sooner. His life of misery and suffering can hardly be called real life. He is half alive, at best. The fact that he might have been perfectly well and strong makes his trouble all the harder to bear. The fact that he can be perfectly well and strong again seems a hard fact for him to believe. Hundreds of men whose lives have been given up by physicians have been brought back to health and strength by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Its good effect is felt almost immediately. It brings back lost appetite, soothes and strengthens the nerves, fills the blood full of richness and vitality. It stimulates digestion, clears out the liver, and makes assimilation easy and perfect. It has a remarkably cleansing and strengthening effect on the lungs, and some of its most remarkable cures have been in the line of throat, lung and bronchial affections. It is an absolutely sure remedy for indigestion in any form, for nervousness, sleeplessness, debility from overwork, and wasting away of the tissues. This marvelous remedy can be obtained from any honest druggist. Do not accept a substitute.

The greatest family medical book that was ever published is now being distributed absolutely free. This is Dr. Pierce's "Common Sense Medical Adviser," nearly 700,000 copies of which have been sold at the regular price of $1.50. It is now sent free to any one who will send 21 one-cent stamps, to cover the cost of mailing only. If wanted in handsome, durable French cloth binding, send 10 cents extra (31 cents in all) to pay the bare cost of binding and mailing to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as an automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, tupper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot bemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $20.50, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to May, '98, and send us $18.50 additional, and we will send you the machine.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

Some rare perfume in a vase of clay
Pervades it with a fragrance not its own,
So when Christ dwelleth in a mortal soul,
All heaven's own sweetness seems about it thrown.
—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

A man can run into debt, but he generally comes out of it at a walk.

It is of no use to pray for your daily bread unless you also work for it.

Yes, work is a good thing, but it needs to be directed by thought and love.

Some people give largely, but their giving does not cost anything; they give advice.

It is not more talent you need, but grace to make a right use of the talent you have.

It is not wise to presume too much upon the forbearance of even your very best friends.

If you want your soul illuminated with the light of truth, keep its windows open and keep them clean.

Many a young convert imagines himself a moral giant until temptation comes; then he finds out that he is a weakling.

"An ounce of mother is worth a pound of clergy."—Spanish Proverb. Well, that depends upon the quality of the mother.

It is hard to decide which does the greatest harm—the professed atheist that lives like a Christian or the professed Christian that lives like an atheist.—Baptist Standard.

It is a mistake to say that any preacher or teacher fails because he knows too much. The trouble is that he does not know how to impart his knowledge to others.

If grumblers get to heaven, our loving heavenly Father will doubtless provide them a corner to themselves out of earshot of any other room in the house of many mansions.

An epistle of Christ written so clearly and plainly that all mankind may read it and be uplifted by it; that is what every Christian ought to be. Oughtness and actuality, however, are not always the same.

If you want to be like your Savior, you must take a deep interest in the people about you, no matter what sort of people they are. The more you read the Gospels the more fully you will relize the truth of this.

It is not what we read, but what we remember that makes us learned. It is not what we intend, but what we do that makes us useful. It is not a few faint wishes, but a life-long struggle that makes us valiant. —H. W. Beecher.

The Sabbath.

[Having made a talk some weeks since before the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting on the subject of Sabbath Observance, we were by unanimous vote of the Preacher's Association requested to publish the substance of our remarks in our editorial columns. The following article was written in compliance with this request. What is here presented, however, is very different in form and phraseology from our talk at the Preachers' Meeting. To present our remarks in full would require much space.]

The fundamental law of the Sabbath is, of course, contained in the Decalogue; but for a proper interpretation of that law we must have recourse, not to the dogmas of pharisaism, ancient or modern, or to the theorizings of latter-day ethical philosophers, but to the words and deeds of the incarnate Son of God.

No part of the Sinaitic code has been more egregiously misinterpreted than the command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." One extreme of misinterpretation is represented by the ancient Pharisees. With these our Savior was in constant conflict on this question. The conflict began during the first year of his ministry and continued to the close. Six different instances are recorded in which he was regarded by the Pharisees as having been guilty of flagrant desecration of the Sabbath. One of these consisted in plucking and eating ears of corn by his disciples as they journeyed through a field on the Sabbath. In the other five cases he performed miracles of healing. The Pharisees inquired why these people could not wait until the next day to be healed; and there was a show of reason in the inquiry. Not one of the five was in danger of immediate death. The man with the withered hand, the blind man, the palsied man, the man with the dropsy and the woman with an infirmity of eighteen years' standing could all have waited a few hours longer without any very great detriment. His disciples would not have starved if they had abstained from food until the next day. This gave force to the criticisms of the Pharisees. Let it be remembered that the Pharisees were regarded as the most religious people of that day. They prayed and fasted more than any other class. They paid more to the church than others. They were more strict in the observance of every part of the elaborate ceremonialism of the Mosaic law. Viewed from the standpoint of that generation, Jesus of Nazareth was at a great disadvantage in thus running counter to the dogmas, the traditions and the usages of these doctors of the law.

In his reply to these criticisms our Savior vindicates himself by showing that his critics have simply misunderstood and misrepresented the law of the Sabbath. A flood of light is thrown upon the whole question in his oft-quoted canon, "The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath." The Sabbath was "made for man," i. e., for man's benefit. Therefore works of necessity and mercy, such as he and his disciples had wrought on the Sabbath, were not only not violations of the law of the Sabbath, but were in perfect keeping with its spirit and purpose. We have here the law of the Sabbath presented by the Master himself. Works of necessity and mercy may be performed by us as they were performed by our Lord.

The trend of the present day, however, is in a direction diametrically opposite to the literalism of the ancient Pharisees. The so-called humanitarianism of this age says: "The Sabbath was made for man; therefore have Sunday concerts, Sunday theatres and circuses, Sunday excursions, and Sunday pleasures—jaunts of any and every kind." This would be a legitimate inference, if man were only a physical being. But such is not the case. Man is dual in his nature, composed of soul and body; and his spiritual nature is his highest nature. It is for this part of his nature chiefly that the Sabbath was instituted, as is implied in the very phraseology of the original command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Now, it requires only the merest modicum of intelligent observation to enable one to perceive that the conversion of the Sabbath into a holiday in the modern sense of that term would result in irretrievable disaster to the spiritual interests of humanity. In order to test the efficacy of any ethical theory we should in thought make it universal. Suppose, then, the Sabbath were universally observed as a holiday, what would follow? The pulpits of Christendom would be silenced, the sanctuaries would become habitations for owls and bats, the Sabbath-school would become a thing of the past, the Bible would soon cease to command the reverence of the world, and all mission work would speedily come to an end. In short, the world would take a leap into the spiritual darkness of ages that antedate the incarnation of the Son of God. Thus it is seen that reverence for the day of God is essential to the perpetuity of Christianity. May we all have grace given us from above to enable us to observe this holy day in accordance with the beneficent purposes of its author, avoiding latitudinarianism on one hand and pharisaic literalism on the other!

A Noble Appeal.

As the representatives of the three hundred thousand women who compose the W. C. T. U. of the United States, Miss Frances E. Willard, president, and Miss Katherine L. Stevenson, secretary, have written a letter to the governors of all the States asking their influence in securing legislation prohibiting "the reproduction, by means of the kinetoscope, or kindred instruments, of the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight, or of any like exhibition at any future time." They have also addressed a letter to President McKinley, invoking his aid in securing the passage of an act of Congress prohibiting such exhibitions in the District of Columbia and in all the Territories. From their letter to the governors, we quote as follows:

"Preparations upon the largest scale are being made for invading, not alone the cities, but the villages and hamlets of the land, with the life-like representations of this degrading spectacle. We feel that if this should be allowed to go on the influence of the fight upon the comparative few who witnessed it in person would be small compared with the wholesale exhibition. Especially do we fear its effects upon the youth of our land, as well as upon the fathers and mothers.

"We have already petitioned President McKinley to use his authority to prevent this in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and we are sending this letter to the governors of the various States. May we not hope for your personal co-operation and earnest indorsement? We learn through the newspapers that Massachusetts and Illinois have already introduced bills prohibiting these exhibitions. We trust these are only the preludes to a great chorus of protests which shall arise from every State in our nation."

It is to be hoped that this appeal will bear immediate fruit. The prize fight itself, which has been outlawed in every State except Nevada, is less demoralizing than are these kinetoscopic exhibitions. Any governor, or legislator, who refuses to cooperate in this good cause should be buried beneath a mountain of Christian ballots when the next election day rolls around. A bill such as is here called for has already been introduced into the Legislature of Tennessee.

EDUCATION DAY.

Dr. W. B. Murrah, president of Millsaps College, as well as the card sent out by the Board of Education, calls our attention to Education Day as fixed by our Conference. Two dangers beset us. One is, that other claims press us for the earliest possible action, and are likely to push this one out of date. The other is, that when this day is put off, it may be left out as incidental and of little importance. Let us be firm against these dangers. Let us yield the day recommended only so far as compelled, and then let us faithfully and wisely fix a day when we will urge the great cause of education on the intelligence and conscience of our people.

A collection on that day is not enjoined, though in place if the occasion calls for it. Of this each preacher will judge. The chief matter is to get the great subject itself of education thoroughly recognized in the thoughts and purposes of our people. We must justify the church in regarding education as one of her essential agencies in giving the gospel to the world.

In presenting the subject we may discuss it from different or various points of view, more or less fully. We may ask, Why should, or must, the church engage in the work of scholastic education? Ought the church to aim at more than educating her ministry, and why? What is the true object of real education? Why must we have endowed schools? Why should our people at large give of their means to support our established schools? What are the advantages of educating our sons and daughters in our home schools? How shall we best support and develop the schools we have?

These propositions are more or less concentric or intersecting; but, with others germane, they cover the field to be traversed on Education Day.

NEW BOOKS.

OPPOSITION TO VACCINATION. By Isaac L. Peebles, of the Mississippi Conference. Nashville, Tenn.: Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South. Barbee & Smith, Agents. 1896.

The above named work is a neatly-bound pamphlet of twenty-three pages. Those who are acquainted with the author know that he has given much attention to the science of medicine, for which he seems to have a natural fondness. Had he not been a preacher, he would surely have been a doctor. In pursuing his scientific investigations, he has reached the conclusion that vaccination as a means of preventing the spread of small-pox is a humbug. To establish this proposition is the object of this treatise. He claims that it neither prevents small-pox nor makes it lighter, and that it often does great damage, and sometimes destroys life. He seems to be well posted in the literature of the subject, and presents his views plausibly. Let those who are interested in this question send ten cents and get a copy of the work.

CONSECRATION AND SANCTIFICATION VS. THE SECOND BLESSING. A sermon by Rev. W. M. Young, of the North Mississippi Conference. M. E. Church, South. Printed for the author. Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South: Barbee & Smith, Agents, Nashville, Tenn. 1897.

By courtesy of our friend, the author, a copy of the above-named work lies upon our table. It is a well-gotten-up pamphlet of sixteen pages, the object of which is to refute "the second-blessing theory." The text is taken from Romans xii, 1: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." "Adamic sin," "depravity," and "the carnal mind" are all separately considered, and the conclusion is reached that the second-blessing theory of sanctification is not in accordance with the teachings of the Scriptures.

Notice.

Our new Webster Science Hall will be formally dedicated on Friday morning, April 2. Bishop Galloway will conduct the ceremonies. An address will be delivered on the occasion by Dr. Edward Mayes, dean of our Law Department, and a dedicatory ode will be read by the Rev. H. M. DuBose, D. D., pastor of our First Church.

All friends of the college are cordially invited to be present.

W. B. MURRAH, President.

The President's Social Life.

Ex-President Harrison, whose articles in The Ladies' Home Journal are creating such widespread interest, will write about "The Social Life of the President," in the April issue of that magazine. The ex-President will tell of the dinners, receptions, etc., that are given by the Chief Executive, and detail the great social demands made upon him. He also gives a peep into the White House dining-room and silver closet, and notes the beauty of the service used for State dinners, which was bought at second hand. It is said that he also pays heed to the oft-repeated question, "How much of his salary can a President lay aside?"

Rev. T. R. Pierce, editor of the Texas Advocate, has been appointed presiding elder of the Dallas district, North Texas Conference, in place of Rev. R. M. Powers, who on account of sickness has been compelled to suspend work for the remainder of the year.—Nashville Advocate.

A gracious revival is in progress at Central Church, Meridian. The preaching has been done by the pastor, Dr. H. W. Featherstun, and the presiding elder, Dr. C. G. Andrews. Up to the latter part of last week there had been thirty-five accessions. The church has been greatly blessed. Scores of church members have been lifted to a higher plane of spiritual life.

A German boy was reading a blood-and-thunder novel. Right in the midst of it he said to himself, "Now, this will never do. I get too much excited over it. I can't study so well after it. So here goes!" and he flung the book out into the river. He was Fichte, the great German philosopher.—Our Dumb Animals.

Mrs. Mary C. Bradford, of Denver, Col., and Miss Ella Harrison, of Carthage, Mo., are making a tour of the South in the interest of woman suffrage. They spent several days of last week in this city, where they each delivered two addresses in the Unitarian Church. Mrs. Bradford is an attractive and forceful speaker. Miss Harrison is only a beginner on the rostrum, but gives evidence of talent. They were the recipients of much social attention during their stay in the city.

A correspondent in the Texas Christian Advocate says that out of the 165 conversions and sanctifications resulting from the meeting held by H. C. Morrison in Dublin, Texas—for which he was expelled from the church—"only one joined any church, and that the Campbellite, and since he has gone back to the beggarly elements of the world." This is truly hard on Bro. Morrison, as Methodists never did give the Campbellites credit of having any religion.—Pacific Advocate.

Professor Sayce, the great scholar and explorer in Bible lands, prophesies that in "ten years hence the school of Wellhausen will be no more." If this prediction is verified, it will prove a terrible blow to our higher critics. It suggests the need for modesty on the part of those who prate so much about their scholarship, and indicates the advisability of holding their judgment in suspense and of awaiting the developments of the next decade. Christians can also afford to possess their souls in patience; and push on the work of their Lord without fear of the overthrow of the divinely inspired Scriptures.—Presbyterian.

Miss Belle Kearney spent last Monday in the city as the guest of her distinguished friend and co-laborer, Miss Clara G. Baer, of Sophie Newcomb College. She seems to have entirely recovered from her recent illness. She is as bright and vivacious as ever, and as enthusiastic in the noble cause to which she has consecrated her life. She will attend the W. C. T. U. Convention at New Iberia, after which she will spend a few days with Mrs. J. N. Pharr, of Berwick, La., and then go to Texas, where she has a number of lecture engagements. She also has engagements in New Mexico, Arizona and California sufficient to keep her busy until December. She will also visit Alaska. She receives invitations to lecture from all sections of the United States, many of which she is compelled to decline. These invitations come not only from the W. C. T. U., but from various other organizations—Chautauquas, Christian Endeavor Conventions, and the like. No Southern woman has ever made such fame on the rostrum. Having known her since her early childhood, and having been the pastor of her noble parents and enjoyed their friendship for many years, it is but natural that we should rejoice in the success which she has achieved. We congratulate our readers upon the fact that we have her promise to write occasionally for the ADVOCATE during her peregrinations in the West. Her charming letters from the old world have not been forgotten.

The Advocate for $1.

From now until the first of June we will receive new cash subscriptions at the rate of $1 for nine months. Moreover, we will give those who subscribe under this offer the benefit of our premium Bible offer. Take notice that this offer is made only to new subscribers. We will make a liberal offer to our present subscribers after awhile. Meantime, let all who are in arrears pay up, so no one who is in arrears can get the benefit of any of our special offers. Let all our preachers make this offer known to our people at once. We will send a sample Bible for use in canvassing to those who desire it. We will also send sample copies of the ADVOCATE on request.

To Preachers.

To the preacher who sends the largest number of new cash subscribers between now and the first of July we will present either an Arlington B Sewing Machine or a gold-filled watch guaranteed to be a perfect time keeper and to look as well as a gold watch for twenty years, whichever one may be preferred. To the preacher sending the next largest number, and also to the one sending the third largest number we will present a set of Clarke's Commentaries, latest edition, with modern additions.

Should the successful contestant prefer it, we will pay him cash instead of the premium.

Under this offer no commissions will be allowed until the premium has been awarded. Those who wish to compete for these premiums should notify us at once.

Attention.

We will send the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE and Harper's Monthly Magazine for $5. As the regular price of the magazine is $4, it will be seen that we make a very liberal offer. In order to get the benefit of this offer, subscribers must pay a full year in advance.

Orphans' Day in Aberdeen.

While waiting here in the hotel at Rodford for the train going to Bluefield, I have concluded to write a few words about Orphans' Day as observed in Aberdeen. Bro. Clifford, field agent for the Orphans' Home, was with us on this occasion, and right well did he do his work. He preached at 11 A. M., on "Am I my brother's keeper?" His sermon was practical and to "the purpose." Earnestly did he plead for the orphans of Mississippi. At the end of his sermon he took up a collection. Over two hundred dollars in money, furniture, etc., was subscribed. Aberdeenians are always ready to respond when they see the sense and necessity of a thing.

In the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, Bro. Clifford lectured to the Epworth League. Much good will be reaped from this sowing.

At night he lectured to a large audience on "Methodism: Its Past, Present and Future." This lecture was not only entertaining, but highly instructive as well.

Altogether Orphans' Day in Aberdeen was a good day for the church and community. It would be well if Bro. Clifford could visit every town in Mississippi. I hope the brethren will call upon him; he will do their churches good.

Notice.

To Whom It May Concern, and Especially to the Brethren of the Mississippi Conference:

As many of you doubtless know, I am at Millsaps College trying to fit myself for the Master's service. In order that I may be able to continue my much-needed studies another session, I must have work to do during the Summer months—June, July, August, September. I am willing to teach, to preach, or to do anything that tends toward the uplifting of humanity. Brethren, I must have work. Who will help me to get it? By way of recommendation, I refer, by permission, to Dr. W. B. Murrah.

Lightning Butter Maker.

Just think of churning butter in two minutes. It seems hardly possible, but it can be done with the newly invented machine now being manufactured by W. H. Baird & Co., of Pittsburg, Pa. Those who have spent an hour on a warm day doing the churning can readily appreciate how delightful this new machine must be. It is easy to operate, and every butter-maker that sees it orders one at once. It is the easiest thing on earth to sell, and requires no experience either. All those who have ordered one so far are so well pleased with it that they never tire singing its praises. Anyone can make from $5 to $10 a day selling this machine in their township. Those who have a little time to themselves, and wish to make money easy, can obtain full particulars regarding this wonderful invention by writing to W. H. Baird & Co., Dep't A 5, Sta. A, Pittsburg, Pa.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

BY REV. ROBERT H. WYNN.

Prayer Meeting Topic for March.

MISSIONS IN THE PROPHETS.

MARCH 28—PRAYER FOR MISSIONARIES. (Isaiah lx", 6, 7.)

The figure of the watchman upon the city wall, representing the prophet, or preacher, or missionary, has become very familiar. The watchmen were stationed upon the walls of the city, where they had an extended vision in every direction, and their business was to make announcement of public tidings, whether good or bad. So the preacher of the cross is a watchman who must "cry aloud and spare not," and who must not "hold his peace day nor night." (See Isaiah xxi, 11, 12; lii, 7, 8; Ezekiel iii, 17-19; xxxiii, 7-9.)

The prophet calls upon those who "make mention of the Lord," or those who are "the Lord's remembrancers," to pray continually and importunately for the final establishment of the city of Zion in the earth. This involves special prayer for those to whom are committed the sacred interests of Zion. We are to plead the covenant promises of God that his kingdom shall be universal, and stand upon these promises by living faith. (See Hymn 678.)

State Conference.

The Louisiana State Epworth League Conference will be held at Shreveport, beginning Thursday, April 22, at eight P. M., and ending Sunday night, April 25.

The committee are arranging an excellent program which will soon be published, and are also arranging for reduced rates on the railroads. Every League in the State is earnestly requested to elect at least two delegates who will be certain to attend—more, if it is practicable to do so—and to send their names at once to Rev. W. H. Laprade, Shreveport, La., that provision may be made for their entertainment. Reduced rates will be published as soon as possible. Let every League do its duty in this matter, and there will no doubt be the most profitable and enjoyable Conference yet held in the State.

Nothing succeeds in removing coughs and colds like Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

BRETHREN: Please send your Orphans' Day collection at once. If you have not observed the day, please do so soon as possible. The building will be completed sooner than we expected. You can do the Home more good by helping now than any other time. We will not go in debt.

The Lafferty Complete Flour.

If scientific scrutiny buttressed by use settles a matter, then the Rev. Dr. Lafferty, of Virginia, has worked out a method of milling ranked in medical circles as "of priceless value to our common humanity." No food product ever had endorsement from so high authority. Read it.

The process, of course, is private property, but without an iota of extortion, for the inventor offers to share and share alike with the public within reasonable limits. You can get the flour on the same conditions he secures a supply for his own table—prime cost of material and milling, allowing nothing for capital, use of machinery, royalty. This raw cost is $2 a barrel less than the retail price. He says: "Let us co-operate. I put my money and brain in this mill. You take a minor interest—a bond of $30, secured by first mortgage, paying 7 per cent., a good investment in itself. You get a liberal interest and $12 profit besides each year, for each bondholder is entitled to six barrels annually at $2 under the trade price.

This concession has the elements of generosity. Intelligent people will promptly recognize the value of a bond guaranteeing such a privilege at price on an article of accredited merit. His address is Richmond, Va. He also desires a trustworthy person to act for him in different sections.

A New Cure for Cancer.

Dr. Mason, the eminent cancer specialist of Virginia, has a cure that surpasses all former methods. No further need for knives to cut or plasters to burn. Practically painless. No secret discovery and no quackery. A few of the severest cases must go to the Sanitarium for personal attention, but most cases can be treated at home at small cost and cured in a short time. For information and opinion of case, if described, free of charge, write

Stooped Shoulders and Hollow Chests.

The habit of stooping can be prevented in the young and cured in those of mature years by simply wearing a Knickerbocker Brace. This brace is as simply made, as easy to wear, and as handy to put on and off as ordinary suspenders, yet it is thoroughly effectual in compelling an erect posture, promoting deep respiration—preventing and curing round shoulders. It is made in all sizes, for men, women and children, and may be had of druggists, men's furnishers, surgical appliance and general dealers at the very moderate price of $1.00 (silk, $1.50). The Knickerbocker Brace Co., Easton, Pa., will send descriptive circulars free, or a sample brace upon receipt of price and chest measurement.

SNOW-WHITE, NUTTY FLAVOR, 300 Per Cent. RICHER.

WHO INVENTED IT?

JOHN J. LAFFERTY (twenty years State Curator Medical College of Virginia) Editor Christian Advocate, Richmond, Va., Publisher Baltimore Christian Advocate, Editor Daily Advocate, General Conference, 1894.

DICTUM OF DOCTORS. "WITHOUT A PEER." "A BOON TO DYSPEPTIC HUMANITY"

Rev. DR. POTTS, Editor Michigan Christian Advocate, urges: "I wish all Methodist preachers could know about it. Have been using it for a year. Consider it indispensable. Its riches in brain food would contribute to the wealth of the pulpit. Push it to the front."

WHERE MADE.

Rev. DR. STARR, Richmond, Va.: "I found out that more sermons and better ones could be made out of one barrel than any other brand."

Rev. HOWARD HENDERSON, LL. D., Cincinnati (late Sup't Public Instruction, Kentucky): "The flour is all that is claimed for it."

Physicians and citizens of eminence in Virginia certify (their names and statements are appended,) to the phenomenal nutritive value of this product.

The inventor sets apart three hundred barrels each month to supply persons wishing to make an intelligent test of its merits, which can be had on the same conditions he gets it for his own table.

The Flour retains the snowy color and the rising quality of the "Patent Roller," 300 per cent. (official analysis) richer in brain food, leaving on the palate the nutty flavor of the wheat kernel. Mention can be made only of a few representative men who give it good will:

HUNTER McGUIRE, M. D., LL. D., President University College of Medicine, Richmond, Va.; President American Medical Association (1892); President American Surgical Association (1887); Vice-President International Medical Congress (1881); President Southern Surgical and Gynecological Association (1889); Associate Fellow College Physicians, Philadelphia, etc., etc.: "I am very much interested in your scheme to retain in the Flour all the albuminoids and salts of the wheat—its brain food. Its value would be hard to overestimate."

JOHN HERBERT CLAIBORNE, M. D., Ex-President Virginia Medical Society: "That is what we have been trying to get hold of for years. It is mentioned that you have a modest mill at Crozet. You can go ahead and build another and another. Your orders will multiply. You have struck a bonanza."

H. GREY LATHAM, M. D., Lynchburg, Va.: "I regard it without a peer—a bread scientifically and absolutely perfect."

WILBUR PADDOCK KLAPP, M. D., Philadelphia: "It fills a long-felt want. I shall immediately recommend it."

O. B SHUMWAY, Sup't Hahnemann Hospital, Philadelphia: "We have used your Lafferty Complete Flour, and find it to be all you claim."

JOHN W. DILLARD, M. D., Lynchburg, Va.: "I tested the excellent nutritive quality. I have recommended it in my practice and heartily endorse it as a valuable repairer of decay from insufficient nutrition."

WM. B. GRAY, M. D., (Microscopist and Practitioner) Richmond, Va.: "You have taken a wise step in manufacturing a 'Complete Flour,' which will abate and prevent diseases of the osseous and cerebro-spinal symptoms, defective and decayed teeth, together with the legions of neurasthenias, so common in our day, the offspring of starving nerves. I thank you. The world will thank you."

H. G. LEIGH, M. D., Virginia: "It will prove a boon to dyspeptic humanity."

Rev. Dr. LEWIS, Mississippi: "It is a luxury to a weak, dyspeptic stomach."

POLK MILLER, Virginia (Druggist): "For dyspeptics it cannot be surpassed."

Rev. Dr. ARMSTRONG, Veteran Secretary Baltimore Conference (Southern Methodist): "The Flour gladdened the delicate stomache of this household."

Rev. A. WELLER, Virginia: "My wife has always suffered with stomach trouble every summer until this year. We attribute her escape to the 'Complete Flour.'"

Prof. PEEO, Emory College, Georgia: "I have gotten up such an appetite. It is expensive to feed me. The Rev. Dr. CANDLER, our President, as a man of brain and work, is delighted with the bread."

Rev. J. L. SPENCER, M. D., Virginia Methodist Conference: "My sister-in-law was the victim of chronic indigestion, deranging her entire system. I consulted the physicians of note in this country, yet death menaced her. I began the use of the 'Complete Flour.' It assimilated. Her life was saved. The use of it also has benefited me."

THE CLERGY OF RICHMOND: Bishop Whittle, Drs. Hoge, Kerr, and Pitt. COLLEGE PEOPLE: General Custis Lee, President Washington and Lee University; Stone, Astronomy, University of Virginia; Bonnell, Chemistry, Emory College; BUSINESS MEN; Presidents Planters', Merchants' Bank, Cashier the National Bank, Treasurer the Virginia Trust Company, Superintendent R., F. & P. Railway; Ginter, the multi-millionaire Tobacconist; Carr, of Carolina, President Durham Tobacco Company.

Col. THOMAS F. GODDE, Philanthropist and Capitalist, owner of the Buffalo Lithia Springs, sums up the opinion of Virginians—home folks: "I have tried the 'Complete Flour,' and am entirely satisfied that it is all you claim for it. You have, in my opinion, a fortune when its virtues are made known."

Col. A. W. ARCHER, of the Historic Exchange Hotel, to a reporter of the Richmond State: "It has relieved me of a dyspepsia of thirteen years' torment."

Hon. MEADE F. WHITE, Staunton, Va.: "My dyspeptic friends concur with me that by using your flour they may bid defiance to dyspeptic stomachs."

Mrs. LIZZIE LEE BAYLEY, Treasurer Virginia Woman's Missionary Society: "It has been a boon to my delicate neice. She digests better than for years."

HOW DOES IT COOK?

"As professional bakers we have tried your 'Complete Flour' effectually, and are delighted with results. It possesses all the qualities requisite for perfect bread—sweetness of flavor, light and close texture, richness of color, and more life than any flour we ever worked. It bakes and browns beautifully."

Very respectfully,

Lynchburg, Va., October 28, 1896. ARMENTROUT & KENNEDY.

THE PRICE. As only ONE-TENTH of each wheat grain is used, and the amount of nourishment for the higher organisms is 300 PER CENT. greater, the price ought to rise far above the Patent Roller product. Yet it will be supplied to the registered patrons near the price of the BEST BRAND known to the Flour market.

What care I—as the days go by—
Whether gloomy or bright the sky?
What care I what the weather may be?
Cold or warm—'tis the same to me.
For my dear sweet ones—they are always true—
And my dear home-weather (the glad days thro')
Is "beautiful Summer" from morn till night,
And my feet walk ever in love's true light.

And why? Well, here is my baby sweet,
Following me round on his restless feet,
Smiling on me thro' his soft blue eyes,
And gladdening and brightening my indoor skies.

And baby's father, with fond, true heart
(To baby and me, home's better part)—
His face is sunshine, and we rejoice
In the music heard in his loving voice.

So why should we heed—as the days go by—
The gloom or the light of the weather and sky
Of the outside world, when we're busy all day
Manufacturing sunshine which fades not away?
With smiles, with kisses, with peace, and with joy—
Father and mother, and baby-boy—
We are living each day in the sunshine we make—
And God keep us and guide us for love's dear sake!

—Harper's Bazar.

"The Consecrated Cobbler."

He was a poor little boy who lived in England more than a hundred years ago. His father was a weaver when little William was born, but when the boy was eight years old, the father became the teacher of the village school, and the son, of course, went to his school.

Billy he was probably called among the boys, for a boy is seldom hailed as William by his schoolmates. Billy was not large for his age, but he was bright and good tempered and determined, and was a great favorite. His teachers must have liked him, too, for he was unusually fond of study; and he never gave up any lesson until it was learned, and was never daunted in any good plan that he had undertaken.

When he was still young, his mother used often to hear him putting himself to sleep by saying over to himself his arithmetic lesson for the next day, and he learned the vocabulary in his Latin grammar just for his own amusement. The few books that he had he knew by heart, and he took great delight in volumes of poetry, travels, natural science and natural history. The walls of his room were covered with specimens of bugs, beetles and butterflies, and he had a fine collection of birds' eggs. He was also much interested in plants and flowers, and he learned a great deal about these things from an uncle of his who was a gardener.

When he was fourteen years old he was sent off to the town of Hackleton to make a beginning at earning his own living by acquiring the art of making shoes. Here he became so fine a workman that one of the shoes fashioned by him was kept as a model of what a shoe should be. But he did not forget his beloved books. He had a wonderful gift for languages, and with a little help he taught himself Greek, and in seven years he could read the Bible in five or six tongues.

He became very earnest in character, too, through the influence of a young fellow who worked beside him.

He was married before he was twenty, and at his master's death the whole burden of the business fell upon him. He put up a new sign bearing the name of William Carey, informing the public that he would mend boots and shoes. But he was very poor, and he had to add to his income by teaching an evening school; but still he found time to attend some meetings that soon led him to begin to preach himself, and before long he was set apart as a preacher in the Baptist Church, and was settled at a place called Moulton. His salary was small, so he had to go on with his old work, and once a fortnight he would trudge away to Northampton to take the boots that he had made, and would return with a load of leather on his shoulders. "My business is to serve the Lord, but I cobble shoes to pay expenses," he said.

All the while, however, he was reading and studying as eagerly as ever. He had a copy of Cook's Voyages open on his bench beside him, and pored over its pages while his hands were busy at his daily toil. He drew a map of the world and hung it upon the wall of his workroom; and it was not strange that he became deeply interested in the people and places on other parts of the globe, and that a strong missionary spirit grew within him. He wrote a book on the subject of missions, but he did not meet with much sympathy in the missionary line. One minister told him that when the Lord wished to have the heathen converted he could manage the matter without any assistance from William Carey; but William Carey felt that he had his part to do, and he kept on talking and praying for the cause of missions. At last he preached a remarkable sermon that stirred up a few people to start a missionary society. William Carey offered himself as its first missionary, and in 1793 he was sent to India.

The work in India was not easy, but William Carey was not discouraged by the difficulties. He supported himself by taking charge of an indigo factory, and at the same time he preached, studied the language and made translations, besides visiting the villages about him. After five years of labor he went to Serampore, where, on account of his knowledge of the languages of India, he was made a professor in the college that was there. Here he translated the Bible into twenty-four different dialects, and so made it possible to be read by one-third of the people on the earth.

He also studied the botany and natural history of the country, and wrote articles about them; and he cultivated a garden in which he raised many rare and beautiful plants. Besides preaching and teaching, he put an end to the burning of widows with the bodies of their husbands, set up a hospital for lepers, started schools and newspapers, and established a Christian college.

In 1834 he died; but the work of the little "consecrated cobbler," as he was called by some people in England, will never come to an end in India.—Martha Burr Banks, in Advocate and Guardian.

Bubbles or Medals.

"Best sarsaparillas." When you think of it how contradictory that term is. For there can be only one best in anything—one best sarsaparilla, as there is one highest mountain, one longest river, one deepest ocean. And that best sarsaparilla is———?.... There's the rub! You can measure mountain height and ocean depth, but how test sarsaparilla? You could if you were chemists. But then do you need to test it? The World's Fair Committee tested it,—and thoroughly. They went behind the label on the bottle. What did this sarsaparilla test result in? Every make of sarsaparilla shut out of the Fair, except Ayer's. So it was that Ayer's was the only sarsaparilla admitted to the World's Fair. The committee found it the best. They had no room for anything that was not the best. And as the best, Ayer's Sarsaparilla received the medal and awards due its merits. Remember the word "best" is a bubble any breath can blow; but there are pins to prick such bubbles. Those others are blowing more "best sarsaparilla" bubbles since the World's Fair pricked the old ones. True, but Ayer's Sarsaparilla has the medal. The pin that scratches the medal proves it gold. The pin that pricks the bubble proves the wind. We point to medals, not bubbles, when we say: The sarsaparilla is Ayer's.

Religion in Business.

Religion is the art of being and doing good, and the school for the learning of the art is not in the closet, but in the world; not in some hallowed spot, where religion is taught, and where proficients, when duly trained, are sent forth into the world, but the world itself, the coarse, profane, common world, with its cares and temptations, its rivalries and competitions, its hourly, ever-recurring trials of temper and character. This is an art which all can practice, and for which every profession and calling, the busiest and most absorbing, afford scope and discipline. When a child is learning to write, it matters not of what words the copy set to him is composed, the thing desired being that whatever he learns to write well. When a man is learning to be a Christian, it matters not what his particular work in life may be; the work he does is but the copy line set to him; the main thing to be considered is that he learns to live well. Form is nothing, the execution everything. It is true, indeed, that prayer, reading, meditation, the solemnities and the services of the church, are necessary to religion, and that these can be practiced only apart from secular life. But it is to be remembered that all such exercises do not terminate in themselves. They are but steps in the ladder to heaven, good only as they help us to climb. They are but means to an end, and that end can perhaps be best obtained by him whose life is a busy one, whose vocations bear him daily into contact with his fellows, into the intercourse of society, into the heart of the world.

No one can be a thorough proficient at navigation who has never been at sea; no man has become a soldier by studying books or military tactics in his closet; he must in actual service acquire those habits of coolness, courage, discipline, address, rapid combination, without which the most learned in the theory of strategy or engineering will be a school-boy soldier after all. In the same way, the man of solitary study may become a most learned theologian, or may train himself into the timid, effeminate piety of what is technically called the "religious life." But never in the highest, holiest sense can he become a religious man until he has acquired those habits of daily self-denial, of kindness, gentleness, humility, sympathy, active beneficence, which are to be acquired only in daily contact with mankind. Religion is not a perpetual moping over good books, is not even prayer, praise, holy ordinances; these are necessary to religion; no man can be religious without them. But I repeat, religion is mainly and chiefly the glorifying of God amid the duties and trials of the world, the guiding oar amid the adverse winds and currents of temptations, by the starlight of duty, and the compass of divine truth, the bearing us wisely, manfully, courageously for the honor of Christ, our leader, in the great conflict of life.—The Rev. John C. Ird.

Hidden Merit.

Natural modesty keeps many a valuable man in the shade. How can he correctly estimate his own abilities or be sure that the world stands in need of them? He sees so many instances of people who overrate themselves and rush into conspicuousness only to find they had nothing worth offering after all, that he may well cherish for himself that reticence which hesitates to push his own powers or performances into notice. Nevertheless, the incalculable loss to the world which thus ensues may be in great measure prevented by men and women of a different type. For, if there are some who are distinguished by their powers of performance, there are others who are equally distinguished by their powers of bringing merit into notice. There is a large class who are rich in resources, in executive talent, in the organizing power, in that knowledge of the world which enables them to detect its needs and to supply them, to discover special gifts and abilities, and to direct them into needed channels. This power is as much an endowment as any other, and brings with it its own duties and responsibilities.—Selected.

A certain amount of opposition is a great help to a man. Kites rise against and not with the wind. Even a head wind is better than none. No man ever worked his passage in a dead calm. Let no man wax pale, therefore, because of opposition. Opposition is what he wants, and must have, to be good for anything. Hardship is the native soil of manhood and self-reliance. He that can not abide the storm without flinching or quailing strips himself in the sunshine, and lies down by the wayside to be overlooked and forgotten; but he who braces himself to the struggle when the winds blow gives up when the former has done, and falls asleep in the stillness that follows.

You should expect temptations; you should not be afraid of them, for although the devil can tempt you against your will, he can not conquer you unless you consent to be conquered.—Peschoud.

Let no young man say, "Alas, it is all too late! I have sold myself already, and for naught. I can not dislodge from my enslaved soul the demons to whom, as to strong men armed, I have betrayed the fortress. Almost as far as I can look back—even in days when the clearness of memory is lost in the midst of 'the dark backward and abysm of years'—I have been unfaithful. The crown has fallen from my head, for I have sinned." Let every youth indignantly expel these soft pleadings of despondency! They are snares of the devil! Fight on, even if at sad moments it seems to you as though your fights were all defeats.—Selected.

They say I am growing old, because my hair is silvered, and there are crows' feet on my forehead, and my step is not so firm and elastic as before. But they are mistaken. That is not me. The knees are weak, but the knees are not me. The brow is wrinkled, but the brow is not me. This is the house I live in. But I am young—younger than I ever was before.—Guthrie.

Hygiene.

Nervous Exhaustion.

Man's nervous organism is twofold. One part moves the machinery of involuntary life—respiration, nutrition, circulation, etc.—and the other controls the voluntary muscular movements of work and play. The first manufactures and expends nervous energy, the second spends, but never makes. It draws its supplies from the involuntary system. The last has to manufacture for both. When the voluntary system becomes enfeebled, rest and nutrition will soon repair the damage; but when the involuntary system flags the foundation is giving way. All the greater, therefore, is the necessity to make the drains upon it from the voluntary system as light as possible, otherwise bankruptcy of both is not far off. Pain in the back head, with exhaustion after but little effort, mental or physical, is the signal of imminent peril. He who disregards it offers his life to the first serious attack of disease, if not to the first considerable over exertion. The import is that such men must rest morning, noon and night, not necessarily in absolute inaction because the chafing against that might be worse than light, pleasurable enjoyment. Take kali phos (6) and calcipbos (1) as recuperating materials; magne phos (8) for the spasmodic jerkings and the largest amount of good, digestible food that the digestive organs can master, and added to all the rest, the inhalation daily of pure artificially prepared oxygen, or such constant outdoor life without much muscular exercise as will thoroughly oxidize all the food that is consumed. Then wait patiently.—Exchange.

Exercise for Nervousness.

Exercise is a sovereign remedy for most cases of nervousness. But the victim of nervousness should know how to exercise, and there is as much science required to enable one to apply this remedy as any other. Exercising the limbs will relieve nervousness caused by too much blood in the head. Exercising the chest and abdomen by deeper abdominal breathing will relieve nervousness arising from dyspepsia. The people are only fairly beginning to understand the disease-curing and health-promoting value of physiological exercise. Everyone who has the opportunity to take lessons and practical drills in the science of physical culture, from a person qualified to teach this great science, should do so.—Health and Home.

The Queen Butter Maker.

THE SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

As will be seen by the illustration above, which is the latest model, the Queen Butter Maker is unlike any device that has ever been invented for churning. At the bottom of the large tub shown is a screw propeller modeled exactly like the large screw propeller used on the large ocean steamer. The gearing of the machine allows 1,000 revolutions of this propeller in a minute, and agitates the cream a thousand times more strongly than the ordinary old fashioned dasher churn. This immense agitation causes friction of the particles against each other and against the sides of the tub, causing the tissues to break, and the butter is almost instantly made and gathered. From a scientific point of view, the butter must come gathered in a few minutes—it does come, forming solid lumps at the surface.

The Queen Butter Maker Co., 17½ E. Third St., Cincinnati, O., own the patents, and it is evident that the "Queen" is a thoroughly practical machine for making butter in a few minutes; that more butter is made from this process than by any other. Experts in butter making in all parts of the country do not hesitate to say that they have tested the "Queen" over and over, and pronounce it a wonder; that it is thoroughly practical, does just what is claimed for it, and that the grain of the butter is finer, brought by this process, as that produced by any ordinary churn, and it is very easily cleaned.

Wherever the machine has been seen it has created the greatest excitement, and it is easily estimated that over one million of these Butter Makers will be required to fill the demand. It is low priced, simple in construction, and can not get out of order.

How many millions of tired, worn-out women, whose backs and limbs have ached after the usual hour's or two hour's churning, would not sacrifice a new bonnet, or a new dress, or some other luxury, to secure a Queen Butter Maker that would make butter in a few minutes before breakfast?

Experienced canvassers state, "they never seen anything sell like the 'Queen.' They make easily from $45 to $100 a week, without a bit of trouble." A widow lady, Mrs. Byers, in Mississippi, with three children to care for, who had never sold anything before, stated "she made $7.50 a day in addition to taking care of her family."

The "Queen" is a wonder, not only in butter making, but in money making as well. It will certainly make butter in from a minute and a quarter to five minutes, according to the quality of the cream.

Merrill Cline, of New York, finds "that hard times, or no hard times, when he makes butter in two minutes before a farmer's wife, the handle of the old dasher lifts heavier than ever, and they hustle around and get the price of the 'Queen' somehow." Mr. Burt, of Ohio, said: "He always draws a crowd when he makes butter with the 'Queen,' and people never tire of seeing the wonder over and over."

Agents find the Queen Butter Maker the easiest article to sell imaginable. No talk is required nor hard peddling. The agent who makes butter in two minutes before eighteen people is sure to sell six or eight at once. Agents easily make from $12 to $20 per day, and some as high as $200 per month, when the weather is good. Write to the firm named above and secure an agency for the wonderful Queen Butter Maker, and see if you can not sell from five to ten machines a day, and thus realize a profit of $12 to $30 a day. The Queen Butter Maker Company is composed of well known business men of Cincinnati, whose standing is high, and our readers will be fortunate to obtain a position with them. Address as above.

Constipation

is a disease which afflicts over 75 per cent. of the American people. It is a dangerous disease because it not only poisons the blood but causes headache, oppression, and dulls the intellect. Then follow chronic headache, loss of appetite, slow digestion, nervousness, bad breath, dingy complexion and low spirits. It will eventually bring on liver and kidney disease in some incurable form. But sufferers from this dreaded malady are speedily

Cured by

Warner's SAFE Cure and Warner's SAFE Pills. Leading physicians the world over, have acknowledged this fact, and thousands of people throughout the land have testified to it.

Warner's

SAFE Cure puts a stop to backache, headaches, constipation, loss of appetite, dyspepsia, tired feelings and sleeplessness. It builds up the exhausted system. It is a sure cure for liver and kidney complaint in any form, and the only remedy that has ever been able to cure Bright's disease.

If you are feeling the need of such a remedy, you cannot do better than try this king of remedies, the great

STAY THOU NEAR BY.

BY CLIFFORD M. JONES.

When through dark waters led
By Thine owa hand;
When sorrows bow my head,
'Midst woes I stand,
Stay Thou near by.

When joys from heaven sweet
My pathway flad;
When smiles and sunshine meet
With showers kind,
Stay Thou near by.

When friends are colder grown
And loved ones chide;
When from heart wounds I moan,
From Satan hide,
Stay Thou near by.

When all give lavish love,
And tenderer grow;
When blue skies smile above,
Bright streams below,
Stay Thou near by.

When Jesus says: "Be still
And sweetly rest;
Still thou dost know My will,
'Tis surely best,"
Stay Thou near by.

When at the dawn of day
Thy work comes in;
When I can hear Thee say,
"That soul go win,"
Stay Thou near by.

When angels flutter 'round,
And heaven seems near;
When joy and peace abound,
And all that's dear,
Stay Thou near by.

Then whether gifts divine
Or bitter pain,
Sweet peace is ever mine,
Through loss or gain,
With Thee near by.

OBITUARIES.

SEVIER.—There died Friday evening, the 5th of February, 1897, at the residence of Mrs. Frances S. Clerk, his mother-in-law, an old and respected resident of Fordoche, La., JOHN C. SEVIER. The deceased was born in Overton county, Tenn., on the thirtieth of December, 1827. He was a nephew of John Sevier, ex governor of Tennessee. Twenty-five years later he left the place of his birth and came to the parish of Tonnas, La., where he remained for a number of years before coming to Fordoche, La. He was married to Miss Rosa Clark at the residence of her parents on the twenty-fourth of April, 1858, who survives him after a happy union of nearly thirty years. He came to Baton Rouge, where he kept a small grocery store for several years, and removed to Fordoche, La., two years ago.

He was in excellent health when he fell ill very suddenly. He reached the advanced age of sixty-nine years. He leaves a wife and one child. Kind, gentle and pleasant in his conversation with those with whom he came in contact, his life will ever be a memory among his associations and friends. He was a good Christian. He was interred in the Cotton Wood Cemetery at six o'clock Saturday evening. This writer extends his heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family.

JAMES GOODWIN.

BURDINE.—MARTHA BURDINE (nee McKelvy), widow of the late Rev. John F. Burdine, was born March 28, 1825; fell on sleep in Jackson, Tenn., in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Peyton, while on a visit, Dec. 6, 1896. In her fifteenth year she gave her heart to God and her hand to the Methodist Church. With Sister Burdine membership in the church meant a great deal. The vows she took were sacred to her. She loved the house of God. She had at all times a warm place in her heart for the pastor sent to the charge; he was her pastor. She was a woman of much prayer. Into the secret chamber of the Most High she was admitted by her Lord. It was a benediction to the preacher for her to be in the church on time of service. When her daughter and family with whom she had lived for a few years, moved to Amory from near Smithville, Sister Burdine was glad indeed to be close to the church, that she might frequent the house of the Lord. But God saw it otherwise; so in his goodness he took her to the church on high to be with him in glory. God doeth all things well. To him be the glory now and forever. God bless sons, daughters, and the grandchildren, and receive them to glory!

Amory, Miss. D. L. COODELL.

OSBURN.—Little OSBURN, son of T. D. and Ina Osburn, was born April 6, 1895, and died Jan. 11, 1897.

Precious bud, with the freshness of the morning dew still sparkling upon his brow, plucked from earth and transplanted in heavenly soil, having lived just long enough to endear himself most fondly about his parents, hearts. And while it seems very hard to have the little ones leave us, yet, when we think they are only precious jewels to attract the loved ones in a special manner to the heavenly clime, then all should be specially comforted, and thus be drawn more closely to God. So, dear parents, while little Osburn's voice is forever hushed upon earth, think of him as he breaks forth in heavenly music, free from the earthy in every respect. See his arms outstretched, inviting papa and mama home. Remember, Jesus is more able to care for him than any on earth. As you can not call him back to you, God grant you may go to him. The Lord abundantly bless you and save you, is my prayer. J. T. ABNEY.

NAFF.—After a long and severe illness Mrs. ANNIE R. NAFF, wife of Jas. F. Naff, of the Second Ward, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Hansey, of Oak Ridge, La., died at her home in the Second Ward on Monday, Feb. 15, 1897.

Only nineteen years had passed o'er this young life when the angel of death came to claim her as his own. Her life was that of a Christian. She became a member of the Methodist Church at the age of thirteen. Two years previous to her death she was led to the altar, a happy bride. Her sweet, amiable disposition made her a favorite wherever she chanced to be, and no one had more true friends than she. A day or two before her death she repeated the Lord's Prayer and the Creed. Two wee children she leaves, who are not old enough to realize the great loss of their sweet young mother. May "He who doeth all things well" comfort the bereaved ones! ONE WHO LOVED HER.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Sold by Druggists; price, 75 cents per bottle.

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Bible

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

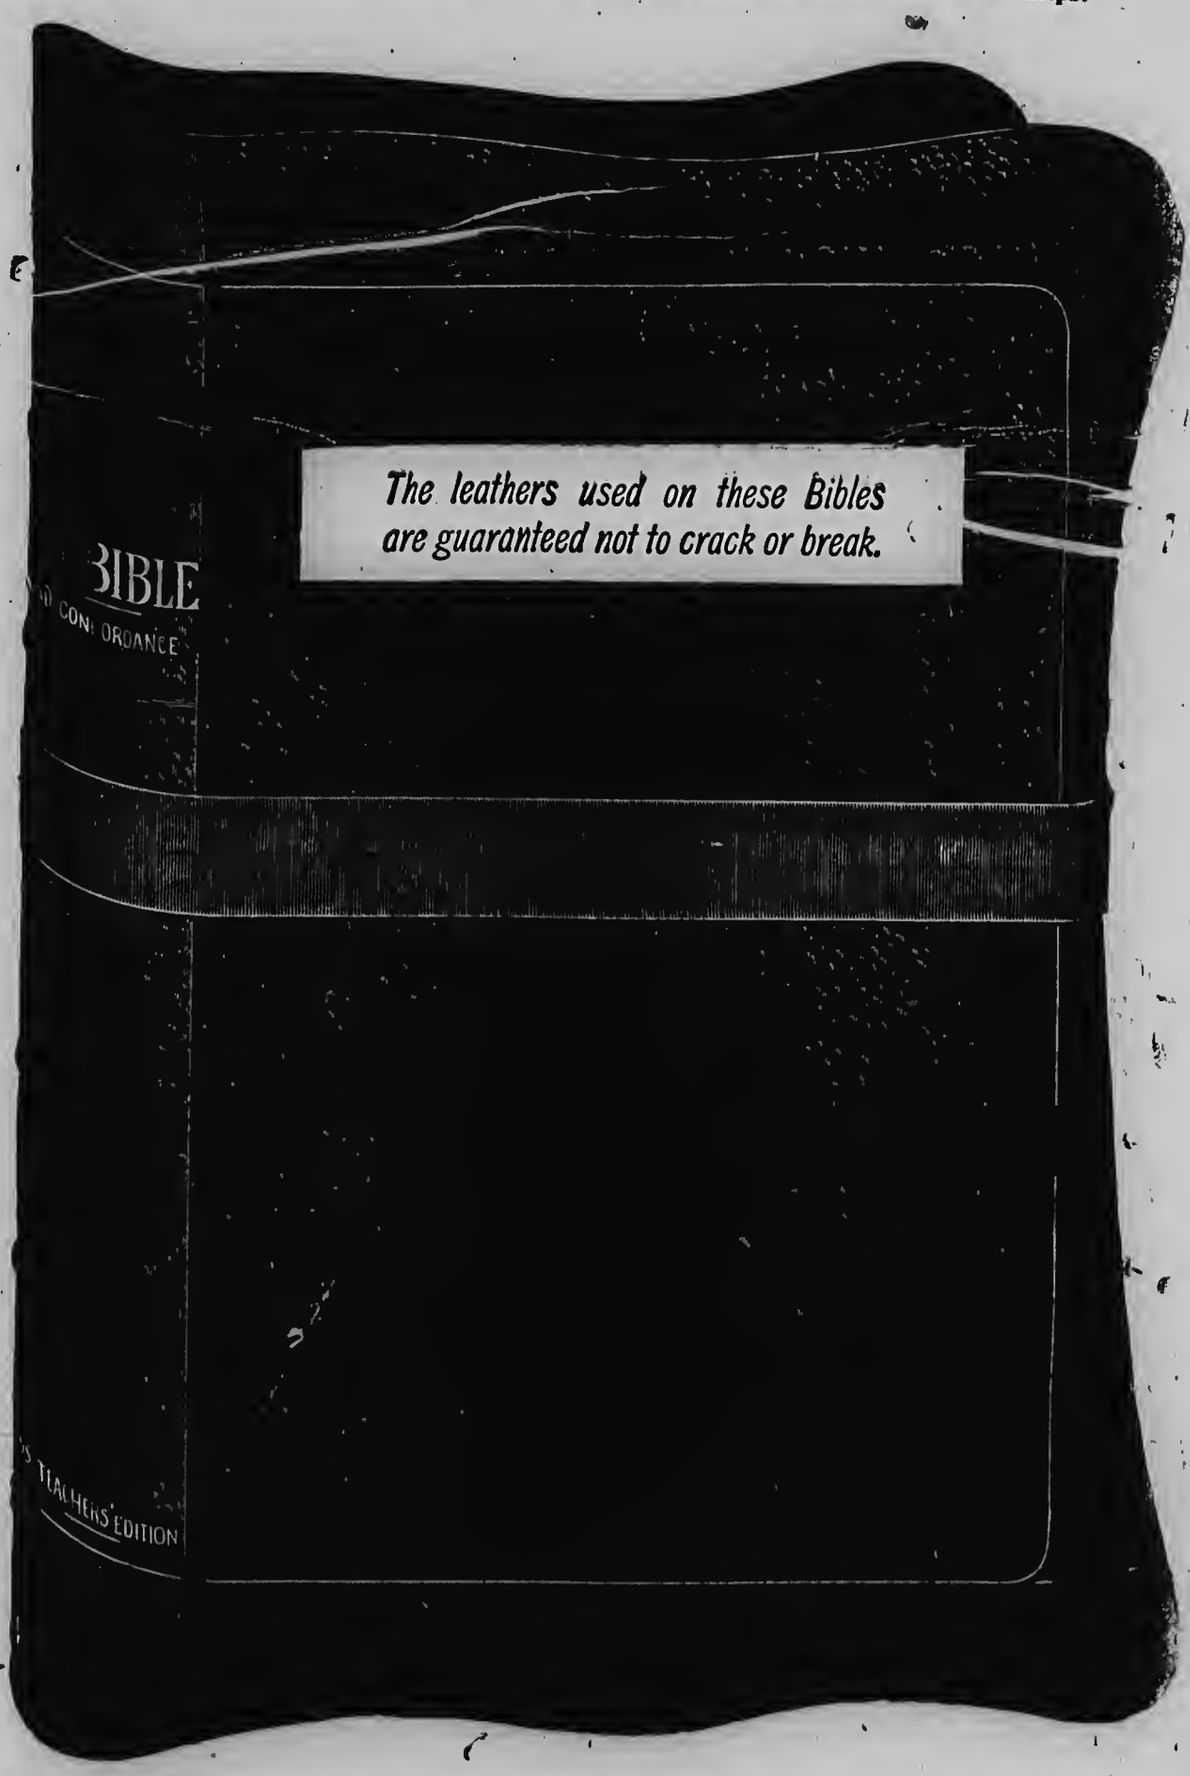
Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"



The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2 35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3 15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1 15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to April, '98. (A little later it will be May, 98.)
